It is equally certain that the certificate signed by Driggers was never recorded as required by the act. There was an evident conflict or rivalry, judging from the returns alone, between the judge and the clerk; and inasmuch as the clerk is the recording officer and in charge of the "book to be kept by him for that purpose," it cannot be supposed that he would record the certificate of a canvass he had not participated in and which was in direct conflict with the one he be supposed that he would record the certificate of a canvass he had not participated in and which was in direct conflict with the one he had aided in making. "Such certificate shall be recorded," and "one of such duplicates shall be immediately transmitted by mail to the secretary of state," &c. It is the same certificate which the clerk records which the law recognizes as the valid one. So that the Driggers certificate lacks all of the essentials of legality. It has the brand of illegitimacy stamped upon its face.

This was brought home to the knowledge of the State canvassers by the indorsement upon the clerk's certificate which was transmitted to them. This indorsement, which was suppressed by the secreted to them. This indorsement, which was suppressed by the secretary of state in the copy which he certified as correct and true, was as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA,

Baker County:

I certify that the within is a true copy of the canvass made by board of county canvassers of an election held on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, at which presidential electors, governor, and lieutenant governor of Florida, members of Congress, assemblymen, and constables were voted for, and which is now on file and of record in my office.

M. J. COXE.

M. J. COXE, Clerk of Circuit Court, Baker County.

STATE OF FLORIDA,

Baker County:

I certify that I have no knowledge of any canvass of the votes cast at the election held on the 7th day of November, 1876, for presidential electors, State and county officers, and member of Congress in the county of Baker, made by the county judge and sheriff of said county of Baker, or either of them, or by any board of canvassers of which either county judge and sheriff, or either, were members. That no record or evidence of any such canvass appears in my office, and that if any such canvass was made, I was not notified thereof nor invited to take any part therein.

M. J. COXE,

Clerk of Circuit Court, Baker County.

On the other hand, the Coxe certificate is signed by a majority of the legal board without the unexplained intrusion of any one else. In addition to this, it is accompanied with a statement of the absence and refusal of the judge to co-operate with him, and the subsequent refusal of the sheriff, thus rendering it impossible to secure a full board.

I insist, Mr. Speaker, that, if we limit our investigation to the returns and certificates on file in the office of the secretary of state, we are bound to regard the Coxe return as the legal one. If I desired to reach a conclusion favorable to the democratic candidates without regard to justice or law, I would concur in the proposition that a certificate signed only by the clerk and justice of the peace is irregular and void, and would demand that this principle be applied to the certificate from Duval County. The returns from that county show that the Tilden electors received 1,437 votes and the Hayes electors received 2,367 votes. That certificate is signed by the clerk and insections. certificate from Duval County. The returns from that county show that the Tilden electors received 1,437 votes and the Hayes electors received 2,367 votes. That certificate is signed by the clerk and justice only, and if for that reason it is to be set aside the democratic majority in the State will be greatly increased. In point of fact, the Duval County certificate is entitled to less credit than the Coxe certificate from Baker County, because the latter one shows the simple refusal of the judge to act, while the one from Duval County shows that the judge was present during the canvass and refused to sign the certificate, thus branding it with far more suspicion than his mere absence from the canvass. It certainly cannot be contended that the presence of the judge protesting against the action of the clerk and justice can give more efficacy to the proceedings than his refusal to meet with them. In both cases the majority of the board made the canvass and signed the certificates without the co-operation of the judge, and both are valid or neither is. I believe that both should be accepted, and I am not tempted to advocate a different doctrine by the prospect of a party advantage to be gained thereby. In popular elections the will of the people is supreme, and is not to be thwarted by the mere irregularities of those through whom that will is expressed. The voice of an entire county is not to be stifled by any technical informalities of its board of canvassers. In each of these cases the voice gave no uncertain sound, and must be heeded.

It thus appears, Mr. Speaker, from the full and authentic returns from all of the counties of Florida, that the Tilden electors were duly chosen. "The face of the returns" declares it. And if we go behind the certificates to ascertain their verity, if we go down and read the ballots as they passed from the voters' hands the same result is declared with the additional emphasis of an increased majority. I do not propose now to discuss the abstract question of the power of Congre by another tribunal, and one from which there is no appear except to the supreme majesty of the American people, in whose judgment there is no unrighteousness. But by direction of this House a committee was sent to Florida "to investigate the recent election therein" and "to report all the facts essential to an honest return of the votes received by the electors of said State for President and Vice-President of the United States, and to a fair understanding thereof by the people." It is to that august tribunal I address myself. Whatever may be the legal determination of the question, "the people" want to know the facts. They may have to submit to the inauguration and to the authority of a Chief Magistrate not chosen by them, but they have a right to know the means by which they were defrauded of their votes, that they may forever execrate the base assassins of popular will.

Then let us push aside the paper returns which interpose between us and the full truth; let us go down among the orange-groves, forests, and everglades of Florida and learn how the election was held, for whom the votes were cast, and how faithless and dishonest offi-or whom the votes were cast, and now fatthess and dishonest officers made false counts and forged returns in their desperate attempts to "hold the State for Hayes."

We have considered Baker County upon the comparative authenticity, or rather legality, of the two returns, uninfluenced by any extraneous evidence. But look for one moment at the circumstances under which each was made and the basis upon which each one rests, and the sturdiest parties of any potential death as to which is the type. and the sturdiest partisan can no longer doubt as to which is the true and which the false.

There are but four election precincts in the county. The number of votes polled at each precinct, as proved by the several returns and by the ballots still in the boxes, was as follows:

Precincts.	Tilden electors.	Hayes electors.
Darbyville	65 84 57 32	130

Majority for Tilden electors, 95.

This result was declared and known on the night of the election. No one questioned its correctness; no one attempted to impeach or impair it until party necessity demanded desperate resorts. No one even now pretends to deny the correctness of those returns, nor to deny the honesty and legality of the votes except as to the insignificant and immaterial number of 8 votes. Let this fact be kept steadily in mind while we see the inception of the plot by which this small county in a remote State was, by a false return, to be made to override and annul the will of a large majority of the American people. The result of the presidential election was known on November 8; and then telegrams flew thick and fast between the conspirators who sought to overturn that result. Up to that time the sparsely settled county of Baker had but one justice of the peace; and although he had been appointed by Governor Stearns he was not deemed weak or wicked enough to serve the purpose then in hand. Accordingly William Green was commissioned on November 10. He qualified on Saturday, the 11th, and was prepared on Monday, the 13th, to justify the selection made by his patron. On Monday night he, with the county judge and sheriff, stole into the office of the clerk, rifled the public records, made a sham canvass of the precinct returns, and deliberately certified a shameful lie to the State authorities. No language can paint the transaction blacker or make the participants more infamous and odious than the sworn explanation of one of the trio. Andrew A. Allen, the sheriff of the county, being under examination, said: This result was declared and known on the night of the election. under examination, said:

Question. What did you do then?
Answer. We just made the return, throwing away two precincts in the county.
Q. What two precincts in the county did you throw away?
A. One was Darbyville precinct and the other was Johnsville precinct.
Q. Which did you throw away first?
A. The Johnsville precinct.
Q. And then you threw away the Darbyville precinct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you have any witnesses at all before you?
A. None at all.
Q. Did you have anything before you except the returns?
A. No, sir.
Q. Why did you throw away Johnsville precinct?
A. No, sir.
Q. Why did you throw away Johnsville precinct?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you have any evidence before you to that effect?
A. No, sir; there was only his statement.
Q. You did not have a particle of evidence before you?
A. No, sir.
Q. You believed that one party had been intimidated and prevented from voting?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And therefore you threw out the Johnsville precinct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was there any other reason for throwing it out?
A. No, sir.
Q. None whatever?
A. No, sir.
Q. None whatever?
A. No, sir.
Q. Non next threw out the Darbyville precinct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You next threw out the Darbyville precinct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. For what reason did you do so?
A. We believed that there were some illegal votes cast there.
Q. Did you have any evidence before you at all?
A. No, sir.
Q. Not a particle?
A. No, sir.
Q. Not a particle?
A. No, sir.
Q. But you had an impression that some illegal votes were cast there?
A. No, sir.
Q. Rot you had an impression that some illegal votes were cast there?
A. Rot you have any evidence before you at all?
A. No, sir.
Q. Rot you have any evidence before you at all?
A. No, sir.
Q. Not a particle?
A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any evidence before you at all?
A. No, sir.
Q. Not a particle?
A. No, sir.
Q. But you had an impression that some illegal votes were cast there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You had no proof of it all?
A. No, sir.
Q. How many illegal votes did you have an impression were cast there?
A. About 7, I think, as well as I can recollect.
Q. Therefore you threw out the precinct without any evidence at all?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then you made up your returns?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who wrote those returns?
A. I did.
Q. You wrote them yourself?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the judge signed them?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Green signed them also, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Green signed them also, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then you made up your also, did he?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Mr. Green signed them also, did he?

A. Yes, sir. Q. Then you made return to the secretary of state that you had canvassed the ote?

ofe?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And also sent one to the governor that you had canvassed the vote?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long were you in the clerk's office there?
A. I do not remember the time, not a great while, though; it was quite a short me.

Q. Did anybody come in while you were there?
A. No, sir.
Q. Where did you find Mr. Green?
A. He was with us; we all went into the office together.

By Mr. WOODBURN:

Q. How long before you and the judge and the justice of the peace made the canass did you ascertain that a count had been made on the same day by other pares—by the clerk and somebody else?

A. I knew the fact; I was present; I knew they were canvassing the votes.

Q. How did you know that one man was intimidated at Johnsville precinct?

A. Well, we just heard it rumored around at the time.

By Mr. HOPKINS:

Q. Did you say that you had not the registration-list before you on the night you hade the canvass !
A. We had not.
Q. Name the seven men whom you thought were illegal voters.

A. I cannot.
Q. Did the judge give their names or did he just tell you that there were seven there that he thought had no right to vote?

A. He then told me that there were seven there that he thought had no right to vote.

O. Do you know when Green was appointed justice of the peace? A. I do not. He was appointed about the time of the election, but what date I do not know.

Q. Do not you know that he was not appointed until after the election?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with procuring his appointment?

A. Not a thing; he was appointed before I knew it.

Q. The first time you ever knew him to be a justice of the peace was when you got him on the 13th to make the canvas?

A. Yes, sir; that is the first knowledge I had of his being a justice of the peace.

If anything can add to the infamy of this transaction it must be the fact that the county canvassers, under the law, have no right or authority to throw out a single vote upon any pretext whatever. Their entire duty and power are "to canvass the votes given for the several officers and persons as shown by the returns on file in the office of such clerk or judge, and shall then make and sign duplicate certificates containing in words and figures, written at full length, the whole number of votes given for each office," &c.

And it is upon the certificate of this incomplete, illegal, surreptitious canvass that the republican party would rest their title to the grandest office in the world! No wonder that the judge, conscience-smitten as he was, fled from the service of a subpena. The chief manipulator of the fraud could not face the evidence of his guilt.

The repeated refusal of the judge and of the sheriff to meet with the clerk and canvass the returns; their subsequent secret canvass under the cover of night in connection with a justice newly made for the purpose, and their proceedings when thus met, mark the willful If anything can add to the infamy of this transaction it must be the purpose, and their proceedings when thus met, mark the willful purpose of the conspiracy.

Remember further, that on November 10, before this plot was hatched, this same judge sent a written notice to the clerk and Justice hatched, this same judge sent a written notice to the clerk and Justice Dorman to meet him on the 13th at twelve o'clock to make the canvass. The clerk and Justice Dorman promptly appeared at the appointed hour. The judge, after refusing to act with the very men whom he had invited to meet him, and after persuading the sheriff also to refuse, quietly permitted a majority of the board which he had formed to proceed and complete their work, and then with a full knowledge that they had made the canvass, and after expressing satisfaction with the canvass as thus made, stealthily sought to destroy it. And this is a fair type of Florida officials under the Stearns administration, and an illustration of the processes by which they sought to "hold the State for Hayes." to "hold the State for Hayes."

It was conclusively proved and cannot-be controverted, indeed no attempt has been made to refute it, that the precinct returnsthat is, the nearest approach we have yet made to the direct expression of the voters—show a decisive majority for the Tilden electors. Of course it follows that the county returns, which are but an aggregation of the precinct returns, show the same result.

But, with the masses of the people, the great controlling questions are yet behind. Are the precinct returns an honest record of legal votes actually cast? If not, what is the true result after the ballots

Conceding that party spirit is equally strong in the followers of both political banners; conceding that intemperate zeal might urge some of either party to the commission of illegal acts to accomplish the purpose so much at heart, it cannot be denied that in Florida the opportunities were all with the republicans. Under the laws of that State there is no such thing as local self-government. The judges and clerks of courts, the justices of the peace and county commissioners, the sheriffs and superintendents of schools, the tax assessors and collectors throughout the entire State are appointed by the governor. The inspectors of elections are selected by the county commissioners, and they also have the power to designate the number and location of voting-places. They may make few or many, at convenient or inconvenient places, as may suit their party interests. The voters are not required to deposit their ballots at or near their homes within the precinct where they are known, but may vote at any polling-place in the county where they live. All of this machinery is admirably calculated, whether designed or not, to perpetuate the success of the party holding this immense patronage and power. Nothing less than a general uprising of the people in peace-ful revolution could have driven the republican party from its strong-hold in that State. But that revolution came. Armed with no ful revolution could have driven the republican party from its stronghold in that State. But that revolution came. Armed with no weapon but the ballot, inspired by the suffering and oppression and plunder of many years, the people of Florida wrought out their own deliverance, and that against fearful and desperate odds.

I have shown, Mr. Speaker, that the opportunities for committing frauds were with the republican office-holders. I have also shown how diligently those in Baker County improved their time. If we look farther we shall see the manifestation and the fruits of equal zeal unrestrained by any code civil or divine.

restrained by any code, civil or divine.

restrained by any code, civil or divine.

The commissioners of Alachua County appointed a white republi can, (Green R. Moore,) and a colored republican, (R. H. Black,) as two of the inspectors of the election to be held at Archer Precinct No. 2. Both of these men had intelligence and education. To give a color of fairness, and yet not to thwart the plan, they appointed a colored democrat, (Floyd Dukes,) who could neither read nor write. The board was completed by sending down from the county seat, a distance of thirteen miles, a remarkably bright, shrewd, and unscrupulous colored republican, (Thomas H. Vance,) to act as clerk. The frauds of prior years had sharpened the wits and awakened the enfrauds of prior years had sharpened the wits and awakened the energy of the citizens of Archer. They selected their leading merchant, (Samuel T. Fleming,) a gentleman of extensive acquaintance, to stand at the window and watch the voting. From the opening until the the closing of the polls, he remained there, taking down the name of every voter as he handed in his ballot. Another well known citizen, Samuel C. Tucker, copied the rusult from the tally-sheet as soon as it was completed and the vote announced. This was produced and verified, and showed that the Tilden electors received 136 votes, and the Hayes electors 180 votes. Green R. Moore and Floyd Dukes, two of the inspectors, testified that the result was so declared on the night of the election. George R. Blitch, an inspector at Poll No. 1, held in the same building, and with only a partial partition between, testified that the same result was announced to him by one of the inspectors at No. 2, as soon as the canvass was completed. This total vote differed but very little from the number of names on Fleming's list, and the discrepancy may be accounted for by the fact that a few persons voted very little from the number of names on Fleming's list, and the discrepancy may be accounted for by the fact that a few persons voted from the inside of the house whose names he did not get. Still, suspicious of trickery upon the part of those in charge of the ballot-box, it was urged that both boxes, Nos. 1 and 2, be placed together, and both sets of officers stand guard through the night. This was refused, and Black and Vance took box No. 2 to Black's house, where they and two republican deputy marshals kept it until the next day. The box was of soft pine, and when produced before the committee of the House could be opened with two fingers and without a key. Despite the facility with which it could be tampered with; despite the suspicious custody in which it was kept, the prior safeguards were such as to justify the expectations of the honest voters that there would be an honest return. No wonder they were amazed and indignant when the returns were opened by the county canvassers, and the certificate declared that the Tilden electors had received 136 votes, but that the vote for the Hayes electors had grown in six short days from 180 to 399! This was the response from Archer to the imperative command to "Hold the State for Hayes,"

Theirs not to reason why, Theirs but to do or die; and with as much recklessness of personal safety as the heroes of Balaklava they obeyed orders, although "jails in front of them opened and yawned."

Here were the returns, in due form, bearing the names of all the election officers, and who so unreasonable as to deny their conclusiveness, who so bold as to question their genuineness? It is true the names of the inspectors are all in the same handwriting! It is true freen R. Moore has sworn that his signature is a forgery! It is true the certificates are not upon the official blanks furnished by the county clerk! It is true that they contain an utterly false statement of the vote! But what of all that? Who dare disturb the sanctity of the returns?

Nothing could more strongly illustrate the absurdity of the posi-tion that returns of an election must be taken as conclusive of anything than the facts disclosed relative to the one under discussion. Here was a forged return, certifying to a fraudulent vote, made by perjured officers, and yet we are asked to give it the full force and effect of a pure and infallible judgment!

But the perpetrators of this fraud did attempt to rebut the proofs

But the perpetrators of this fraud did attempt to rebut the proofs of their guilt, and how? By producing the tally-sheet? No, they had lost that. By producing the poll-list? No, that had been stolen. By an exhibition of the ballots? Alas, the box contains but 215 republican tickets, instead of 399 as returned, and of these just 180, the true vote announced on election night, had the marks of having been strung; and the testimony of all the officers showed that all the tickets were strung as soon as the canvass was completed.

Of two or three hundred persons standing around the building when the result of the election was announced, just one was found willing to swear that Black "announced 535; that was all that I could hear. I could not hear any more than that." and this man David Brown, a deputy marshal, was flatly contradicted by the man who stood bedeputy marshal, was fiatly contradicted by the man who stood beside him and by an indorsement upon his own commission used at the election, showing the total vote to have been 316. One other witness who was inside the building at box No. 1, testified, "I heard the announcement made, 500;" and he was not sustained by any evidence on either side. And this contradictory and contradicted evidence, and this alone, is relied on to support Black and Vance in their wicked attempt to defraud the people of that precinct.

They who will deliberately commit a crime like that will not falter at anything necessary to make the fraud effective. We have seen how the original purpose to cheat the voters hatched an ugly broad of kindred anything necessary to make the traudemetive. We have seen how the original purpose to cheat the voters hatched an ugly brood of kindred villainies. The fraud was followed by forgery and was both preceded and succeeded by perjury; perjury in violating the oath taken at the opening of the polls and perjury, thrice repeated, before the board of State canvassers and before the committees of Congress. Bribery was also invoked. This base and mean temptation to a poor Bribery was also invoked. This base and mean temptation to a poor man's needs, this cowardly and infamous appeal to suffering and want, was repelled by Floyd Dukes, indigent and unlettered though he was. His white associate on the election board, unwilling to swear falsely, but eager for gain, signed a paper contradicting his evidence.

The testimony discloses all of the circumstances under which he was coerced, tempted, and betrayed into signing a paper which he knew, and at the time pronounced, to be false. His testimony on that point is as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you remember what the contents of the paper was that you signed at Captain Dennis's ?

Answer. I do not. It was read over to me, but I don't remember now what it Was.

Q. What was your objection to swearing to it?

A. Because I didn't think it was right; I didn't think it was truth, and I didn't want to swear to it. I told them at the same time that I didn't feel like perjuring myself.

By Mr. DUNNELL:

Q. But you signed that same paper and took $100 for it, did you? A. Yes, sir; I signed the paper.

By Mr. HOPKINS:

Q. After you told them that, did they still want you to sign it? A. Yes, sir.

And yet this paper, covered all over with infamy, is boldly called an affidavit by those who well know its origin and history. The man who signed the jurat—and thus aided in imposing this sham affidavit upon the country—the man who embodies in himself the offices of deputy clerk, deputy register, assemblyman, and county judge, swears that Moore said, "I cannot take that affidavit;" and he replied, "Sir, I shall not ask you to take it." But after an hour's intercession and negotiation he said, "I can swear to it;" but, adds this model of a Florida judge, "He didn't stand up and hold up his hand." Indignation and disgust at the manipulations by which this signature was purchased give way to amazement that gentlemen upon this was purchased give way to amazement that gentlemen upon this floor should ask rational and honest men to give this paper credence as against this same man's unbought and solemn oath, corroborated,

as against this same man's unbought and solemn oath, corroborated, too, by abundant evidence.

This same Judge Cessna, who so prostituted his office as to certify a falsehood in the interest of his party, was the custodian of one of the duplicate returns from each of the precincts. The one produced by the clerk having been shown to be a forgery, it became of the utmost importance to see and compare the one which Judge Cessna had. That, if produced, would establish and confirm, or would bring confusion and destruction to the testimony of Green R. Moore. But it could not be found. The judge could not account for its mysterious disappearance. All of the others were in his safe; but the only one needed was not there. Day after day he searched, or pretended to search for it, until its absence grew more and more suspicious. At last, when about to hurry from the town, he left with the county clerk a paper which he represented as the one left with him by the election officers at Archer precinct No. 2. This document had every indication of having been freshly and hastily prepared. The mucilage between the sheets was scarcely dry; the name of one of the inspectors was misspelled; the slip containing the vote for presidential electors covered a portion of the names of the election board, showing conclusively that it had been attached after the return was made out; and the signatures of the inspectors were all in the same handout; and the signatures of the inspectors were all in the same handout; and the signatures of the inspectors were all in the same hand-writing. This also was repudiated as a forgery by Green R. Moore; and thus the last hope of imposing this complex fraud upon the people was crushed out under the very eyes of its perpetrators.

The testimony brought out a number of incidental facts showing the utter uncrupulousness and untruthfulness of those concerned in this most disgraceful and criminal transaction. I will weary the patience and moral sense of this House by a single additional reference. Vance, the clerk at the election, swore stoutly and roundly that he went down from Gainesborough to Archer on the night before the election purely and solely on private business without any that he went down from Gainesborough to Archer on the night before the election purely and solely on private business, without any intention or expectation of remaining, much less of taking part in the election; that he was persuaded to act and was sworn at Archer on the morning of the election. But the county clerk, a reputable member of the same political party, testified that Vance appeared before him on November 6, stated that he was going to Archer for the express purpose of acting as clerk, asked to be sworn as such, and then and there did take and subscribe to the oath, which oath the county clerk produced before the committee, leaving Vance in his pitiable and naked perjury to the scorn of all his neighbors and to the pangs which insvitably follow the failures of crime. Success in guilt may blunt the conscience, but disappointment always brings remorse.

The same character of fraud was practiced in Leon County, under the special direction and participation of Joseph Bowes, a superintendent of instruction—heaven save the mark! This Bowes was a favored office-holder under Stearns, and needed but a hint to do his share of the infamy necessary to "hold the State for Hayes." He selected his confrères, one of whom came from another county to serve, share of the infamy necessary to "hold the State for Hayes." He selected his confrères, one of whom came from another county to serve, and none of whom lived in the precinct where they acted. All were republicans of the Stearns type. Bowes, with a colored associate, camped on the ground the night before the election, armed with the ballot-box and republican tickets. In order to give the thing a good send off, seventy-two of these tickets were put in the box before the polls were opened and seventy-two names of persons in remote parts of the county, taken promiscuously from the registration-list, were appended to the poll-list to stand sponsor for these fatherless ballots. A republican member of the investigating committee, while in Florida, overwhelmed by the proof, was constrained to declare that "Bowes was a bungler in his fraud;" for it was shown that forty-eight of the seventy-two whose names were inserted on this poll-list had voted elsewhere, and twenty-four of them appeared in person before the committee and denounced the misuse of their names and swore that they had not been at that precinct on election day.

Of course this "virtuous Joseph," this instructor of youth, this intimate friend of the governor, this zealous partisan would not hesitate to follow his fraud with perjury. But it was a most singular and significant fact that not one of the other election officers corroborated or sustained him. To see how flipmently this fellow swears.

orated or sustained him. To see how flippantly this fellow swears, look at his testimony:

By the CHAIRMAN:

By the CHARMAN:

Question. And why didn't you wait a few moments until he arrived?

Answer. On the morning of the election?

Q. In the morning; yes, sir.

A. Because I wanted to open the polls at the time prescribed by law.

Q. You knew he was the only democrat on the board, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Why could you not have waited there for a few minutes, say four or five, to let him get there?

A. Because in all probability I was afraid if I did not open the polls at the time prescribed by law we would have had a pile of democratic affidavits saying the polls were not opened at the proper time.

Q. So you now say that the reason why you did not wait for him was to get rid of democratic affidavits?

A. Because the law required them to open at that time.

Q. Answer the question. I say the reason you now give is that you were afraid, at the time, there would be a pile of democratic affidavits.

A. I say it might have been.

Q. You say it might have been. I ask you, was that the reason that operated on your mind?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now you say it is a fact that you supposed there would be a pile of democratic affidavits put in if the poll was not opened at the right time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you know whether you did or not?

A. I don't know that I did.

Q. Don't you know whether you did or not?

A. No, I have no consciousness of saying anything of the kind.

By Mr. HOPKINS:

By Mr. HOPKINS:

O. Dou't you know whether you did or not?

A. No; I have no consciousness of saying anything of the kind.

By Mr. HOFKINS:

O. Where did you get supper on that evening?

A. We took some provisions with us.

O. Where did you eat your supper?

In the school-house.

O. Did you also eat your breakfast there?

A. colored man.

O. In what precinet did Lawrence Booth live?

And these are the instrumentalities and processes by which the attempt was made to "hold the State for Hayes," which attempt has proved successful by the solemn judgment of a tribunal sworn to "impartially examine and consider all questions submitted to it," but which shut its eyes and refused to "examine and consider" the most vital of all questions—whether the vote of an entire Commonwealth can be stolen, sold, and delivered by a handful of bold and desperate

A bolder and more sweeping scheme was concocted by which an entire county was to be disfranchised. The clerk of the circuit court entire county was to be disfranchised. The clerk of the circuit court of Manatee County resigned, locked up his records, and moved away about six weeks before the election. No successor was appointed, and for three months no marriage licences could issue, no deeds could be recorded, no legal processes could be issued, and all for the manifest purpose of depriving the people of that county of an opportunity to register, and to prevent the election officers from procuring copies of the regitration-list, and if possible to prevent the election from being

In view of the facts already stated, as gleaned from the testimony taken, it need surprise no one that many persons disfranchised for crime, many minors and non-residents were procured or permitted to vote the republican ticket, nor that the jail of Duval County was opened on election day and its prisoners marched to the polls to do duty in the same behalf. The great body of the republican party will condemn these wrongs earnestly and indignantly, and only those who would apologize for or seek to cover them deserve to share the ignominy. I do not deny that there are persons in the democratic party who with like opportunities and under the same temptations might have proved equally guilty. I but state the facts revealed by the testimony and call upon all honest men, of whatever name or creed, to denounce all of these acts of infamy; and I especially call upon pure and upright republicans to refuse to accept a victory won at such a fearful sacrifice and stained with so much crime. In view of the facts already stated, as gleaned from the testimony apon pure and upright republicans to refuse to accept a victory won at such a fearful sacrifice and stained with so much crime.

The board of State canvassers of Florida deserve tenfold more execration than the subordinate officials whom we have already considered, because of the greater shame which attaches to the violation of a higher trust. These men, finding that the frauds in the counties were not sufficient to "hold the State for Hayes," won for themselves everlasting infamy by their proceedings, which are now historic. In gross violation of the law, which they knew well, they refused to count the votes from Manatee County and from certain precincts in Monroe Hamilton and Jackson Counties. No frauds or intimida-Monroe, Hamilton, and Jackson Counties. No frauds or intimida-tion had been proved or alleged; not a single witness was found who denied the entire legality and regularity of the election at those places; no one denied or doubted the correctness of the returns; but who denied the entire legality and regularity of the election at those places; no one denied or doubted the correctness of the returns; but the State canvassers searched for and seized upon the veriest technicalities to throw out those precincts and trample upon the free will of their voters. When the supreme court checked them in their law-lessness and lashed them into some sense of duty, they counted those they had previously rejected; but in their mad zeal for party they then threw out others which they had previously pronounced to be true and valid. In this extremity they took up and adopted the false and illegal certificate from Baker County, which at first they had discarded as too bald a cheat, and they excluded Clay County because there was appended to the certificate the statement that at one precinct "there was no evidence of the inspectors of the election of said precinct being sworn, but the clerk was. The vote of said precinct was as follows, which we did not count in our returns: Presidential electors received as follows: Tilden electors, 29 votes; Hayes electors, 6 votes. When they felt free to run riot through the returns they chose to destroy, the State board made a show of justice by taking in this precinct which the county canvassers had omitted and including the entire county in their canvass. Afterward they made this appended statement as to one precinct the weak pretext for excluding the whole county. Could impudent assurance go further? Could downright, reckless, and indecent defiance of law and right more boldly display itself? Again the rod of judicial authority was laid upon their backs, and they were compelled to withdraw that pretended canvass for presidential electors.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss the unfair and unworthy intimations, the misstatements of fact, and the necessarily weak argument contained in the report of the minority of the committee. All of that will receive due consideration and deserved exposure at the hands of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. T

There are other points in the Florida election which I should like to discuss; but I have already occupied my full share of time. I can only call attention to the facts that the supreme court of the State, composed of republican judges, by a unanimous decision held that the canvass which gave the State to Hayes was wholly illegal and void; that a circuit court of the State decided that the Tilden electors were duly chosen; that the Hayes electors were mere pretend-ers and usurpers without the color of title or authority; that the State Legislature passed an act to procure a legal canvass of the votes and that canvass duly made and certified showed that the State had been carried by Tilden, and the result was declared and established by another act; that one of the gentlemen selected by the President to visit Florida in the interests of the republican party and witness the counting of the votes and examine into the truth and justice of the matter ing of the votes and examine into the truth and justice of the matter has had the moral heroism to pronounce against his party. In these days of subserviency to party, and in these times of high party passion, it was a grand and noble thing for General Barlow, in the midst of the angry clamor, to speak out, clear and bold and strong, the calm words of honesty and truth. How high he towers above the despicable clique who would have their candidate climb into the Chief Magistracy of this great nation by the loathsome ladder of fraud, bribery, forgery, and perjury! Not a man on the great tribunal but would resent with fiery scorn any suggestion that he had aided to manacle a State and put a nadlock on her mouth while one with her store in sign State and put a padlock on her mouth while one with her stolen insignia spoke a falsehood in her name. Yet their decision has that effect or none.

The message further informed the House that bills of the following titles were received by the President on the 30th day of January, 1877, and not having been returned by him to the House within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution had become laws without his signature:

An act (H. R. No. 3038) granting a pension to Almon F. Mills, late private Company K, Twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers;

Kingsley; and An act (H. R. No. 3575) granting a pension to Eliza A. Blaze, widow of Abner T. Blaze, late a private in Company C, Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the select ommittee upon the late election in the State of Florida.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I had supposed that the debate upon the Florida question had been ended. I did not anticipate that the House would seek to take action again after the decision of the electoral would seek to take action again after the decision of the electoral tribunal. Just here, sir, I enter my protest against the designation which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Hopkins] gives to the tribunal to which this House and the Senate have submitted very serious and vital questions. He pronounces it a "Delphic oracle." That commission is composed of fifteen eminently honorable men. If gentlemen on the other side are not present, as the priests, to dictate the responses of the oracle, they must not find fault with them. The honorable gentleman himself gave his vote for its creation. I did did not give my vote for its creation; and yet I propose to stand by it, whether it shall give us Tilden or Hayes for President. The two Houses of Congress committed themselves to an honest acquiescence in the decision of that tribunal. We have here brought up again to-day the question of Florida. I replied yesterday in the ten minutes that were allowed me as to the manner in which the investigation was made in Florida by the committee sent into that State. I characterized the action of the committee as partial and one-sided. I pronounced it opposed to a full investigation; and I asked gentlemen to read the fourth page of the report, wherein is recorded the vote of that committee denying to the minority a sight of any of the papers upon which the canvassing board acted. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, as if to make a reply to my charge, had read, after the ten minutes had passed, a statement of witnesses. I never pronounced the word "witness" in all I had to say; and his statement of witnesses had nothing to do with what I had said as to the investigation in that State. I made this one, single, grand charge: That the majority refused the evidence upon which the canvassing board acted. I made it then, I make it now. The record shows that my charge was justly made and is fully sustained by the evidence.

Very soon in his remaks to-day, the gentleman strikes Baker County. I shall leave to the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. WOODBURN,] who was with me upon the minority, a fuller answer than I will attempt tomake. Wherefore did not the canvassing board count Baker County in the second canvass? Did the supreme court find fault with that canvassing board? Not a particle of fault does it find. The recanvass was in precise harmony with the decision of the supreme court. The supreme court of Florida answers well the purpose of the gentleman at one time, but answers it not at all at another time. Baker and Clay Counties were left out in the second canvass by a strict compliance with the findings of the supreme court and with the decision of that court. I do not propose, however, to dwell upon this matter, but, as I have said, leave it to my friend, the gentleman from Navada.

At once we are informed about a precinct called Archer No. 2, in Alachua County. Now, sir, I desire to speak of this precinct, Archer No. 2; and when I am compelled to dwell upon Archer No. 2, I am reminded that there is besides Archer No. 2, Waldo precinct, that this committee avoided and passed by. I am reminded also of Archer No. 1, which this committee dared not approach and did not approach; I am reminded of another precinct in this county which this investigating committee did not attempt to investigate, where democratic frauds bristled, notoriously known, read of all men in that region of country, but they were avoided and not investigated. From the time that we struck Florida, till we left it, not for once were the minority asked whither shall we go; how long shall we tarry; where shall we investigate; what shall we do? Notonce were we asked where can we discover democratic frauds? We went and came as the majority voted, and not as the minority desired.

Now as to this Archer No. 2 in Alachua County. What of it? There was a ballot there. There were four officers. The vote was taken. A less republican majority was cast there than had been in previous years. Three hundred and ninety-nine for Hayes and 180 for Tilden. But nothing was said then and there as to the votes. Now as to this Archer No. 2 in Alachua County. What of it? There was a ballot there. There were four officers. The vote was taken. A less republican majority was cast there than had been in previous years. Three hundred and ninety-nine for Hayes and 180 for Tilden. But nothing was said then and there as to the votes. The ballot-box was brought to Gainesville and in due time declared to have been broken open. The returns from that precinct were signed by the four officers; and Mr. Green R. Moore, one of the officers, admitted on the stand that he authorized Vance or Black, two of the other officers, to sign his name to one of the returns. The returns were made out, brought to the county seat, and when counted, the vote was declared. There were votes taken from the ballot-box. But what was the evidence of a just vote? The return from the precinct as made out and returned.

The officers of the election, Vance and Black, and unimpeached, come upon the stand and swear that the returned vote was the true vote. Four or five voters standing outside when the vote was declared swear that that was the declared vote. Now what is in the history of this case? This man Green R. Moore, in whose honor and integrity my friend, the chairman of the committee, would not trust the value of a coat—he knows that man and read him as he is able to read men by his large acquaintance with them—this man Green R. Moore says he authorized the signing of his name to one of the returns. By and by one Judge Dawkins inveigled him and the other officer, Floyd Dukes, into his office and got them to swear they had not signed the returns, and further that a different vote was the true one. In a few days these same men took back all that. They swear and testify that they signed the Dawkins affidavit under fear of bodily injury; and then again to complete their infamy, with the third oath upon them, they swear that the vote was not as declared and returned.

Now all this time, Mr. Speaker, the evidence upon which the canvassing board acted in this precinct, was locked up in the office of the secretary of state. We desired to know just what the evidence was upon which the canvassing board proceeded in Archer No. 2. We were not allowed to know what that testimony was. We had not seen the affidavits, but the majority of the committee saw as many of them as they desired, because they had a secretary surcharged with affidavits and telegrams and evidence to which we were not allowed to have access.

The double swearing of these two officers of the election, had put the democracy in a dilemma in their attempt to break down this precinct. They must find somebody who was willing to swear that he stood at the ballot-box and took the name of every man that voted there that day. They found one Samuel Y. Fleming to do that work. He swears that he was present all day and took the name of every man who voted. That was supposed to meet the emergency. The minority were unable to disprove the statement and the pretension of Fleming; but the Senate committee had it in its power to secure witnesses, and it summoned all the men to be then found who voted at that precinct. This evidence shows that there are 104 republicans who voted at that precinct whose names were not on this Fleming list; and not a dozen men could be found in that entire precinct who would come forward and swear that they voted the democratic ticket. As verily as I believe in my existence, I believe all that there was of fraud in Archer No. 2 was democratic fraud in its inception, democratic fraud in every respect from beginning to end. That is the finding of the Senate committee, and no reply can be made to it. I here say, Mr. Speaker, that this attempt to prove republican frauds in Alachua County, in Archer precinct No. 2, is the most unsuccessful attempt that was ever known. Here are the regular returns. Here are the two inspectors, Vance and Black, who signed them, and the other two officers, Moore and Dukes, admitting that they authorized the signing of their names. Still the democratic party of that county proposed to break it down. They go to work to break down this return by swearing two of the men who signed this return, while to this day their testimony is on record that they authorized either Black or Vance to sign it.

I have alluded to other precincts in that county, and I ask the attention of the House to the statement which I find in the report of the Senate committee in relation to this testimony of Mr. Fleming:

An analysis of the names of persons who swore before us that they voted the republican ticket at this poll shows that 217 of those voters only are on Fleming's lists; that 104 republican voters escaped his notice entirely, and the names of those that he further confesses to have voted there cover the republican voters that the committee did not have time to call before them, readily making up their vote to the full claim of 399, and leaving no room for a claim of 136 democratic votes.

This at once undermines the only prop upon which the majority rest in the support of the vote of this precinct, as they declare it to have been.

have been.

But I shall be unable to dwell longer upon this precinct, for I desire now to call the attention of the House to other precincts which came under the review of the committee. I ask at tention to the evidence that has been produced in regard to Jasper precinct, in Hamilton County. I said yesterday that every witness that swore in behalf of the democratic side was, in the estimation of the majority, a paragon of virtue, and that every republican witness that we produced was at once discredited and attempts made to break down his testimony. Take Jasper precinct, and without this vote their claim that the electoral vote of that State went for Tilden wholly falls to the ground. In Jasper precinct, there were 183 republican votes and 321 democratic votes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] a moment ago said that we had all the machinery in the hands of the republicans. How was it in Jasper precinct? There were upon the election board three democrats and one republican officer.

Let me advert to this precinct and the proceedings there. The poll is opened; the vote went on; the poll is closed, and what then? A more shameful intermeddling with the ballot-box and the counting of a vote, was never witnessed in America. But 50 votes had been taken out of the ballot-box before a democratic lawyer, by the name of Blackwell, steps up and takes hold of the ballot-box and counts out the ballots. He reads and folds up the ballots and passes them to an inspector for awhile. Then after Mr. Blackwell had thus intermeddled with the count, he stepped one side, and another democratic lawyer by the name of Reynolds comes forward and begins to perform the work of reading off the ballots, and Mr. Blackwell begins to keep the tally-sheet. So that, here we have the counting and tallying of the ballots done by two democrats and unsworn outsiders.

Mr. Reynolds counts for a while and then steps aside. Forthwith one Patterson, another democrat, comes in and begins to count out the votes. He is a son of the democratic candidate for State senator. This young Patterson becomes the counter and Reynolds takes the

Mr. Reynolds counts for a while and then steps aside. Forthwith one Patterson, another democrat, comes in and begins to count out the votes. He is a son of the democratic candidate for State senator. This young Patterson becomes the counter and Reynolds takes the place of Blackwell at the tallying-sheet. Before he gets through, one Ancrum, another democratic outsider, helps keep the tally. Here we have four men engaged in the canvass: four outsiders and all democrats as counters and tally-sheet-keepers, and the men legally there to take charge of the ballot-box out of the way and the whole control of the ballot-box passed into the hands of democrats, and from the beginning until they closed at four o'clock in the morning, there were five outside democrats counting and tallying, while the real officers of the precinct were lost sight of and were substantially ignored. But now let us see what was done. They adjourned at four o'clock in the morning. Mark you, there were no split tickets in the ballot-box, and yet they occupied from sundown until four o'clock in the morning counting out 500 votes. At four o'clock they adjourned without proclaiming the ballot, without making out their return, in violation of the law, and they adjourned and went home. What became of the ballot-box? It was taken to a bar-room, it was put on the counter, unguarded and unprotected. The owner of the bar went from his bar to a distant house to sleep and left the ballot-box on the counter. But who slept in that room? Not an officer, not a man sworn to take care of the ballot-box; but a man by the name of Bell who was a candidate for the Legislature, and a young man by the name of Duncan, the nephew of another democratic candidate on the ticket running that day. There was the ballot-box at a notoriously open bar-room, unprotected and unguarded.

But this is not all. The next day these men came back again. They

But this is not all. The next day these men came back again. They came back for what? They make a recount and make returns. Who made out the returns? This man Reynolds, this democratic lawyer that did the counting, and these other democrats that kept the tally-sheets and assisted in the counting, all turned up in the last scene of the drama

Reynolds returns and comes back to help make out the returns, and when he gets them partly made out, there appears one Henry J. Stewart, another democratic lawyer. He enters for the purpose of finishing up the job. Not one officer of the precinct touched the returns. Democratic outsiders made the counting, kept the tally-sheets, and made the returns, and when Fryar and Smithson, two of the officers, came in to sign them, the returns were not so much as read over to them. They were invited in and signed they knew not what. Now, this was all lovely, this was all regular, this was all in harmony with the law, and a very nice report has been made by the majority of the committee that while there might have been somewhat of irregularities yet the vote of that precinct should be counted. We ought to remember that the canvassing board unanimously voted to throw out the vote of this precinct and that there was no hesitancy on the part of the board to do so. They threw it out as wholly and entirely fraudulent.

I will now refer to another precinct in this county, the precinct Reynolds returns and comes back to help make out the returns,

I will now refer to another precinct in this county, the precinct of White Springs. What do we find here? The election, for aught I know, was a fair one. Yet what is true in regard to it? When the I know, was a fair one. Yet what is true in regard to it? When the officers made out their returns to the county canvassing board, they returned no vote for presidential electors. But on the 13th of November, when the county canvassing board began to prepare their returns for the secretary of state, it was discovered that there was no return of votes for presidential electors in the White Springs precinct. Then, six or seven days after the election, this local board made a supplemental return.

We hold that when the officers of the local board of the local board of the local board. I know, was a fair one. Yet what is true in regard to it?

We hold that when the officers of the local board made their return We hold that when the officers of the local board made their return on the night of the 7th of November, they at once ceased to be such officers. They were utterly unable to take up afterward the work that they had partially performed at that time. But they met and made a new and supplemental return, and the county canvassing board let it in. The State canvassing board threw it out, and justly so. The local board had failed to do a duty that devolved upon it at a given time, and, having dissolved as a local board of officers, they were unable to make that supplemental return.

I shall now call attention for a moment to Leon County. I was

I shall now call attention for a moment to Leon County. I was I shall now call attention for a moment to Leon County. I was aware that the majority of the committee would lay great stress upon Leon County. Early in the investigation, there was evidently in the minds of the majority a prejudice, bitter and unrelenting, against one Mr. Bowles who was a witness. The majority assumed at once that he had acted fraudulently on the day of the election.

There were 72 small ballots found in the ballot-box, and the majority of the committee assumed that Mr. Bowles put them in. Now that is a clear assumption—not a particle of evidence to sustain it. There were witnesses who swore that these small tickets were distributed and cast as other tickets were cast.

When the minority of the committee undertook to ask Mr. Bowes where these small ballots came from, the majority would not allow him to tell. The fact was, and which we tried to show, these small ballots were put out to prevent democratic frauds upon the colored ballots were put out to prevent democratic frauds upon the colored voters. After the republicans had printed their ballots upon a small piece of paper, a boy in the Sentinel office was bought up, and then the democrats began to print small ballots of precisely the same size. We desired to show that, but the committee would not allow us to do so. Some of these small ballots were out in circulation and for use. Some of them were thrown into that box, legitimately and

But it is said that they proved that there were on the registration-But it is said that they proved that there were on the registration-list as having voted there, the names of twenty-four men who as they say voted somewhere else. Let me ask the House to consider the weakness of the position assumed by the majority. Here were found eight men by the name of Henry Smith. It is a notorious fact, well known all through the Southern States, that colored men, many of them, change their names annually. More than that, it must be remembered that men go from one precinct into another precinct to vote.

bered that men go from one precinct into another precinct to vote. They may vote in any precinct in the county.

There is nothing more inconclusive than the testimony upon which the majority rely. But admitting the conclusiveness of the testimony to the fullest extent of the claim, it simply proves 24 apparent repeaters in a vote of 4,000. Now you may go into any county in the country where there are 4,000 votes thrown, and you will find that apparently, with a registration-list as large as that, there is as much repeating as is here shown. When there are 500 less votes thrown than there are names upon the registration-list, it shows that the election there must have been an eminently pure one; for the majority of the committee will not claim that the colored men are inclined to repeat. clined to repeat.

I omitted to state one other fact in relation to Alachua. We desired, as far as possible, to account for the apparent mismanagement of the ballot-box in Alachua. When the ballots were counted in that precinct, it was of course at a time of very great excitement. When the grand jury of that county was in session, with a republican judge upon the bench, it was charged to investigate into the election in precinct Archer No. 2.

They made a searching investigation. What was their finding? That the election in that precinct was fair and legal; in every sense a proper one and in keeping with the law. When we desired to prove that, the majority said, "No, we will have no presentment furnished us; we will have no finding of a grand jury." Although that grand jury examined the ballot-box, examined the registration-list, the polllist, and five witnesses, yet that fact of record, the democratic majority would not allow us to show. The record shows that we made the attempt to have the presentment of the grand jury of that county jority would not allow us to show. The record shows that we made the attempt to have the presentment of the grand jury of that county made a part of our testimony.

These gentlemen tell us that there were gigantic frauds in Florida. They tell us that this State went for Tilden as much as Massachusetts went for Hayes. Still, in this county, they avoid Waldo precinct; they avoid Archer precinct No. 1; they avoid Columbia County; they dodge Orange County; and they examine but one or two of the places where notoriously it was declared that frauds had been committed.

mitted.

They now attempt to call the high commission but a "Delphic oracle" because this defective, this sham exhibit, does not go before it as evidence. There is not a tribunal in the world that would accept the report of the majority as evidence. I do not claim that the report of the minority should be taken as evidence. It was not evidence. It was an investigation with the whole power in the hands of the respective headled for a right handled for the respective headled for a right handled for the respective headled for the r majority, handled for an end, handled for a purpose, handled solely majority, handled for an end, handled for a purpose, handled solely for the accomplishment of that purpose.

I desire now to refer, only in a few words, to the county of Manatee, which gave a democratic majority of 236. Here is a democratic majority of 157 in Jasper and a democratic majority of 25 in Whitespring. The majority are not satisfied with getting the vote of Jasper; they are not satisfied with getting the vote of Monroe, a democratic majority vote of 342 obtained in open violation of law, the counting of the votes being adjourned to another precinct when the law declares that the vote shall be canvassed and counted where it is cast and without adjournment. That vote of 342 was thrown out by the decision of the entire canvassing board, Attorney-General Cocke concurring. Not satisfied with these accretions to the demo-

Cocke concurring. Not satisfied with these accretions to the democratic column, they want and claim and insist upon Manatee.

Now what about Manatee County? If the vote of that county can be counted for Hayes or for Tilden in the State of Florida you might as well go into the State of Georgia and take out any county and add its vote to the vote of Florida. Here there was an utter absence of anything approaching a compliance with the law. There was no notice of the election; there was no designation of the voting-precincts. So Mr. Graham swore.

No matter what certain new and recently discovered written testing.

No matter what certain new and recently discovered written testimony has been dragged into this case within the last week, this man Graham swears that there was no designation of voting-places; and yet the vote is counted in this county. The only notice that was given in this county was that Judge Graham went about the county given in this county was that Judge Graham went about the county holding democratic meetings. At those meetings he said, "Gentlemen, let us come out and vote"—not at the precincts that had been designated by law, but simply to come out and vote. There were eleven precincts. There was voting done in nine. In seven of these precincts not a republican vote was cast; in one but 1 vote; and in another but 22. The county was carried by a vote of 262 for Tilden and 26 for Hayes, giving 236 majority for Tilden. The election from beginning to end was wholly within the control and direction of one single democratic manipulator, and he was the sole witness before the single democratic manipulator, and he was the sole witness before the committee. It is notorious throughout the length and breadth of that State, that the election in that county was regarded by 50 per cent. of the people as a farce, a fraud, an attempt to defraud the republican voters of that county.

The majority charge there was a conspiracy. There is no evidence of a conspiracy. The old clerk resigned and a new man was promptly appointed. The State officers waited a sufficient length of time to appointed. The State officers waited a sumcent length of time to receive notice of his acceptance and qualification. It must be remembered that this county is hundreds of miles from Tallahassee, and the modes of reaching it are few and slow. The newly appointed clerk came to Graham and attempted to qualify. There is no evidence in the case that there was any attempt made to get a designation of voting-precinets. There was no attempt made to show they approached the democratic member of the board of commissioners to ask him to interfere to secure a designation of voting-places in that county.

I ask the members of this House to read the testimony of this man

Graham, and it will be evident that the vote in this county ought not to be counted, but ought in all sairness and justice to be thrown ont.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in closing let me say this: I have criticised the action of the majority in the investigation in Florida. With nothing of personal or unkind feeling toward any member of the majority, I do declare to this House and the country that this committee, by the action of the majority in all its movements and in all its efforts, sought the end decreed to it before it left this House. An investigation that is but partial, taking in one precinct out of four in the renowned county of Alachua, striking only those precincts where the discovery of republican fraud might be thought possible, avoiding each and every county and precinct where there were declared democratic frauds, does not furnish evidence for a court. Such an investigation cannot give to the report of the committee, making it, the character of evidence. Such a report hardly justifies the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] in characterizing the tribunal now passing upon the great and momentous questions of the hour, a Delphic oracle, because forsooth it did not let in as evidence the majority report of the House committee which went down to Florida. He seems to think that if only this report could have gone in as evidence the responses would have been music to the democratic ear and the tribunal have become a success. My time has excratic ear and the tribunal have become a success. My time has expired and I close my remarks. Mr. PURMAN took the floor.

Mr. DUNNELL. I did not yield any portion of my time and I suppose the gentleman who will follow has an hour in his own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, in the chair.)

Certainly

Mr. SEELYE. I should like to inquire if any time is assigned in limitation of this debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at all.

Mr. SEELYE. I move the time for debate expire with the close of the gentleman's remarks, one hour hence.

Mr. BUCKNER. That cannot be done.
Mr. SEELYE. Or two hours, if it is desired the other side shall be heard. I think there is important business to come before the House.
Mr. BUCKNER. Each member of the committee has an hour under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is out of order, as the gentleman from Florida is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOPKINS. This makes two speeches, one after the other on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida has the

The SPEAKEK pro tempore. The general results of man when floor and will proceed.

Mr. PURMAN. Mr. Speaker, there are times in the life of man when silence under painful circumstances is a synonym for caution, and duty undischarged may pass as only individual dereliction; but there come exigencies in the life of representatives, whether upon this floor or in other bodies, when silence is a crime and duty unfulfilled may be treason to conscience, constituency, and country

Before proceeding to consider the subject which would no longer brook silence nor permit me further to remain in an undutiful atti-tude upon this floor, I solicit the indulgence of the House while briefly calling attention to a certain class of men by whose labors and bravery the republican party in the South was first ushered into organized ex-

At the close of the war these men exchanged the uniform of the soldier for the garb of the peaceful citizen and cast their lot in the States their valor had saved to the Union.

With energy and brains and often with capital, they embarked in various employments and pursuits, seeking that reward and respect which never fail to come to the honorable and enterprising citizen. Ties of friendship, of marriage, of success in business, and of permanent investments fixed many of this class so that they became indissolubly linked with the fortunes or misfortunes of the communities and States in which their destiny was now cast.

I refer to that class of heroic men commonly but erroneously called carpet-baggers." Butthis opprobrious epithet only came into polit-"carpet-baggers." But this opprobrious epithet only came into political parlance after the adoption, by a republican Congress, of a civil and political reconstruction policy for the South and which for a time seemed likely to fail for lack of proper agency to execute it. As is well known the soul of this policy was the legal recognition and enforcement of the political equality of the colored race. Against this scheme of reconstruction the hostility and prejudices of the whites in the South at once arrayed themselves, and with such a degree of intolerance that to be even friendly to the scheme was enough to call down a visitation of the severest ostracism.

The colored race, whose rights in the reconstruction measures were the bone of contention, were entirely unable, from want of knowledge and experience, to carry into operation so vast a system. At this important juncture in the political history of the South the northernborn men, as a class, stepped out to the front, took hold of the machinery of reconstruction, and carried into successful execution what, without their directions and carried into successful execution what, without their directions and carried into successful execution what, without their direct agency, might have been the thwarted and discarded policy of a republican Congress. Then were opened the vials of a pent-up wrath upon the heads of this class of men, and since then our language has been exhausted by one political party for words of objurgation and epithet to apply to them. But, uninfluenced by all this unjust opposition, States were reconstructed on new and improved constitutions, and the statutes abounded with the wholesome and progressive laws born of a republican dispensation.

A better, more enlightened, and prosperous era the State of Florida never saw than that which is distinguished as her eight years of experience under the rule of the republican party. Starting out under a sound and enlightened constitution in 1868, the chief glory of which consists in the guarantee of the equality of all human rights, the liberal fostering of the industry of labor, and the safety secured to capital and its creations, our State has floated on a continuous stream of prosperity from that year to this, unprecedented in any former period of her history. When the republican party assumed possession of the government of Florida in 1868 the sum of $1.50 was found in the State treasury and the public credit on her State bonds was down to twenty treasury and the public credit on her State bonds was down to twenty cents on the dollar, while less than two months ago, when the State government again changed hands and passed under the control of the democracy, the retiring republican officer turned over $145,000 cash in the treasury and with it a credit on State bonds of ninety-five cents on the dollar. In 1868 there was not enough money in the State treasury to buy matches for one school-house. Now there are common schools established in every county and $30,000 cash belonging to the school fund was lately turned over by the republican to the democratic treasurer. cratic treasurer.

From January, 1875, to the present date the records of our land of-fices show that our public lands in Florida have been taken up by actual settlers at the average rate of 22,520 acres per month, thus actual settlers at the average rate of 22,520 acres per month, thus showing that the immigration to and development of our State are not surpassed by any State in the Union.

With a bonded debt of only $1,161,700, and a floating debt not exceeding $150,000, and with a steady stream of population and prosperity flowing into our State, started under republican auspices and unceasing, while our 20,000,000 acres of public domain offer homes in the most beautiful and productive climate in the world to the homeless throughout the world, Florida may well be pointed to with pride as a grand demonstration of what the best genius of the carpet-baggers accomplished in the science and practice of government.

baggers accomplished in the science and practice of government.

The republican party, ever since its organization in the late slaveholding States, has depended principally upon the activity and heroism of northern-born men for its continued cohesion and victories, although such men as Ex-Secretary Bristow, Senator Alcorn, Judge Settle, and many others are notable exceptions, and to whom I refer with admiration and pleasure

with admiration and pleasure.

It was not a spirit of aggrandizement on the part of these northern men that placed them into the leadership of the party in most of their respective States; but their leadership came as a matter of necessity, both at the organization of the party and to keep it from being routed and dissolved under the political onslaughts of the democracy.

Faithfully and bravely these men have stood at the head of the party and led the republican cohorts from one field of victory to another, and many of them, brave souls, fell as martyrs in the hour of their triumph. And here let me remark to my northern colleagues that it meant something more to be a republican in the South than simply an intellectual difference of judgment upon politics between yourself and your neighbor.

It meant ostracism in society, in business, defamation of character, ersecution, and often martyrdom; and those heroic men who endured all these trials for opinion's sake and to hold up an alliance in the South with the great republican party in the North for purposes of national party achievements, deserved, if not a crown of glory here, at least the meed of praise and a chivalric defense against the calumnies of political enemies.

The democratic party never slumbers in devising political attacks and heaping odium upon opponents, and so severe a storm of defa-mation was raised a few years ago on southern republican leaders that even our friends and allies in the North fell back in unfriendly cowardice, and many republican newspapers dropped their disposi-tion and armor for defense and but faintly mouned out apologies. The republican party in the South received many stabs in the house of its friends. The idiosyncrasies of the colored legislators were of its friends. The idiosyncrasies of the colored legislators were made the subjects of burlesque in republican papers; stale democratic insinuations against the characters of republican leaders were revamped in fresh letters from the pens of peripatetic correspondents, and in this manner, through a series of years, our party in the South lost much in dignity and reputation, and consequently in strength and numbers

In the election of 1874 the republican party was ruthlessly defeated in the State of Mississippi through the cowardly policy of republican leaders in Washington, who feared that the extension of protection to the colored voters in Mississippi would have the effect of defeating the republican ticket in several States in the North.

The President, through the selfish entreaties of northern politicians, not statesmen, faltered for once in the energetic exercise of his political administration, though history will truthfully record that no President ident ever preserved so independent an attitude and yet at the same time served his country and party so well. The consequent result in Mississippi is well known—the triumph of intimidation, and the perpetual overthrow of our party in that large republican State.

It is lamentable to think that protection in the South and success in the North at the same election within the republican party, are in-

in the North at the same election within the republican party, are incompatible in terms and in fact, and that one must be sacrificed for the benefit of the other. But the conflict was less in fact than in self-ish fear, and Mississippi was offered up as the first victim to that fratricidal "new departure" within the ranks of the republican party which set up for its creed that "a solid South will make a solid North." The unjust and impolitic treatment at the hands of a republican Senate of Hon. Mr. Pinchback, a leading representative of his race and party who was as legally elected to the United States Senate from Louisiana as Governor Kellogg was elected to the governorship of that State, and as legally as any presidential electors were lately elected in that State, was another one of those party blunders or selfish policies the evil effects of which were confined not alone to

of our party everywhere in the South.

When the presidential campaign of 1876 commenced the republican party in the Southern States buckled on its armor and entered the field hand in hand with its northern ally, I mean the northern wing of the republican party, determined to do valiant battle for its candidates and principles.

But everywhere in the South we labored under some disadvantages and discouragements, more particularly under a really depressing spirit caused by the determined front of the democracy everywhere, who now carried upon their banners the prestige of their victory in

To counteract the silent power of this prestige it became necessary to put forth renewed exertions and to evoke renewed enthusiasm, and in the creation of these new auxiliaries we in part succeeded, though unaided by our ally in the North, to whom we appealed in vain for a few public speakers and from whom we could obtain not one dollar of assistance to help defray the legitimate expenses of a presidential campaign.

It is singular to contemplate how much in achievement and in rascality is expected from southern republicans in national elections, and yet how studiously they are unaided in their campaign emergencies and ignored in the hour of victory and possession. [Ap-

Can any one answer the political conundrum why it is that repubican speakers will eloquently vibrate from Maine to Indiana and from New Hampshire to Maryland, and yet never put a foot across the Potomac River to help us in the Southern States fight the same great battles for principle and country?

Can any one explain to the satisfaction of a southern republican can any one explain to the satisfaction of a southern republican why money was collected from office-holders in the South and then why not one dollar was contributed by any of our national committees for campaign purposes in Florida? Is it any wonder, sir, that the republican party has been growing weaker and weaker each year in the South, and all for want of fostering care and encouragement from our national party functionaries? Is it any wonder that both our leaders and masses are filled with disgust and demoralization when before the election and daying the contribute of the con when before the election and during the campaign they were compelled to hear the proposition gravely propounded whether a "solid South" should not be encouraged and be permitted as the safest issue upon which to rally or fire a "solid North," and upon which sectional excitement—that Red Sea of trouble in which so many of our countries. trymen were swallowed up in civil war—our candidate should ride in triumph into the White House?

Yes; ask your fellow-republicans in the South to calmly commit political suicide; ask the colored voters to suspend their exercise of suffrage and calmly accept the consequences of a democratic government; ask these encouraging favors before the campaign has advanced far enough to scatter your paper calculations and leave only blank wonderment in their places, and then if we decline, more in sorrow than in anger, refuse to send us either speakers or assistance, sorrow than in anger, reruse to send us either speakers or assistance, look indifferently or not at all upon a brave band, struggling single-handed against a well-organized and relentless political foe, but wage a useless war against impregnable democratic fortifications in New York and Indiana, and then, on the day after the election, nervously ask yourself what is the result of this haphazard campaign, and the ask yourself what is the result or this naphazard campaign, and the result is logical defeat by the people.

And this, Mr. Speaker, brings me now to the gravamen of my remarks upon the subject which I now take occasion to present to the reflection of my countrymen who believe that the purity and exactness of the ballot are the first foundations upon which to rear and preserve the liberty and stability of our free institutions.

I waited impatiently for the special committee on Florida to submit the report of their investigation to this House, and again I looked forward with that reasonable expectation that the electoral commis-forward with that reasonable expectation that the electoral commission would decide to admit evidence sufficient at least to satisfy the country as to which electors were really elected by the people of Florida, but I find now the appropriate opportunity to state from my own knowledge the true condition of the presidential vote in my State, concerning which so much is involved in misunderstanding and controversy

The republican party in our State, with all its dissensions healed and with the whole machinery of the State government in its hands, went into the last campaign determined to win if our own resources and efforts, coupled with the most heroic devotion on the part of our voters, could achieve such an end.

Free speech and free locomotion were enjoyed to the fullest extent by the speakers and managers of both sides, and at no time during the campaign or from any portion of the State came up any cry of intimidation, with one or two minor exceptions. It was, without exception, the most peaceful election ever held in the State, and not one case of violence or disturbance on election day has come to my

It seemed the peculiar privilege of the republicans to win under all these advantageous circumstances, but it is a fact, sir, which I cannot stand upon this floor and deny, and which every man, woman and child in my State knows, that Florida was lost by the republican party in the late election, and that the democratic governor and the Tilden electors were truly elected. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

I make this declaration now under the most solemn sense of public duty and from an irresistible feeling of obligation to the people of my State, who have a right to expect that, however partisan their Representative may be in his political faith, he should at least on questions of public fact be an honest man. But, sir, I would not be understood in making this declaration as laying claim to any unusual amount of honesty or conscience, but I only assert my knowledge of

I love the principles of the republican party, and for their sake have been singed by the fires of martyrdom, and I believe in the ultimate triumph of its regenerating mission, but I cannot return to my State and look my constituency in the face if, standing upon this floor and in the presence of the American people, anxious and entitled to know the whole truth concerning this dangerous presidential issue, I should shrink from the responsibility of doing justice to my State, and defending her honest political victory against the willful perversion of a bold, dishonest, and unscrupulous State canvassing board.

[Applause.]
Should my democratic colleague in this House introduce a resolution here declaring that the St. John's River had its rise in the southern portion of our State, flowed northward for hundreds of miles and emptied its waters into the Atlantic Ocean, I would be compelled to support the affirmation of the resolution for the reason that I would support the affirmation of the resolution for the reason that I would know the statement to be true, being personally acquainted with the geography of that country. Therefore for like reason am I compelled to give assent to any declarations which have been or may be made upon this floor that the Tilden electors were truly elected in Florida, and that only by "ways that are dark," and tricks that in this case have not proved to be vain, were these electors, and a majority of the people of the United States, defrauded out of their fair and lawful victory. But facts plainly expressed carry with them their own just weight, while jugglery performed with a number of facts only increases the task of explanation, without changing their character or relative weight. character or relative weight.

The election law of the State of Florida declares specifically as

SEC. 27. The person who shall receive the highest number of votes cast for any office shall be elected to such office.

It is not essential in this connection to inquire whether presidential electors are State or United States officers, for the fact that such electors were voted for at our late general election brings them within the provision of this act.

The ascertainment of the number of votes cast, and for what persons as candidates for the several offices, can only be made from the precinct and county returns, the latter being required by law to be made by the county clerk, county judge, and a justice of the peace on the sixth day after any election, or sooner if all the returns are in, and contain only the result of a ministerial canvass or enumeration of the property of the peace of the p tion of all the votes actually east in the county. In the absence of either the clerk or the judge, the sheriff shall be called in to help make the canvass, and the result, in the form of duplicate certificates signed by the canvassers, shall then be sent, one certificate to the secretary of state and one to the governor. These certificates, in which according to law all figures must be written out in full, constitute the papers or county returns from which the State board of canvassers must ascertain and declare who received the highest number of votes cast, and therefore who is elected.

On the thirty-fifth day after the election the State board of can-vassers met in pursuance of the following law:

vassers met in pursuance of the following law:

SEC. 4. On the thirty-fifth day after the holding of any general or special election for any State officer, member of the Legislature, or Representative in Congress, or sooner if the returns shall have been received from the several counties wherein elections shall have been held, the secretary of state, attorney-general, and the comptroller of public accounts, or any two of them, together with any other member of the cabinet who may be designated by them, shall meet at the office of the secretary of state pursuant to notice to be given by the secretary of state and form a board of state canvassers, and proceed to canvass the returns of said election, and determine and declare who shall have been elected to any such office, or as such member, as shown by such returns. If any such returns shall be shown or shall appear to be so irregular, false, or fraudulent that the board shall be unable to determine the true vote for any such officer or member, they shall so certify, and shall not include such return in their determination and declaration, and the secretary of state shall preserve and file in his office all such returns, together with such other documents and papers as may have been received by him or by said board of canvassers. The said board shall make and sign a certificate, containing in words written at full length the whole number of votes given for each office, the number of votes given for each person for each office, and for member of the Legislature, and therein declare the result, which certificate shall be recorded in the softee of the secretary of state in a book to be kept for that purpose, and the secretary of state shall cause a certified copy of such certificate to be published once in one or more newspapers printed at the seat of government.

And on the 6th day of December, 1876, the board completed its

And on the 6th day of December, 1876, the board completed its canvass, and declared the republican governor to be elected by a majority of 458, and the Hayes electors by a majority of 930. In arriving at this majority the board, I may here state, attempted and did unlawfully exercise judicial powers by hearing of evidence and passing of judgments upon the validity and invalidity of precinct

From the face of all the county returns the vote in the State stood:
For Tilden electors, 24,439, and for Hayes electors, 24,349; giving Tilden a majority of 90.

But now comes the jugglery. From Baker County two returns were sent up, one signed by the clerk and a justice of the peace, (the judge and sheriff refusing to join in the canvass,) and which was the legal and correct return, giving the Tilden electors a majority of 95; while the other return was signed by the judge, sheriff, and a justice, and by throwing out two precincts, without even alleged cause or warrant of law, they returned a republican majority of 41. That a conspiracy existed to defraud the county out of its true majority was very evident to all observers, and only to make a prima facie case for the purpose of deceiving the country did the board of canvassers temporarily set up this fraudulent return, and which they in the real canvass unanimously rejected. By this manipulation a prima facie showing was made of 42 majority in favor of Hayes, and as such it was heralded over the country.

After the canvass had progressed in other counties, and after a free use of the unlawful judicial ax, with which whole democratic pre-cincts were chopped out and others trimmed off until plenty of safe margin was made for the republican candidates to stand upon, the board counted the correct return from Baker County and repudiated the one so plausibly used in making up the prima facie case.

From the county of Clay there was but one return and in due and regular form, but with the return came a certificate that at precinct No. 8 29 votes were cast for the Tilden electors and 6 votes for Hayes, and which were not included in the return, as it appeared that the inspectors of said poll were not sworn. The democratic majority in this county was 185, including precinct No. 8, and the board so counted it at their completion of the canvass on December 6, or the first canvass. On the 13th of December proceedings were commenced before the supreme court of our State praying that a writ might issue com-pelling the board to meet and recanvass from the face of the returns on file in the office of the secretary of state. Such writ of mandamus was issued December 22, commanding the board to recanvass and perform purely a ministerial duty, unless any returns were found so "false, fraudulent, or irregular" that the true vote could not be determined, in which case the power to reject the whole return of a county was inherent in the board by virtue of the authority creating it.

Justice Wescott, delivering the opinion of the court, said

Justice Wescott, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

The view that the board of State canvassers is a tribunal having power strictly judicial, such as is involved in the determination of the legality of a particular vote or election, cannot be sustained.

All of the acts which this board can do under the statute must be based upon the returns; and while in some cases the officers composing the board may, like all ministerial officers of similar character, exclude what purports to be a return for irregularity, still everything they are authorized to do is limited to what is sanctioned by authentic and true returns before them. Their final act and determination must be such as appears from and is shown by the returns from the several counties to be correct. They have no general power to issue subpenas, to summon parties, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to grant a trial by jury, or to do any act but determine and declare who has been elected as shown by the returns. They are authorized to enter no judgment, and their power is limited by the express words of the statute which gives them being to the signing of a certificate containing the whole number of votes given for each person for each office, and therein declaring the result as shown by the returns.

The duty to count these returns has been enforced by mandamus so repeatedly in the courts of the several States of the Union that the power of the courts in this respect has long since ceased to be an open question. Mr. Justice Smith, in the very celebrated case of The Attorney-General ex ret. Bashford as. Barstow, (4 Wis., S13,) when speaking of the powers of the board of State canvassers, after reciting their power to "determine" the result of an election from the returns, says: "These are not judicial but purely ministerial acts." We must, therefore, decide that the general nature of the power given by the statute is ministerial, and that to the extent that any strictly and purely judicial power is granted, such power cannot exist.

This brings

says: "These are not judicial but purely ministerial acts." We must, incretore, decide that the general nature of the power given by the statute is ministerial, and that to the extent that any strictly and purely judicial power is granted, such power cannot exist.

This brings us to the consideration of the only remaining general question as to the powers of the board under the statute.

While the general powers of the board are thus limited to and by the returns, still as to these returns the statute provides that, "if any such returns shall be shown or shall appear to be so irregular, false, or fraudulent that the locard shall be unable to determine the true vote for any officer or member, they shall so certify and shall not include such return in their determination and declaration, and the secretary of state shall preserve and file in his office all such returns, together with such other documents and papers as may have been received by him or by said board of canvasers." The words true vote here indicate the vote actually cast, as distinct from the legal vote. This follows, first, from the clear general duty of the canvassers, which is to ascertain and certify the "votes given" for each person for each office, and, second, because to determine whether a vote cast is a legal vote is beyond the power of this board. As to the words "irregular, false, and fraudulent" in this connection, their definition is not required by the questions raised by the pleadings in this case.

These respondents have not alleged that they have before them any return "so irregular, false, or fraudulent" that they are unable to determine the actual vote cast in any county, as shown by the returns; and nothing can be clearer than that the counting of returns sufficiently regular returns in question here are admitted. We will say, however, that the clear effect of this clause in the statute is that a return of the character named shall not be included in the determination and declaration of the board; and that it has power to determin

By the order of the supreme court, based upon the opinion I have cited, the board of canvassers was directed to recanvass the vote according to the actual returns on file in the office of the secretary of state, and in obedience thereto the board met on the 27th of December last, and, actuated by a desire to promote a partisan triumph at the expense of truth and justice, they ignored and reversed their action of the 6th of December at the first canvass, thereby giving the Hayes electors a majority of 41 in Baker County and throwing out the whole vote of Clay County, in which Tilden had a majority of 187. No justification or defense can be offered for their action in either case. It was a bold, defiant, unscrupulous effort to reverse the honest judgment of the people of Florida on the presidential issue, and which cannot be defended here or elsewhere. By this second canvass it was declared that the democratic candidate for governor received 195 majority, while the Hayes electors still held a majority of 206. Your committee in pursuing their investigation discovered that a fraud had been committed at Archer precinct No. 2, in the county of Alachna, whereby 219 votes were fraudulently counted as having been cast for the republican electors. The fraud was easy of discovery, as its existence was a matter of general belief among men of all parties, yet it was attempted to cover it over by convenient affidavits so that its naked deformity might not shock the sensibilities of the board of canvassers. I know, sir, that it was not an imaginary but board of canvassers. I know, sir, that it was not an imaginary but a real fraud that was committed at this precinct, and I violate no personal confidence in making this declaration.

I know further that Comptroller Cowgill, a member of the board, was personally consulted upon the fact of this fraud having been committed, and that he gave his assurance that if it were plausibly covered up before the case came before them for adjudication, it should suffer no scrutiny or discount at his hands.

As this fraud was perpetrated in the second congressional district, I take pleasure in saying in this connection that I do not believe the honorable republican candidate for Congress in that district had the remotest knowledge of its commission.

Purging the vote of Alachua County of this well-known fraud, the Tilden electors would have been elected by over 300 majority.

The board should have rejected the entire vote of Alachua as false and fraudulent, in consequence of the perpetration of this fraud; and as democratic frauds were undoubtedly committed in the county of Jackson, as will appear to an unbiased mind in reading the testiof Jackson, as will appear to an unbiased mind in reading the testimony taken by the committee, these two counties, Alachua and Jackson, should have both been thrown out for the same reason, and in the exercise of a power and duty incumbent upon the board. By this just and lawful proceeding the vote in the State would have stood 709 majority in favor of the Tilden electors. Viewed in any manner, whether in the light of law or fact, we cannot escape the truth that the democratic party really elected their presidential electors in the State of Florida. This is no longer any question of doubt among the people in our State, who hold our republican supreme court in high esteem for learning and integrity, and whose decision. court in high esteem for learning and integrity, and whose decision they accept with confidence and acquiescence, although contrary to the hopes and interests of the republican party in our State.

The democratic governor-elect, Mr. Drew, was peacefully inaugurated at Tallahassee on the 2d day of January last, and I thank God and the good people of our State that Florida does not present the and the good people of our state that Florida does not present the alarming spectacle of two rival governments upon her soil, both claiming to represent the sovereign will of the people. No one can see the future misfortunes that may befall the States of South Caro-lina and Louisiana in consequence of their dual governments, though it is my opinion that whether Governor Hayes or Governor Tilden will succeed to the Presidency, in neither event will the republican claimants be able to maintain their authority, whether rightfully entitled or not. The pressure will be too great, both upon them and upon the President, and the policy of a republican Administration necessarily will be to secure peace and reconciliation at the price of any concessions involving the rights of southern republicans.

But whatever the future may have in store for the devoted republicans in the South, and however mournful to view our noble politi-Heaven that when the gloom of our defeat passes away and the morning sunshine from the east comes to light up the flowery lills and valleys of our State that the light and warmth of our republican principles will be mingled with that sunshine and descend in universal blessings upon all our people irrespective of race or condition, whether dwelling amid their fragrant orange groves or among the snowy fields of cotton. Lawfully and peacefully the defeated governor handed over the government of our State to his democratic successor, who, I am confident, will never raise iconoclastic hands against the free and impartial institutions established by the republican party, and under which our State has enjoyed an era of progress and development unequaled in the annals of her past.

But, sir, my Juty does not end here with my declaration in favor of the truthfulness of the election in our State, nor with my expressions of confidence in the good judgment and intentions of the democracy now in possession of our State government. No, the mission of republicanism is not yet ended in the South; for much good is yet to be done among that portion of our population who received their freedom and enfranchisement at the hands of our party.

Implicitly these people relied upon the sacredness of their cause, and most devotedly under all manner of inconceivable hardships have they maintained their fealty to party and principle. As if the waves of the Red Sea had swept over them; came the intelligence of democratic success. They have hung their harps upon the willows in or the field sea had swept over them; came the intengence of demo-cratic success. They have hung their harps upon the willows in silent apprehension of the unknown future. But it is my sincere con-viction that these worst fears are groundless; for good and industrious citizens as they have proven themselves, no wise party or government can fail to promote their true progress and elevation for the general welfare of the State itself. All is not lost while the spirit of manhood remains, and an undying determination to strive for that mental, material, and moral improvement upon which after all the usefulness and respectability of all citizens must rest. While in the majority I devoted my best days and energies to the advancement and amelioration of this people for their own happiness and for the public benefit of the State, so now when in the minority I will remain and continue these labors with redoubled devotion, believing that out of the duties of philanthropy and patriotism springs a joy for reward unknown amid the mad struggles for office. As a voluntary sentinel, overlooking the constitution and authorities of our State, I shall sound the alarm at the first encroachment upon the rights and welfare of the people, and upon each return of the elections only the friends of equal rights and privileges will find themselves re-enforced by a faithful ally mow watchful as a minority. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODBURN. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarkmade by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Hop-kins] and after hearing the speech of the gentleman from Massachus setts, [Mr. Thompson,] chairman of the Florida investigating committee, on Saturday last, as well as speeches delivered by other gentlemen on that side of the House, I am forced to the conclusion that the democratic mind is imbued with the idea that the final declarathe democrate mind is imoded with the idea that the final declara-tion made by the State canvassing board of Florida on the 6th day of last December is false in fact as well as in law. That charge has been again reiterated by the gentleman who last addressed this House, [Mr. Purman.] I noticed as among the objections interposed on Saturday to the decision of the high joint commission that evidence was brought before that tribunal to prove the truth of that charge, but it was rejected. I say, if any such evidence ever existed, it never came through the agency of any investigating committee into the possession of this House, and it was never discovered in the office of the secretary of state at Tallahassee, the capital of the

The gentleman who last addressed this House characterized the members of this canvassing board as a bold, unscrupulous, and dis-honest set. I leave it to the members of the majority of the investigating committee whether the two gentlemen composing the majority of that board are not as conscientious and intelligent as any they met with in the State of Florida. I would like to call on them to state if in every attribute that adorns mankind they do not compare favor-ably with the gentleman who just spoke or with any other member on this floor.

The other member of that board was the democratic attorney-general. There is no pretense made by any democrat that he was un-scrupulous. His praises have been sounded throughout the land by all the democratic organs of the country. If that canvassing board perpetrated a fraud the attorney-general must have known it. If the canvassing was made contrary to law the attorney-general never announced the fact to the country. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. Purman] says the board exercised judicial powers. I admit it. Why? Because relying on the legal opinion of the democratic attorney-general the majority of that board believed they had the unquestioned right to exercise those powers, a right never doubted before, under the laws of that State. The gentleman now complains about the exercise of that right. Isay that when he was canvassed into this House as a Congressman by that same canvassing board, it was done in precisely the same manner as the convass was made for the Hayes electors.

He cannot dispute that fact.

The result, Mr. Speaker, of that canvass was 925 majority for the Hayes electors. That canvass was made in the precise manner pointed out by the attorney-general. That majority never was affected or disturbed by any subsequent decision of the supreme court of the State of Florida. The minutes of that canvassing board will show that instead of perpetrating fraud and corruption its members consulted the democratic attorney-general in many cases of contest; and not only that, they allowed democratic lawyers, prominent men from every part of this country, to appear before that tribunal, to offer testimony, and to make legal argumen's.

I now call the attention of the House to this fact that, at the very time and in the precise manner in which the 925 majority for the Hayes electors was arrived at, that canvassing board, now alleged to be reeking with fraud and corruption, canvassed into existence and power a democratic Legislature, now in session, exercising all the functions pertaining to legislative bodies without opposition or complaint. Is there any democrat on the floor of this Honse who will contend that that Legislature is a de facto, and not a de jure, body, in the face of the decisions which are uniform that the final declaration of a conversion board wash as writer in Elevido. of a canvassing board, such as exists in Florida, is unappealable, unreviewable, and irreversible?

As the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Purman] has stated they did make a second count. How? It was made by an order of the supreme court based on a decision rendered in the case of George F. Drew against The State Canvassing Board, on the ground that the canvassing board exceeded its jurisdiction, or, as the gentleman from Florida said, exercised judicial powers. The order of that supreme court pointed out the precise maxner of making the second canvass. In obedience to that order the canvassing board again made a count for the electors in the precise way is which they counted Mr. Drew into power: and the result was a majority of 211 for the Haves Drew into power; and the result was a majority of 211 for the Hayes electors. Is there any man who disputes that fact? I ask the gentleman from Florida who makes the bold and bald charge of fraud and corruption against the men constituting this returning board: and corruption against the men constituting this returning count. Is that not true? That portion of the canvass was presented with the count for Mr. Drew to the supreme court; but they struck it out on the ground that Mr. Drew was the only party to any proceeding instituted in that court. But the fact remains, and all the ranting of my friends on the other side or elsewhere can never obliterate or obscure it.

But it is claimed that in arriving at the result of 211 majority for the Hayes electors the canvassing board struck out the return from one county, Clay County. I admit it. They were forced to do it by order of the supreme court; and had they not done so in counting for Mr. Drew, they would have been held by the supreme court to have been in contempt. Why did they reject that return? Because the decision of the supreme court gave them full authority to reject every return from any county in Florida which was so irregular on its face that the true vote could not be ascertained therefrom. Is the return from Clay County so irregular that no man can ascertain the return from Clay County so irregular that no man can ascertain the true vote from that county? If there are those who doubt about that point, I cite them to the return, an exact copy of which is set out in the minority report. And I respectfully challenge any man on the floor of this House to tell me from an examination of that return how many votes the Tilden electors received and how many votes the Hayes electors received in that county; the irregularity was so patent that they were compelled to exclude that return; and as I said before, they would have been in contempt of the order of the supreme court if they had not done so.

But it is claimed further that, in addition to throwing out that return from Clay County, the canvassing board counted an improper or false return from Baker County. I say that that proposition cannot be maintained. There are three returns from Baker County. But take that one of them which is most favorable to the democratic interest and count in addition every return from the State of Florida terest and count in addition every return from the State of Florida that is regular on its face, and without the rejection or throwing out of one fraudulent vote the lowest Hayes elector has a clear majority. It only requires a simple sum in addition to reach that result. And, if that be true, where is the foundation for those sweeping allegations of fraud and corruption made by the gentleman who last addressed you against the returning board? The return that was counted in the second canvass for Mr. Drew from Baker County was the one that was prima facie regular on its face. It was signed by the three officers required by the laws of the State of Florida to make a return. The return claimed by the democrats to be the true one was only signed by two officers, a county clerk and a justice of the

But, further, the law of the State requires that the county canvass ing board must be composed of three persons and not of two. The evidence before this committee shows that the canvass upon which this return is based was signed only by a clerk and a justice of the peace and was only made by two persons, which was contrary to the law of the State of Florida, and no valid return can be based on such a canvass. The other return was signed by the proper officers, and the proper number of officials as required by law made that canvass. I admit that the return signed by the clerk and the justice of the peace, claiming to be a true return of the vote of this precinct, is more favorable to the Tilden electors than is the other one, but I submit this question: If under the decision of the supreme court the canvassing board did not have the right, was it not bound to take that return which showed upon its face that it was the only regular return from Baker County? That return was counted for Drew in strict obedience to the mandate of the supreme court. To those gentlemen who think that the legal and honest vote of the State of Florida was who think that the legal and honest vote of the State of Florida was cast for the Tilden electors, I would say if the commission had decided to go behind the State returns and take evidence, the republican party had nothing to fear from Florida even if they had decided to probe to the very bottom of the polls. And here I assert that any gentleman on this floor who will take the pains to analyze and consider the evidence upon which the conclusions of the majority of the committee on the Florida election are based will agree with me in saying that the greater portion of that testimony is utterly incompetent and inadmissible in any court of justice whatever. But, as my friend from Pennsylvania has told you, they insist in their report in counting the vote of Manatee County for Tilden because the prein counting the vote of Manatee County for Tilden because the pretended return from that county based on what might be justly termed a farce is regular on its face.

The testimony of the only witnesses who appeared before the committee was the county judge of Manatee, a democrat. He was introduced by themselves, he was not brought there at the request of the minority of the committee; and his evidence shows this state of facts: There was no registration in Manatee County, as required by law; there were no certified copies of the official lists of the registration in Manatee County. tion at each polling-precinct, as required by law. There were no polltion at each polling-precinct, as required by law. There were no polling-precincts designated and no notice of any designation of the polling-places, as required by law. There never was an inspector of election in any precinct appointed by the legally constituted authority, the county commissioners. But, in the language of their own witness, they were self-created and swore each other as to their qualifications. Now, was there any republican on any of these election boards? You tell us that all the election machinery of Florida was controlled by republicans, and that if any fraud was committed it must have been committed by the republicans. Was there a single republican official at any of the polls in Manatee County? Not one. What was the character of the notice given? Why, the testimony of the democratic county judge shows that the only sort of notice ever given was at two mass-meetings held by the democratic candidates for presidential electors. No notice was ever given to a single republican. Mr. Graham swears that 288 votes were east, out of eight hundred of a voting population. He tells us, too, that half of the voters did not come to the polls, because they thought there was no clerk. And it is in evidence before the State canvassing boards that 50 per cent. of the voters of that county kept away from the polls, regarding the election as a mere farce.

Now I submit to any democratic lawyer on the floor of the House if the right to a seat of a member of this body had to be determined upon the vote of Manatee County could that member retain his seat in case of a contest by a return based upon such facts about which there is no dispute? Yet they give 262 votes to the Tilden electors in that county and 26 to the electors on the republican ticket. And I say here that it is the solemn impression of every intelligent republican in the State of Florida that not one single republican vote was ever cast in that county. They did give us 26, for what purpose is known only to the men who made that county return. On which side, then, is the fraud? If there were any fraud it was perpetrated by the other side in that county, and it is useless for the majority to say that there was a couspiracy on the part of the republicans to defeat the Tilden electors in that county, because no clerk was appointed to fill the vacancy which existed by the governor of the State.

other side in that county, and it is useless for the majority to say that there was a conspiracy on the part of the republicans to defeat the Tilden electors in that county, because no clerk was appointed to fill the vacancy which existed by the governor of the State.

The testimony given by their own witness shows that as soon as the clerk of Manatee County resigned, which was five weeks before the election, his place was instantly filled by the republican governor of the State of Florida. And further it is shown by the evidence of the democratic county judge, Graham, that he saw the bond of the clerk and that the clerk took the oath of office before him. And still they say that it was owing to the conduct of the republican governor, Stearns, that the forms of law were not complied with in that county.

clerk and that the clerk took the oath of office before him. And still they say that it was owing to the conduct of the republican governor, Stearns, that the forms of law were not complied with in that county. What is the law applicable to that case? The other side contend that the return is regular and must be received. But they must know that all the legal decisions are uniform upon this point; that where legislative enactments require notice to be given of the time and place of the holding of elections, and require registration as a prerequisite to the right of voting, those requirements go to the very substance of the election, are mandatory and not directory, and a non-compliance with them vitiates the election. There is no doubt of the truth of this legal proposition. If that be true, how as a lawyer can the chairman of the committee or any other member of the majority of the committee claim that that return ought to be counted for the Tilden electors, when there was no notice of election, no designation of polling-precincts, no registration, and no inspectors appointed for the polls as required by law?

Now take the county of Jackson, which affords another illustration of the falsity of the charge that the election machinery of the State

Now take the county of Jackson, which affords another illustration of the falsity of the charge that the election machinery of the State of Florida was manipulated by the republicans. There is not a precinct in Jackson County at which the board of inspectors and clerks was not composed of three democrats and one republican. Furthermore, although under the law of Florida every county official outside of constable is appointed by the governor, there is in Jackson County not one republican county officer, although they were all appointed by Stearns, the republican governor.

Take the precinct of Friendship Church in that county. At that Take the precinct of Friendship Church in that county. At that precinct the democratic board of inspectors kindly gave to the republican party 44 votes and to the democratic party 145 votes. The evidence in that case shows that the only republican inspector of the board was delegated in the morning to go to the window and receive the tickets from the voters as they passed them up. The sill of that window was six and one-half feet from the ground. But it did not please the democratic officers of the board to have this republican officer handle the tickets. He was ordered down from the window and told to go and take charge of the registration-list. And contrary to law an outsider named Mozely was put in his place to receive the tickets from the voters at the window.

But that is not all. When this intruder Mozely took the tickets

But that is not all. When this intruder Mozely took the tickets he passed them back to another democrat, an inspector who stood between the ballot-box and the window, and the ballot-box was in such a place that no voter from the opening to the closing of the polls ever knew what became of the ballot that he passed in at the window.

There is no controversy about the truth of these statements. They are admitted by every democratic officer on the election board; they all tell you the same thing, and they say that, notwithstanding, it was a fair election.

When the polls were closed they took the ballot-box two miles distant to the house of a democratic supervisor. They went into a bedroom, took the ballots out of the box, and after counting 40 votes one of the democratic inspectors put his hand in his vest pocket and took out some votes which he said had been counted before the ballot-box was taken from the poll.

They then adjourned in direct violation of the law, which provides that the votes shall be counted at the place where they were cast, and without adjournment. They went to supper after making this partial count, leaving the ballot-box unguarded and unsealed. After coming back from supper they went in and counted the balance of the votes, and made out a return giving to the republicans 44 votes and to the democrats 145. The ballots were never replaced in the box, but were strewn about the floor in the bed-room of the house of the democratic supervisor.

The majority of the committee attempted to show that the colored men who voted at that poll were liable to be deceived by spurious tickets that were printed and circulated on the day of election. The republican ticket had a flag at the head of it, but the democratic ticket had no flag or device of any kind upon it. A spurious ticket was published, with a flag at the head of it, above the names of Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler, and then followed the names of the democratic electors and the democratic county officers. It was a good ruse, well calculated to deceive ignorant and illiterate colored men. But it did not succeed. I placed on the stand a democratic inspector of election just before we left Jackson County, who testified that no bogus ticket was ever found in that ballot-box when they counted the votes. There were sixty-six colored men who came upon the stand, and each and every one of them swore that he voted the straight republican ticket—the ticket that had the flag upon it. And no democrat living in the vicinity of that precinct ever claimed that there were more than two colored democrats who voted at Friendship Church. One of them came before our committee and testified. He was then in the employment of one of the democratic officers of election, and he swore that he voted the democratic ticket. At that very time I had in my pocket a copy of an affidavit to which his name was appended, in which he swore that at Friendship Church on the day of election he did vote the republican ticket. That was before any inducement was ever held out to him, before he was in the employment of the democratic supervisor.

Now, I ask democrats, if what I state be true, (and I defy contradiction, because the testimony is uniform, there being no discrepancy between that of the republicans and that of the democrats,) can you count the 145 majority for the Tilden electors? The democrats say that we can purge that poll. How? By adding the 44 republican votes to the 145 democratic votes and from the aggregate deducting the difference between the 44 republican votes and the number of colored men whom I put on the stand and who swore that they voted the republican ticket. I say that it is impossible to purge this poll; and I am surprised that any man dignified with the name of a lawyer should come forward and state in a report or otherwise that a poll can be purged in that way when such a state of facts as I have referred to has been developed. Why, sir, there is only one disposition in law that you can make of this poll under the facts. That the republican candidates were defrauded—to what extent we do not know—is clearly shown; but the irregularities were so gross, and the fraud so glaringly perpetrated, that every lawyer must know on reading the testimony that the entire poll must be rejected. You cannot ascertain the true vote there. No man can tell how many votes the Tilden electors received, or how many votes the Hayes electors received. Therefore I say that the poll ought to be rejected.

There was another poll in Jackson County called Port Jackson. There the majority of the board was composed of democrats; and when the polls opened one of the democratic officers in charge proclaimed to all the colored men present that any colored man who had ever been charged with crime, not convicted, would not be permitted to cast his ballot at that poll on that day. After that proclamation was made, two colored men came up and offered their votes. They were republican votes; and after the inspector had taken the ballots from them the officers of the election held a consultation and decided that those votes should not be received for the reason that the men had been suspected or accused of the commission of crime. One of those men said, "I have never been convicted of any crime in the State of Florida or elsewhere. I was once arrested for shooting a dog; but when the case was tried in a petty court I paid my lawyer a small fee and the case was thrown out." He asked to be sworn to the truth of his assertion; but they refused his request, and returned to him and the other republican voter their ballots.

Then four colored men came up and presented 4 republican votes. After the tickets were received another consultation was had; and again the inspectors came to the conclusion not to receive the votes for the reason, as they said, that the names of the voters could not be found on the registration-list. The colored men said, "We are registered;" and they gave the name of the officer before whom they had taken the oath as required by the registration law. As a matter of fact it turned out that their names were on the registration-list, and they had been registered by the officer whom they named. Still those votes were rejected. In other words, the democratic board of inspectors at Port Jackson precinct laid down the rule that nobody could vote there unless they saw proper to permit him to do so, regardless of his legal qualifications as a voter.

Another precinct in that county is called Campbellton. The ma-

Another precinct in that county is called Campbellton. The majority of the board there was composed of democrats. The testimony shows that so numerous were the colored and the white voters around the polls at the time it opened, eight o'clock in the morning, that the leading men of both parties entered into an arrangement by which it was agreed that the white men should vote the first hour in the morning and the colored men the next hour, and thus alternate until the closing of the polls. Most of the white vote was polled there in

The colored men took up every minute of their two ng during the morning. The testimony shows that in the morning. hours in voting during the morning. The testimony shows that in the forenoon the white vote was nearly all polled, and that seventy-six colored men cast their ballots in the afternoon. The return gives but seventy-seven republican votes—just one more than the number of colored men who cast their ballots in the afternoon. Now, it is not of colored men who cast their ballots in the afternoon. Now, it is not claimed by any democrat in Jackson County that more than fifteen colored men voted the democratic ticket at Campbellton precinct. The evidence of John McKenney, a democratic lawyer and candidate for the Legislature, who lives in that vicinity and is acquainted with the colored people and knows their political complexion, shows that there were not more than fifteen colored men who voted the democratic ticket that day. Now, if that be true, I ask the majority what became of the colored vote cast during the two hours in the morning? That yote remains unaccounted for. It is utterly imposmorning? That vote remains unaccounted for. It is utterly impossible to come to any other conclusion than that a fraud was perpetrated at that poll by the democratic board of inspectors.

Now, I admit that there was one colored witness that the majority impeached or believed that they had impeached. This was the witness that the witness the witness that the wit ness Crump Bowie, whose testimony it was deemed important to disprove. Three or four prominent citizens of the town of Mariana did come forward and swear that this man was not to be believed on oath, on the ground that his character for truth and veracity was not good. He had testified that during the recess at noon the ballot-box was contrary to law removed from the place where it was during the formoon into an adjoining store; that he sat on the steps of the storedoor, the ballot-box being abandoned out of the possession of the officer of the election and unsealed; that he heard the sound of footsteps within and voices speaking in a low tone. That was the dangerous part of his testimony which it was necessary to get rid of.

I do not know whether that man swore to the truth or not. But there is this much truth about his statement, that the ballot-box was removed into an adjoining store during the recess at twelve o'clock, and contrary to law it was left ungnarded, unprotected, and unsealed. Affidavits were filed before the canvassing board showing one hundred and thirty-two men voted the republican ticket at this

We have in Jackson County those evidences of fraud at various precincts, and besides, I ought to state, in other precincts in this county, although the witnesses were subpœnaed by the democratic deputy sergeant at-arms, still they refused to obey the subpœna issued at my instance, and therefore I was precluded from making as thorough an examination into the conduct of the election in Jackson County as I ought to have done as a member of the minority of the committee.

In reference to the return from the county of Hamilton, every man must admit who reads the testimony and knows the law governing the holding of elections that it should be rejected in counting for the Hayes or Tilden electors or any other candidate for office.

The testimony shows that at the largest precinct the votes were not counted by the officers of election, but by entire strangers, one of whom was the nephew of the democratic candidate for the State senate and who was successful at that election. Is there any security for the purity of elections if you allow four men of one political party, one of them the nephew of a candidate for office, to count the vote and keep the tally as at Jasper precinct? Not only that; when they came to make the returns they had a democratic lawyer ready for their purpose, who made them out and had them signed by the inspectors without reading the contents.

More than that; the testimony shows the republican officer, the when one of the board, was negligent in the performance of his duty. When one of those outsiders would take the vote from the ballot-box and read off the name he would fold it up, hand it to Smithson, the republican, who, in his supreme simplicity, never looked at the name on the ticket but put it folded into another box.

Contrary, to law they adjourned and carried the ballot-box several miles distant and placed it on a counter in a bar-room kept by a democratic inspector, who left it without any guard and went to sleep a hundred feet distant with another man. But two men did sleep in the bar-room where the ballot-box was, and they were candidates for office. The officer at nine o'clock the next morning took the box back to the place of voting, and then the democratic lawyer made out the return, the contents not known to any but himself. And now they come here with a majority report and say Jasper precinct must be counted for the Tilden electors!

But what does the democratic attorney-general of Florida, whose integrity as a man and ability as a lawyer have been so often commended by democratic organs, say when he came before the canvass-ing board, of which he was a member, in relation to Hamilton County ? Although I am a member of the democratic party, the frauds here in Hamilton County are so glaring that the return therefrom must be rejected.

Now I submit to you gentlemen who are charging fraud, can you Now I submit to you gentlemen who are charging frand, can you do otherwise than indorse the action of the democratic attorney-general in advocating the propriety of excluding the return from Jasper precinct, based as it is upon gross irregularity and fraud?

The minority of the committee concluded that the return from White Springs precinct, in Hamilton County, ought not to be counted for the Tilden electors, on the following ground?

The evidence shows the board of inspectors omitted in making out the return to insert therein the number of votes cast for the Hayes and Tilden electors. The return was duly signed and transmitted to the county seat of Hamilton County. Six days after the election the omission was discovered. When it was discovered a leading democrat gathered together the officers of the board, brought them at twelve o'clock at night to the county seat, and had them make out what was called a supplemental return.

We contend—the minority—as matter of law that the board of in-spectors having been dissolved after the returns had been signed and spectors having been dissolved after the returns had been signed and transmitted with the other papers to the county seat of Hamilton County, all their subsequent acts were null and void.

In reference to Jefferson County I have but a few words to say. That is a county that gave over 1,900 majority for the Hayes electors. Every precinct in that county where there was a suspicion of fraud was most thoroughly investigated. There I am free to say the majority of the election officers was republican. But I say that in no county in this country polling so many votes were fewer fraudulent votes discovered. And I say upon the testimony that there is not a basis for believing that ten men in that country voted the renot a basis for believing that ten men in that county voted the renot a basis for believing that ten men in that county voted the republican ticket unlawfully on election day. The majority claim, as they do in Duval County, according to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOPKINS,] that the republican officials ought to be censured because they voted convicts. Why, sir, a majority of the men charged with being convicted of crime in Jefferson County were only convicted of petty larceny, some of them being only fined a dollar and costs of court. Yet the majority of the committee say they are disfranchised for that reason. The language of the statute of Florida in relation to disconsilination on the ground of conviction of Florida in relation to disqualification on the ground of conviction is that when any man is convicted of perjury, bribery, felony, lar-ceny, or other infamous crimes he shall be disfranchised. Certainly no man on the floor of this House will hold petty larceny to be an infamous crime or a felony, as under the laws of the State of Florida it is only punishable by fine or imprisonment in the county jail. Felonies or infamous crimes are punishable with death or by imprisonment within the penitentiary of the State.

But they say that in Duval County the republicans voted a number of men confined in the county jail, and they cast damaging re-flections upon the republican officials of that county for so doing, Why did not the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell you, in commentwhy did not the genteman from remnsylvania terryon, incomment-ing upon that matter of Duval County, that these men who voted were disqualified and illegal voters? Every man confined in that jail was a legal voter. Out of sixteen there were thirteen men who were only awaiting trial and were not convicted; and there were three men convicted, but not sentenced. Is there any man on the floor of this House who will say that a verdict of a jury without the pronouncement of a sentence thereon disqualifies a man from voting? Certainly not. It is the judgment of the court that creates the disability, and not the mere verdict of the jury. Therefore every man who cast his vote on the day of election who was imprisoned in the county jail of Duval County cast his ballot lawfully, for he was a legal and qualified voter, and they do not claim the contrary in the majority report.

legal and qualified voter, and they do not claim the contrary in the majority report.

Now, in reference to Jefferson County they claim there that a large number of men voted the republican ticket illegally because their names appeared on the clerk's list at each poll and they did not appear on the registration-list. But the testimony on which that is based is entitled to little or no consideration. Why, sir, they placed upon the stand a man named Botts, the secretary of a democratic club, who swore he kept a private check-list at poll No. 8, and that at least twenty men on his check-list had voted there whose names vere not on the registration-list, and he was one of the most zealous and active democrats that I saw in Jefferson County. On a careful examination of the registration-list it showed that this man Botts was, to say the least, mistaken. More than half of the number of names of men which he swore were on his list and had voted illegally did appear on the registration list. But if a man voted at that poll did appear on the registration list. But if a man voted at that poll did appear on the registration list. But if a man voted at that poll whose name, for instance, was Fernandez, and he, Botts, should take it down as Hernandez, being deceived by the sound of the name, of course it was not the same man according to his testimony, because the name on the registration-list did not appear on his check-list. Now that is the sort of testimony practically relied upon to prove fraud at all those polls. And I say again that, if any democratic lawyer on the floor of the House has any desire to examine the testimony upon which the conclusions of the majority are reached, he will in my judgment come to the conclusion that the greater part will, in my judgment, come to the conclusion that the greater part of that testimony in relation to republican frauds is based upon tes-timony totally inadmissible either before the House of Representa-timony totally inadmissible either before the House of Representa-tives or any court of justice in the country.

Why, sir, to show you the character of the evidence taken by the majority, there was a long time consumed in taking evidence in rela-tion to a census taken by an executive committee of the democratic party for the purpose, I presume, of comparing the registration-list with the census list, in order to ascertain if there was an excess with the census list, in order to ascertain if there was an excess of names illegally placed on that registration-list. Now I submit to the other side of the House, is testimony competent in relation to a census taken by order of the executive committee of the democratic party? The law of Florida provides that the only way the census can be taken is by the assessors of each county, and that was the way the census was made. That was the only legal census. But the democrats of this committee believe that another census, taken illegally by men without authority, is more legal than the one required by law. With these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I leave the question.

Mr. DE BOLT. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this discussion, and had it not been for the most extraordinary speech made by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, I would not have attempted to make any remarks whatever. I shall devote the most of my time to the counties of Jackson and Jefferson, as under an agreement with the chairman of the committee I am to occupy the floor but a short time. but a short time.

One remark of the gentleman from Nevada, that a large amount of the testimony taken by this committee is not entitled to respect or even to be called evidence and would not be admissible in any court in the land, requires an answer. How he comes to that conclusion I must admit I am not able to conceive. The committee went to Florida with full power to summon before it witnesses. They did it, and those witnesses were examined and cross-examined as is usual in courts of justice. Why their statements made under such circumstances should not be taken as evidence I am unable to see. Do gentlemen conclude that ex parte affidavits taken by order of the returning board of the State of Florida should be accepted as evidence rather than the testimony of witnesses who are examined and cross-exthan the testimony of witnesses who are examined and cross-examined? These exparte affidavits were taken when the military were present. They were sent there for that purpose. They marched the colored voters up in platoons of six to sign these affidavits that had been written in Tallahassee. Deny that if you can. I speak from the record. These same colored men, when they were put upon the stand and the inquiry was made whether or not they had made the affidavits, each and every one of them said "No." But upon further examination upon asking them whether they had been to a certain affidavits, each and every one of them said "No." But upon further examination, upon asking them whether they had been to a certain place where these soldiers had congregated and signed a paper, they said "O, yes," they had signed a paper. They were then asked "Did you know what it was you signed?" The answer was "No." They were then asked "Was the paper read to you?" Again the answer was "No." The next question, "Was it written in your presence?" and the answer was, uniformly, "I saw no writing done there." They were asked "What kind of a written paper was it?" and the response was "It was a long list of names." The next question was "Did you sign your own name?" The answer was "No, I merely touched the pen." That is the kind of testimony that the minority of the committee would have us rely on instanting they had been to a certain place with the minority of the committee would have us rely on instanting they had been to a certain place where they had been to a certain place wh pen." That is the kind of testimony that the minority of the committee would have us rely on instead of the evidence of witnesses brought up and examined as they are in a court of justice.

But I shall pass from that question to the election in Jackson County, and especially to Friendship Church precinct. The report of the majority of the committee fully states the fact that at that precinct the ballot-box was placed out of sight of the voters at the time of the voting. The laws of Florida require that it should be placed in view of the voter. Admitting this irregularity, must the whole poll be set aside simply because the voters could not see the tallot-box, everything else connected with the election being fair? The evidence everything else connected with the election being fair? The evidence of Edmond Hayes, the republican colored inspector at that precinct, and by the way one of the most intelligent colored men that I met in the State of Florida, was that everything was fair, that every ballot received was placed in the box, that everything was done fairly and honestly. We have also the testimony of Henry Long, the republican United States inspector at that poll, who swears to the same thing, as do all the democratic officers of the election. It is true that when the polls were closed and the officers commenced their canvass of the votes they canvassed only 4 votes, and then because the house in which the poll was held was new and onen, with no windows house in which the poll was held was new and open, with no windows, no table, no light, nothing to eat, and no paper upon which to make their returns, all of which is sworn to by Edmond Hayes and others, they went to Mozley's, two miles away, to complete the canvass; and they further swear that the reason why they did not stop short of they further swear that the reason why they did not stop short of Mozley's was because those who lived nearer were very poor and could not afford any convenience to count the ballots or furnish the paper on which to make the return; that they could not even furnish light. They went to Mozley's in order to secure the necessary conveniences, first locking the box, Henry Long, a republican, carrying the key, and placing the box in a buggy with Edmond Hayes, a republican, and Dr. Bryan, a democrat. There were eight or ten by-standers present when they started with the box, five of whom followed to Mozley's. When the gentleman from Nevada says that nobody knows anything about this counting except the officers of the election, he is anything about this counting except the officers of the election, he is far from the truth. If gentlemen will read upon page 297 of the record they will there find the names of the men who accompanied record they will there find the names of the men who accompanied the officers, and not only that but these men went there and witnessed the canvass. The law of Florida requires that the canvass shall be public. All the inspectors swear that it was public and that these men passed in and out of the room where it took place at their pleasure. There were found in the box 189 ballots, 145 of which were democratic and 44 republican. All the inspectors signed the return; but when it became known that the State was very close, then troops were called for, were sent into that county, and these negroes marched up in squads of half a dozen at a time to sign the affidavits. Those affidavits were taken before the returning board of the State, and my friends of the minority, who make so much complaint of having no opportunity to see the affidavits, had those very affidavits in their pockets and had the opportunity of examining them. I assert what I know to be the fact. They examined the affidavits in relation to the vote in Jackson County, and I know that the gentleman who has just taken his seat remarked in his speech that he examined the affidavit of the colored man Crump Bowie who swore that he had voted the democratic ticket, thus admitting he had in his possession the affidavits and contradicting the statement that they could not see them. Out of his own mouth let him stand condemned.

Now, I ask, will gentlemen of the minority claim that the return from Friendship Church precinct should be excluded from the count simply because of these irregularities, when there is no fraud either actual or apparent proven upon the part of the officers, and all of them swore it was a fair election? When you come to examine the matter I admit that sixty-three colored men came up and swore that they voted the republican ticket at that precinct. Now what is to be done? Throw out the whole return? Count but the 63 votes? Is that fair? Would it not rather appear to the mind of every honest-thinking man that those colored men were mistaken as to the ballot they voted? Not one of them could read, or perhaps but one or two; with that exception none of them could read. All the way they knew that it was a republican ticket was simply because it had they knew that it was a republican ticket was simply because it had they knew that it was a republican ticket was simply because it had a flag on it. Many of them voted the flag.

The law concerning elections, as laid down in all of the books by all of the courts is something like this: that wherever a poll can be purged of illegal votes, or the true vote ascertained with reasonable certainty, it is the duty of the tribunal trying the case to ascertain the true vote and give it effect. Now, apply that rule to this precinct, and what is our duty under the law? It is to take the 63 resubblications were from the total of 150 percent. publican votes from the total of 189 votes cast, which would give the democrats 126 votes.

In that connection I want to take up the matter of Jefferson County and show to this House and to the country how consistent, O, how very consistent the minority of this committee are in their adjudicavery consistent the minority of this committee are in their adjudication of these cases. At poll No. 1 in Jefferson County, the morning after the election and after the votes had been counted, 10 democratic votes were found in the ballot-box. The return shows but 5 democratic votes and 570 republican votes. Ten men came up and swear that they voted the democratic ticket at this poll; not one of them is contradicted. Fortunately after the ballots had been counted they were placed back in the box and kept overnight. There is no provision of law in the State of Florida for the preservation of the ballots after they have been counted; they can be thrown to the four winds. But fortunately in this precinct after they had been canvassed they were replaced in the ballot-box, and in the morning after the election 10 democratic ballots were found in the box, showing that there had been a miscount. All swear that the voting was fair and honest. and honest.

How were the ballots canvassed? They were spread out on a table and counted off in packages of 25, then doubled and the clerk would tally one for every package of 50 votes. The canvass of 575 votes was made in less than two hours, thus showing that from the rapid and careless manner in which the count was made the mistake

Now what shall we do with this return? Apply the rule which my friends on the minority want to apply to Friendship Church? Or shall we not rather count 565 votes for the republicans, and 10 votes for the democrats? The majority say they will apply the same rule to that precinct they propose to apply to Friendship Church. They will claim 10 democratic votes and will give to the republicans 565 votes. That is fair, reasonable, and just, and is in harmony with the law governing such cases, as declared by the courts of the country. Let us pursue this subject a little further. When you come to poll No. 8, Jefferson County, you will find from the evidence that the ballotbox was concealed so that the voter could not see it at the time of voting. When we come to count the ballots and compare them with the number of names on the clerk's list we find that there were 514 the number of names on the clerk's list we find that there were 514 names on the clerk's list and only 504 ballots and two cotton receipts, making in all 506 pieces of paper in the box.

Mr. WOODBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. DE BOLT. I believe nobody interrupted you to ask a question.
Mr. WOODBURN. I was willing to be interrupted.
Mr. DE BOLT. Very well; I will yield.
Mr. WOODBURN. Does not the testimony in relation to the poll No. 1 of Jefferson County show the fact that on the day succeeding the election 10 democratic votes were found in the ballot-box instead of 5, and was not the ballot-box in the mean time in an exposed place?

Mr. DE BOLT. I only referred to that as a corroborative circum-

If the gentleman had listened he would have heard me say that there was no law in Florida providing for the preservation of the ballots after they were counted. But ten men came up and swore the ballots after they were counted. But ten men came up and swore that they voted the democratic ticket. And to corroborate their statement I said that ten democratic votes were found in the ballot-box the next morning. That is what I said, and I say so now. I do not claim that ten democratic votes should be counted simply because that number was found in the box the next morning. But I said that that circumstance corroborated the testimony of the ten men who swore that they voted the democratic ticket. Of those ten men nine were white, and three or four of them were lawyers, and all of them understood what they were doing. And they all swore that they voted at that precinct and voted the democratic ticket. The republican clerk had possession of the ballot-box all the time after the close of the polls and after the count was made until the next morning. next morning.

Now, in regard to the ballot-box at poll No. 8. That was concealed from the view of the voters at the time of voting. No one could see what became of his ballot. When they came to compare the number of ballots in the box with the names upon the list, they found that there were 504 ballots and two cotton receipts in the box, and there were 514 names on the clerk's list. It is called poll-list by some; one section of the law calls it the clerk's list and another the some; one section of the law calls it the clerk's list and another the poll-list. It is the list of the names of the voters written down by the clerk when the voter's name is announced by the inspector who receives his ballot. Five witnesses agree precisely as to the number of ballots found in the box. They counted them over five times. Four democrats, who were present at the time of counting, say that the result came out 504 tickets and two cotton receipts every time. When they came to open and canvass them, they found two double tickets, or tickets folded together; and the republicans counted even them, though the law required that they should both be destroyed. Counting those two double tickets, there were 506 ballots in the box. The colored supervisor said that he believed the first count was 504; the second count he did not recollect; the third count got up to 506 and 508 and finally 510, and the last time they got it up to 512. Smythe, the republican inspector, says it was 504 the first time, but that it increased each count thereafter until it reached 512. If they had kept on until this time, I have no doubt Hayes would have carried the State by a large majority. by a large majority by a large majority.

But they wanted to make the number of ballots in the box agree with the number of names on the clerk's list. Smythe, the man who did the writing, found that he lacked 6 votes, and he said he was going to tack on 6. He was asked, "How are you going to add them? How many are you going to give to the democrats and how many the republicans?" "O," says he, "I will fix that." When the canvass was completed and the returns made out he added 6; making the return show 493 republican ballots instead of 487, the number in

This is proven by the evidence of five witnesses, two of whom were disinterested by standers and lookers-on. Smythe is the only man who denies it. Anderson, one of the inspectors who signed the report, said that he was old and could not see very well; that he did not said that he was old and could not see very well; that he did not have his spectacles with him; that he thought the return contained the figures 485 or he would not have signed it, but that it was not read to him. Dr. Bryan, Saunders, and Turnbull swear to the same; several others of those standing around swear to the same state of facts. But when the return is opened by the county canvaşsers, it contains 493 republican votes, so as to make the vote agree with the number of names on the clerk's list.

Now this was a hold and decime found when the county can be a contained to the contained to the contained to the contain

Now this was a bold and daring fraud upon the part of Smythe. But we do not ask the throwing out of the whole poll, although there were but 19 democratic ballots returned to 493 republican. Twenty-three men come up and swear that they voted the democratic ticket at that precinet. But, notwithstanding all these irregularities, together that precinct. But, notwithstanding all these irregularities, together with the frauds committed by Smythe, the majority did not even ask the throwing out of the poll. Although the addition made by Smythe falsified the returns and was done with a corrupt purpose of forcing the number of ballots to agree with the number of names on the clerk's list, yet the number added is definitely stated by the witnesses to be 6, and deducting this number, with the double tickets, and the 4 additional democratic votes proven, together with the 19 democratic votes returned, from the whole number of ballots in the bex, then adding the 4 democratic votes proven to the 19 returned, we ascertain adding the 4 democratic votes proven to the 19 returned, we ascertain the true result of the election at this precinct.

This is fair. But apply the rule that my friend from Nevada wants to apply to Friendship church, and the republicans will lose 493 votes, while the democrats will save 23, because we proved them. But we desire to do justice in this matter. Yes, as my friend from Minnesota says, we went to Florida for a purpose. I admit it; but it was for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting the facts in connection with the election in that State; not, as the report and speeches of the minority would indicate their purpose. Ic over up fraud to nection with the election in that State; not, as the report and speeches of the minority would indicate their purpose, to cover up fraud, to misstate the facts, to apply one rule to one precinct and a different rule to another, thereby forcing a majority for their party. Mr. Speaker, apply the rule adopted by the minority in regard to Friendship church to all three of those precincts where a similar state of facts exists, and the democratic party will gain over a thousand votes, as I will more fully show before I close.

Now let us return to Campbellton precinct, Jackson County, and notice the evidence of Crump Bowie.

The gentlemen of the minority rely upon the testimony of one Crump Bowie, a colored witness, to establish the fact that the ballot-box was tampered with during the dinner-hour. I here cite his testimony on that point, which is a fair sample of his evidence on other points, and leave the question of its credibility to the House and the country.

By Mr. WOODBURN:

Question. When they were away at dinner did you hear any noise?
Answer. Yes, sir; I heard some noise when they were gone to dinner.
Q. What did you hear?
A. I heard somebody walking about in the room, and I heard somebody whispering in there when they were gone to dinner.

Cross-examined by Mr. DE BOLT:

Q. Was there a collection of colored men around the door or window at which the voting took place?

A. Yes, sir; there was a heap of them around there.

Q. Were they laughing and talking during the dinner-hour?

A. Yes, sir; they had a regular hurrah around there during the dinner-hour; some were patting and dancing; some were laughing; some were whistling; some played a few verses.

Q. From where you were sitting how far was it to the window or door at which the voting took place?

A. It was about four and a half fact to the window.

It was about four and a half feet to the window and two and a half feet from

Q. They were making considerable noise?

A. Some were and some were not. I wasn't paying much attention, because I didn't notice the band that was around there.

This witness claims to have been sitting within seven feet of the door or window at which the ballots were received, with a large number of colored persons collected there, laughing, talking, patting, dancing, whistling, a band playing, and, as he says. a "regular hurrah," and amid all this noise and confusion he could hear whispering of persons in the room where the ballot-box was left. In addition to this a number of reputable witnesses testify to his bad character for truth was surprised that he did not think of what he stated while the case was under investigation. When his man Gaston was on the stand, was under investigation. When his man Gaston was on the stand, my friend became convinced that those men were perjuring themselves. He so stated at the time; he thereupon abandoned the further prosecution of the case, withdrew all objections, and ordered the sergeant-at-arms to discharge his witnesses. In support of this declaration, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a statement made by a gentleman of the highest honor who was present and who was not one of the members of the committee conducting the investigation.

The Clerk read as follows:

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., February 10, 1877.

Washington, D. C., February 10, 1817.

Dear Sir: On December 29, 1876, when your committee were investigating the conduct of the election in Jackson County, Florida, there were over one hundred and twenty witnesses present at Mariana, in obedience to summons issued by direction of Hon. William Woodburs, all of whom were colored men, residents of the county, and said to have voted at Campbellton precinct. Mr. Woodburs placed upon the witness stand one James Gaston, and examined him as to the action of the election officers at Campbellton precinct, and particularly as to the statement of one Crump Bowie, concerning alleged manipulations of the ballots. During the cross-examination of Gaston by Mr. Walling, Mr. Woodburs interrupted with the following remark: "Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to pursue the examination into Campbellton any further, and will not rest my case upon the testimony of a perjurer. If my party expect this of me they are mistaken. Either one or the other of these two niggers have lied. I abandon the examination into Campbellton precinct and ask that all the witnesses from that point be discharged." Whereupon the witnesses were discharged and paid.

I am, sir, very respectfully yours,

WILLIAM DICKSON, Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms.

Hon. R. A. De Bolt, Ohairman Subcommittee Florida Election.

Mr. DE BOLT. In connection with that and in further support of my remarks, I now hold in my hand a certified list of witnesses who were present from that precinct. At the time the gentleman from Nevada, the minority member of the committee, made the remarks which have just been read at the Clerk's desk he had one hundred and eight witnesses present; that is the number certified by the Sergeantat-Arms. We had seven. Why did he not call his witnesses and examine them? It was because he became convinced that those men were lying to him. But in his report he writes up Campbelly and the server has been as the server of the writes up Cambbelly and the server has been men were lying to him. But in his report he writes up Cambbelly and the server has been men were lying to him. were lying to him. But in his report he writes up Campbellton precinct. He does not dare to say in his speech or in his report that that evidence was true, because he knew to the contrary; but he says, "If it was true, what became of the seventy-six ballots?" It was during his examination of Gaston, one of those seventy-six men who he claims voted in the afternoon, that he became convinced that his colored brethren were lying to him. Yet the gentlemen of the minority both certify to it and ask the country to receive it as an established fact, when their own statements made at the time show conclusively they did not believe it themselves. They did not have the hardihood to base their statements in their report on the testimony before this committee, but adopted a report written for them, or copied by them, from a report of a committee sent from the other end of the Capitol whose evidence was taken in secret and not entitled

A MEMBER. Who?

Mr. DE BOLT. O, they know very well who it is. If the gentlemen really believed that one hundred and thirty-three colored men had voted the republican ticket at this precinct, I ask them in all candor why it was they did not swear and examine them? They had one hundred and eight of them present but abandoned the case and ordered their discharge.

I will say in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. Dunnell,] who made the bald assertion that we had in our possession all those affidavits, all the evidence, all those telegrams before the returning board, that I never saw one of them. On the contrary, they were ing locard, that I never saw one of them. On the contrary, they were in the hands of the friend of the gentleman from Minnesota, McLin, or in the hands of his other friend, Cowgill. You had the privilege of consulting them at your pleasure. We could not do it. I never saw one of them. Your friend and brother member of the committee while in Jackson County had copies or the original affidavits in his pocket and would not show them to us.

Mr. THOMPSON. He had the originals.
Mr. DE BOLT. Yes, sir; he had the originals, my friend on the left says. Talk about evidence being concealed! You cannot say you were ever prevented from subpænaing a single witness; you cannot say you asked to go anywhere to investigate that you were refused. I wait for reply.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will say this to the honorable gentleman, the minority never made a motion that was not voted down.

Mr. DE BOLT. I say you never asked to go anywhere—I repeat it and I challenge you for a denial—you never asked to go anywhere that you were refused.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have made my reply.

Mr. DE BOLT. I say you never suggested, you never asked to subpæna a witness but the subpæna went out. Yes, sir, in every case; yet they come here and raise the whining cry they could not have the pcena a witness but the subpcena went out. Yes, sir, in every case; yet they come here and raise the whining cry they could not have the evidence they desired. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to say one word.

Mr. DE BOLT. No, I do not propose to be interrupted. I asked the gentleman for reply and he refused.

I must say I was led to believe after these occurrences in Florida and the statements made since our return by the minority member of and the statements made since our return by the inthorty member of the committee outside of the House—I say I was induced to believe not one word would be said against the counting of Campbellton precinct, Jackson County. I merely referred to it in the report, and I will read the language I used:

Your committee examined into the manner of conducting the election at this precinct and found everything fair. This f. irness was so apparent that the republican member of the subcommittee making the examination waived all objection to its being counted as returned.

I was in hope I would be able to see to-day the reporter who accompanied the committee and was present at the time; but I learn he is out of the city, or else he would have signed the paper which was read at the Clerk's desk, signed by the deputy sergeant-at-arms.

Now, Mr. Speaker, admitting all the irregularities of which I have spoken, and there are many others that other gentlemen have canvassed, yet by purging the polls of all fraudulent and illegal votes ascertained to have been cast, then counting the vote as any court would have counted it upon the testimony, and we find the Tilden electors received 543 majority. But apply the doctrine contended for by the minority of the committee and reject Friendship Church, Jackson County, polls No. 1 and No. 8 in Jefferson County, poll No. 13 in Leon County, and Archer precinct No. 2 in Alachua County, and the Tilden electors have 1,600 majority.

The majority of the committee, however, felt that they were to act fairly in this matter; to ascertain the facts and make a report of the legal votes cast at the election as justice and equity would dictate, and by so doing the Tilden electors would have 543 majority in the State.

Mr. Speaker, a word in regard to Manatee County. My friends of Mr. Speaker, a word in regard to Manatee County. My friends of Mr. Speaker, a word in regard to Manatee County. My friends of the minority asserted emphatically that Judge Graham while on the stand, said the election precincts had not been established by the county commissioners. They stated that not a single inspector had been appointed by the county commissioners previous to the election, as the law required. Judge Graham said right the reverse; that the polling-places were established; that the officers of election were appointed by the county commissioners. You will find that in his testimony, and I dare you to contradict it.

I will read from his testimony as it appears in the RECORD:

Question. Did the county commissioners of Manatee County create or designate Question. Did the county commissioners of Manates County create or desivoting-places?

Answer. Yes, sir,
Q. Were the inspectors appointed by the county commissioners?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was the notice of the election given according to the laws of Florida?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. By whom was the notice given?
A. By the county commissioners.
Q. What office do you hold?
A. County judge.

Further than that, the evening before we left Jacksonville, Florida, not wishing to be detained longer, it was positively agreed and understood between all the members of the committee that a certified copy of the record of the county commissioners of Manatee County when received should go in and be made a part of our record. That certificate reached the hands of the chairman Saturday last, if I remember correctly, and shows conclusively that polling places and inspectors of elections were designated and appointed by the county commissioners as the law direct. A meeting the accommissioners as the law direct. tors of elections were designated and appointed by the county commissioners as the law directs. A meeting of the committee was at once called for Monday morning at nine and a half o'clock; and what was the action of the gentleman when we came together? How did he redeem his pleged word? When the certified copy of the record was presented the gentleman from Minnesota voted to reject it, notwith-standing the positive agreement he had entered into before leaving Florida. That shows what those gentlemen went to Florida for. They went for a purpose. He voted against receiving this certificate from Manatee thereby violating a positive agreement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is conceded by every fair-minded man, it is conceded by every republican I have found in Florida with whom I conversed on the subject, that on the face of the returns Tilden has 90 majority in the State.

90 majority in the State.

You heard it stated by one republican here to-day on the floor, and we could mention many others with whom we have conversed that substantiate that statement. But, say the republicans, just as my friend from Nevada and my friend from Minnesota, admitting the fraud you cannot go behind it and inquire into it. I say that not only the action of the members of this committee but the action of the joint high commission for the first time in the history of the world, has established the monstrous doctrine that where fraud is charged upon one side and admitted on the other you cannot inquire into it. I say it is a monstrous doctrine. The republicans admit the fraud, but shield themselves behind the action of the corrupt returning board of Florida.

board of Florida.

The supreme court construes the statute that the returning board had no judicial authority; they had no right to take testimony. So the supreme court of Florida has decided. But here is the hole the minority want to creep out at. Let me show you how small it is. They say that the electors were not parties to that suit. I admit it. What was in controversy? Why, sir, the construction of the statute under which that board was acting. That alone was before the court, no matter who brought it there. Their construction was all the same, was final; and their construction of that statute settles the powers of the beard not only as to Governor Drew but as to the electors; while the board not only as to Governor Drew but as to the electors; while they were not known in that suit, the construction of the statute if it applied to Drew and to Stearns applied as well to the electors. That whole canvass was declared null and void; and then they state in their decision that the board shall count Baker, shall count Manatee, shall count Clay, shall count Monroe, and Jackson. They name those counties especially.

Now they get round it by saying, "O, the electors were not parties to the suit." But before those electors acted, before they cast their ballots, before they met, the writ of quo warranto was served on their ballots, before they met, the writ of quo varranto was served on them, and jurisdiction of their persons was obtained by the service of the writ. It is true, as stated by my friend on my right on yesterday, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD,] the board completed their canvass at three o'clock in the morning, and at twelve o'clock those electors were to assemble and cast their vote. Now, because the supreme court did not assemble from distant parts of the State, because they did not convene try the case, and render final State, because they did not convene, try the case, and render final judgment before the electors met and cast their vote, because the court did not do all this in nine hours, it is decided by the commission, and the report of the minority committee is to the same effect, that they were functus officio—they had discharged their duty, and you cannot inquire into frauds admitted. Why, sir, the court had jurisdiction of their persons before they acted, obtained it by the service of the writ, and when jurisdiction is once acquired the court retains it until final judgment is rendered. Every lawyer can tell you that.

And I might add further, that every act of the party pertaining to the subject-matter in controversy, performed by the person over whom jurisdiction has been acquired between the service of the writ and the rendering of final judgment, is more or less affected by such final action.

Mr. Speaker, I fear that I am trespassing on the time of another.

Mr. THOMPSON rose.

Mr. THOMPSON rose.

[Mr. Conger] for a suggestion after I make a motion. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts if it is intended to have a vote to-night?

Mr. CONGER. I have talked with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Hopkins] in regard to that and it was proposed that the vote should be taken some time to-morrow, at one o'clock or two o'clock, when there is a full House, the previous question being ordered to-night, unless there be some objection to that, of which I am not aware. Mr. CONGER. I think after the seconding of the previous question the debate should be finished to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to disposing of this matter to-night. The gentleman having charge of the naval appropriation bill will move at the earliest moment to-morrow that the House go into Committee of the Whole, to proceed with the consideration of that bill. and considering the importance of proceeding with that bill as soon as it is printed—and it will be printed to-morrow in the CONGRESS-IONAL RECORD—I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] will consent to finish this question to-night.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not consent to that. The hour is now too late to allow the question to be disposed of to-night. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thompson] to yield for a motion to take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock with the understanding that a further recess will then be taken till five minutes to twelve o'clock.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1139) to change the time of holding the October term of the United States district court for the district of Nebraska; and An act (S. No. 1141) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the objection made this morning to the printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of certain remarks by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILLIAMS] has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. SAMPSON,] who made the objection. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none, and the leave is granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WADDELL. I would inquire of the Chair whether under the resolution adopted by the House yesterday any ordinary business can be taken up before twelve o'clock?

The SPEAKER. A recess to the next day continues the session of the day, so that there will be to-morrow two hours of this day from ten o'clock until twelve, and then the recess will be taken, which, in ordinary times, would be an adjournment. But by reason of the electoral bill, under which the House is compelled to take only a recess, the business of Wednesday will begin at twelve o'clock, so far as the business of the House is concerned.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask the House, by unanimous consent, to take up a concurrent resolution of the Senate, now upon the Speaker's table, and pass it, which will save us from any of these quan-

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That during the sessions of the commission appointed under the act to provide and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877, each calendar day when legislative business shall have been transacted shall by each House, when in session, be considered a day for legislative purposes and the Journals of the two Houses shall be so kept and dated.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution of the Senate was taken from the Speaker's table, and concurred in.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLOSSAL STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States: To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The accompanying memorial is transmitted to Congress at the request of a committee, composed of many distinguished citizens of New York, recently appointed to co-operate with a generous body of French citizens who design to erect in the harbor of New York a colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world." Very little is asked of us to do, and I hope that the wishes of the memorialists may receiv-your very favorable consideration.

The Clerk read the memorial, as follows:

To ULYSSES S. GRANT, President of the United States:

President of the United States:

The undersigned, a general committee appointed at a meeting of citizens of New York to co-operate with a generous body of French citizens who design to erect in the harbor of this city a colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world," respectfully request your concurrence. They have been informed of your sympathy in the patriotic purpose, and they desire that you would present the project to Congress in such way and manner as may seem most fitting to you. They would suggest, however, that if consistent with your sense of duty, they would be very much gratified if you would consent to transmit the inclosed memorial to both Houses of Congress. ouses of Congress. #### Memorial.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, a general committee representing a large body of American citizens, beg leave to direct your attention to the project of the French people for commemorating the hundredth anniversary of American Independence by the erection of a colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world," in the harbor of New York.

This statue, to be wrought in bronze, will be one hundred feet high, surmounting a pedestal of nearly equal height, and is already in process of execution. It was designed by the eminent French sculptor M. Bartholdi, has met the approval of distinguished artists, and will be forwarded at the expense of the French people, who have already subscribed to it with sufficient liberality to insure its completion. Many of the foremost gentlemen of France, some of whose names are intimately connected with our early annals and endeared to our memories, have taken an earnest and active part in the work with a view to do honor to the ancient alliance and to cement the present friendship and union of the two Republics.

All that is demanded of us is the assignment of a site on one of the islands in the harbor of New York belonging to the United States and the proper inauguration of the statue when it shall have been received. Voluntary subscriptions by the public at large will provide the pedestal and the labor necessary to the placing and crection of this most generous gift.

We therefore ask of your honorable bodies the passage of a law authorizing the proper Department to set off sufficient ground for the purpose on either Bedloe or Governor's Islands, and to provide for its future maintenance as a beacon, and to instructs its agents in such duties as may pertain to the perpetual care and preservation of this grand monument of art and of the friendly feelings of two great nations.

The enterprise is so honorable to the kindly dispositions of the French people.

The enterprise is so honorable to the kindly dispositions of the French people, so flattering to our own national pride, and so likely to be productive of generous results in both nations, that we are sure it will require no further words from us to commend it to your warm approval.

ommend it to your warm approved. M. M. EVARTS.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I move that the message, with the accompanying memorial, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that it should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The property asked for is on a military reservation. All it asks is a part of a military reservation in the harbor of New York.

of New York.

The SPEAKER. It relates to the erection of a statue to liberty by a foreign country. It seems to the Chair that anything that relates to the intercourse of citizens of foreign countries with this country should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. THORNBURGH. If the Chair will allow me, I move to refer the message and accompanying documents to the Committee on Military Affairs. This is a petition from citizens of New York asking for a piece of land on one of the islands of New York, which are Government reservations for the erection of this statue.

ment reservations, for the erection of this statue.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee by substituting the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to; and the motion, as amended, was adopted.

The message was accordingly referred to the Committee on For-eign Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that there be an understanding that when the House shall re-assemble to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, a further recess shall then be taken until five minutes before twelve o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to object to that.
Mr. CONGER. I think that the condition of the public business requires that I should object.

VETO MESSAGE-ALFRED ROWLAND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read: To the House of Representatives:

I have the honor to return herewith without my approval House bill No. 3367, entitled "An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Alfred Rowland."

The reasons for withholding my signature may be found in the accompanying report received from the Secretary of War.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. Sargent, Mr. Dorsey, and Mr. Merrimon.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. Allison, Mr. Windom, and Mr. Bogy. Mr. WINDOM, and Mr. Bogy.

DEFECTIVE LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have been engaged for ten days past, while the House has been in session, upon the select committee on the duties, powers, and privileges of the House in the counting of the electoral vote. By the way, that will account for my absence several times when votes have been taken in the House. I ask now unanimous consent to report for consideration at this time a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, which will take but a few minutes to dispose of. It is House bill No. 4315, for the relief of the holders of defective entries of land.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections to its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases where an entry has been or may be made by any persons, other than corporations, in good faith, at the proper local land office, of any tract of land lawfully subject to entry, which may be informal, irregular, defective, or void, and whenever such entry shall be canceled, the person or persons having made such entry, their heirs, devisees, or assigns, shall have the first and preferable right to make a lawful entry of, and procure a patent for, such lands, within one year after notice of such cancellation as herein required; but nothing herein shall divest any right heretofore acquired.

Whenever any entry or patent shall be canceled, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall give notice thereof by mail, if practicable, to the person claiming the land under such entry, or, if it be impracticable to ascertain the name and post-office address of such person, then notice shall be given by publication in such manner as said Commissioner may deem proper.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office shall have power to prescribe all proper rules and regulations to carry this act into effect.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will state that I have here a letter from the

Mr. COX. That bill is all right.
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does this bill come from the Committee on Public Lands on Public Lands?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It does not; it comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, but it has the indorsement of the acting chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, Judge GOODIN.

Mr. SAYLER. I think this bill should be considered by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It has the indorsement of Judge GOODIN, who during the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] has been the acting chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONGER. I think this bill had better lie over. Some time subsequently,

Mr. CONGER said: From what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] has stated to me, I will withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill in regard to defective entries of land.

Mr. WALLING. I renew the objection.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope not; the bill is all right.

Mr. RUSK. Do not object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

WING-DAMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on Captain Bell's process for building wing-dams; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I must now insist upon my motion that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps eleven o'clock will be too early an hour to take the vote on the pending resolution from the select committee on the election in Florida, and that will be the time for taking the vote if the debate proceeds from ten o'clock to-morrow morning. I therefore ask unanimous consent that there be an understanding that when the House re-assembles to-morrow morning at ten o'clock a further recess bring the resolution to a vote at twelve o'clock. That will bring the resolution to a vote at twelve o'clock.

Mr. CONGER. To that I have no objection.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Bright, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at ten o'clock a. m Wednesday, February 14.

Mr. CLYMER. There being no quorum present, I make the motion that the House take a further recess till five minutes before eleven

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House take a further recess till five minutes before twelve o'clock.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think that debate on the pending question ought to go on. There will be a full House here at twelve o'clock when we come to vote; and probably a quorum may be here in a few minutes. To take another recess now would be wasting a great deal of time. I think we ought to go on.

CORRECTION.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I rise to what I believe is considered a question of privilege. I observe that I am recorded in the Congressional Record as not voting upon the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] to the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Field] dissenting from the report of the electoral commission upon the Florida case. I did vote, and most emphatically voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The Record will be corrected. The Journal is RECESS.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. KNOTT for a recess until five minutes before twelve, there were—ayes 12, noes 7.

The SPEAKER. The motion is agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does the Chair decide that less than a quorum can take a recess. I presume the Chair is aware that the Digest and the Rules are against such a decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that in the present condition of business a recess is equivalent to adjournment, and has been so held by the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Has the Chair so held previously?
The SPEAKER. According to the Chair's recollection, that has been the ruling.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then it is too late to raise the point now.

The motion being agreed to, a recess was accordingly taken.

At five minutes before twelve o'clock m. the House re-assembled.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOUTH OF PASCAGOULA RIVER.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi in favor of an appropriation by Congress to deepen the water at the mouth of Pascagoula River; which was read as follows, and referred to the Committee on Com-

A memorial to the Congress of the United States.

A memorial to the Congress of the United States.

Whereas there now exists a large and growing trade at the port of Pascagoula, in this State, in lumber, spars, and timber, there having cleared from that port, from the year 1872 to 1876 inclusive, five hundred and five vessels for ports in the United States, Europe, United Kingdom, Argentine Republic, Spanish, British, and French West Indies, of a total tonnage of 137,900 tons burden, carrying 120,000,000 feet of lumber, valued at about $15,000,000, inclusive of a large amount shipped to New Orleans and other domestic ports within the Gulf of Mexico;

And whereas there are large forests of yellow-pine timber in the southern portion of this State capable of increasing the commerce of the country and the wealth of the State, and thereby the revenue of the same;

And whereas there are a number of streams running through those forests, to wit, Dog, Chickasaha, and Leaf Rivers, Black. Red, Bonie, Tallahala, and Boguehoma Creeks, and numerous other smaller streams, the combined length of which is over twelve hundred miles;

And whereas these streams all converge, forming the Pascagoula River, which river enters the Mississippi Sound at the port of Pascagoula;

And whereas there is a bar at the mouth of said river, which greatly impedes the commerce of the port of Pascagoula;

And whereas the deepening of the water at the mouth of said river would greatly increase the commerce of the port and the revenues of the State and of the United States;

And whereas an engineer of the General Government, appointed for the purpose, has made a survey of the work necessary to be done and estimated the cost of it: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to use all honorable means to secure an appropriation from the Government of the United States to deepen the water at the mouth of Pascagoula River, a work greatly desired and needed by the citizens of the State.

Resolved, second, That the secretary of state be instructed to forward certified copies of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

REMOVAL OF SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. MORGAN, by unanimous consent, presented a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, instructing her Senators and requesting her Representatives to oppose the removal of the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI, 88

STATE OF MISSOURI, ss:

I, Michael K. McGrath, secretary of state of the State of Missouri, hereby certify that the annexed pages contain a full, true, and complete copy of a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled, "Concurrent resolution instructing Senators and Members of Congress to prevent the romoval of Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory," approved February 9, 1817, as appears by comparing the same with the original roll of said resolution now on file, as the law directs, in this office. the removal of Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory.

Whereas an attempt is being made by parties acting under some pretended authority from the Government of the United States to remove the savage tribes of Sioux Indians from their present location and to settle them in the Indian Territory, bordering on the States of Missouri, Kansas, Texas, and Arkansas;

And whereas by such removal and the location of said savage tribes in the said Indian Territory great injustice and injury would be done to the cause of civilization and to the trade and business of Saint Louis and Kansas City;

And whereas by locating the said wild tribes of Indians in the Territory a large area of the most fertile and productive lands of the Southwest would be permanently withdrawn from settlement or occupation by any useful class of citizens and converted into a haunt of marauders and outlaws, to the serious detriment and period the inhabitants upon our western borders:

Resolved by the house of representatives, the senate concurring therein,) That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress requested to use all their influence to prevent the removal of said tribes to the said Indian Territory, Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also resolutions of the Board of Trade of Buffalo, New York, favoring the repeal of all taxes now levied on the deposits, circulation, and capital of banks. I move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. MORRILL. Yesterday morning the message of the President of the United States relating to the report of the board on behalf of the executive department at the international exhibition of 1876 was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this change of reference? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. N. 1045) for the relief of George A. Eades, late collector of customs at Sitka, Alaska, have instructed me to report it adversely, and recommend that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was not aware that that case was before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill go on the Calendar with the adverse report, and the Senator can examine it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar for the present, that I may look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of F. G. Schwatka, praying compensation for damages alleged to have been sustained by him by his removal from and occupancy by the United States authorities of certain lands in Oregon and known as departing lands upon which he had settled Oregon, and known as donation lands, upon which he had settled, have instructed me to report adversely thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that that report may go on the Calendar

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill (S. No. 1127) for the relief of J. B. Mc-Cullough, Mrs. L. S. Fountain, administratrix of James Fountain, and John Howzo, surviving partner of the firm of Howzo & Hendricks, was heretofore considered by the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims reported favorably upon the bill for the relief of J. B. McCullough and others, and now at the request of the claimants the committee report back to the Senate the petition of James Fountain and Hendricks, and to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition without prejudice to the claimants, the committee not having considered the claims, not having the evidence before them.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of W. L. Foulk, late captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry, praying the passage of a law authorizing the President to re-appoint him to his former rank and position in the Army, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1250) for the relief of Willis L. Foulk.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Committee on Claims reported adversely on the 9th of February, 1876, upon the memorial of Alexander C. Crawford, of Galveston, Texas, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of his property by United States forces during the late war. Additional evidence was filed in the case and the claim was recommitted to the Committee on Claims. The claim has been again examined by the Committee on Claims, and I am instructed by that committee again to report adversely upon the claim.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Lucas, praying compensation for property taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Lucas, praying compensation for property alleged to have been taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1024) for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the 5th of the present month the Committee on Claims reported the bill (H. R. No. 492) for the relief of William G. Ford, of Tennessee, administrator of John G. Robinson, deceased. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clayton] moved that the order of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill, be reconsidered, and. as I understood at the time, the bill was to be placed on the Calendar. It seems, however, that the bill was recommitted to the committee. The committee have reconsidered the case upon that order, and report it back to the Senate adjacing to their former recommendation. I do back to the Senate, adhering to their former recommendation. not see the Senator from Arkansas in his seat at present, but I am satisfied his preference is that the bill shall be placed upon the Calendar. I therefore ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. WRIGHT. There was referred to the Committee on Claims the bill (S. No. 800) for the relief of Sarah P. Chisholm and Samuel P. Chisholm, which proposes to pay to these parties certain sums of money claimed to be due them as a balance in the Treasury for property sold under the direct-tax laws. This matter was referred to the Department, and their recommendation was that we should have a general bill upon the subject. Such bill having been introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report this bill back and ask to be discharged. from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 127) for the relief of John F. Porteus, of the State of South Carolina, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

Be it enacted, &c., That for a fire-proof building for the use of the national museum, three hundred feet square, to be erected under the direction and supervision of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in accordance with the plan of Major-General M. C. Meigs, now on file with the Joint Committee of Public Buildings and Grounds, on the southwest corner of the grounds of the Smithsonian Institution, the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said building to be placed westof the Smithsorian Institution, leaving a road-way between it and the latter of not less than thirty feet, with its north front on a line parallel with the north face of the buildings of the Agricultural Department and of the Smithsonian Institution, and all expenditures for the purposes herein mentioned, not including anything for architectural plans, shall be audited by the proper officers of the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 2382) granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I move that the bill be printed as amended, as it contains some important provisions and ought to be on the tables of Senators before Congress adjourns.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON.

Mr. CONKLING. I report from the Committee on the Judiciary the Mr. CONKLING. Treport from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia. This bill is reported upon the application of the person concerned. A Senator whom I see present [Mr. Johnston] feels a natural and special interest in this case. I imagine there is no objection to it, and if it be the pleasure of the Senate I ask that action may be taken now. The bill is in the customary form and falls within the value which the Senate always observes and power refuses in such taken now. The bill is in the customary form and falls within the rule which the Senate always observes and never refuses in such cases, I believe.

The bill (S. No. 1251) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia, was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

The House has passed a similar bill, which I believe is on the table. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill from the House was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Chair is informed.

Mr. CONKLING. It should not have been so referred, as the committee has considered the subject and as it is the Senate bill in totidem verbis. I move now, if I may have consent, to reconsider the vote referring the House bill to the Committee on the Judiciary in order to bring it back

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Twice.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator behind me says he has a telegram

Mr. conkling. from a constituent referring to some allegation of fraud touching some of these awards. In the face of such an allegation as that it would be hazardous for any Senator to insist upon expediting legis-lation; and moreover a single objection probably would carry the bill over. I remind the Senator from Alabama, however, and the Senate, that this bill was introduced on the 22d of January; it was referred to a committee; it has been before the committee ever since; it has been considered with some care; it is reported back, and reported in been considered with some care; it is reported back, and reported in pursuance of a recommendation of some length and particularity which lies on the table, coming from the Secretary of State. I do not know the date of the telegram to which the Senator refers; but I observe that this matter having been pending for some time in the House, and having been pending in the Senate since the 22d of January, considering how near this session is to its close, it behooves every sender of a telegram and every other person possessing information not to tarry so long that the grass may grow under his feet. I will not object to the bill going over; but I hope that the Senator from Alabama will apprise his correspondent that any objection he wishes to make should be made presently, because delay will be as fatal and as good an objection. I think it is not known to the Committee on Foreign Relations or to the Committee on the Judiciary mittee on Foreign Relations or to the Committee on the Judiciary that any room for an allegation of fraud can be found in the case. Nevertheless the allegation is made; and for one I do not wish to take the hazard of concluding a possible opportunity to make allegations against the bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It is hardly worth while to attempt to ask the passage of the bill after an objection has been made, because it will lie over at any rate; but as the Senator from New York has very properly stated, this bill has been before the Judiciary Committee for a long while and was fully investigated. It passed not only unanimously in the committee of the House, but it passed the House of Representatives without a dissenting vote. It is very important. The Secretary of State writes me that the bill should be passed very soon to enable them to carry out the provisions of the law. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of the Secretary of State which explains it perhaps better than I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the communications.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 12, 1877.

WASHINGTON, February 12, 1877.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The bill to provide for the distribution of the money received from Mexico under the claims convention has passed the House, as I understand, unanimously.

I shall be very much obliged to you if you can have it passed by the Senate without delay and without any amendment to make necessary its return to the House, I am anxious to have the direction of Congress as to the disposition of the money which was paid punctually on the very day prescribed therefor by the treaty.

With great respect, I am very truly yours,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the Senator from New York called up the bill which has already passed the House.

Mr. CONKLING. This is the very bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill has been read to the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. It has been read twice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the bill will be considered. I trust that there will be no objection to the consideration of it. It is the bill reported by the Secretary of State.

Mr. CONKLING. It is the bill recommended by the Secretary of

Mr. CONKLING. It is the bill recommended by the Secretary of State, the bill introduced into the Senate by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] the bill considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and reported by that committee to the Senate, and is in the same words as the bill doubtless proceeding from the State Department passed by the House. Therefore the House bill has been taken up and not the other. It has been read twice, but the Senator from Alabama says that a constituent of his telegraphs him that he has an allegation to make against the bill of a nature which the Senate has heard suggested.

ate has heard suggested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the nature of it?

Mr. CONKLING. That there is a fraud in one of the awards.

Mr. SPENCER. I know nothing about this matter personally. A constituent of mine, a resident of Mobile, and a most honorable gentleman, telegraphs me under date of February 10:

Have bill for award for Mexican commission passed House referred to appropriate committee of Senate. I have positive proof of fraud.

As he is on his way here and I have received a letter from him stating that he will be here in a day or two, for that reason I objected to the bill passing this morning. I know nothing about it. I suppose a single objection carries it over.

Mr. KELLY Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. I yielded the floor only a moment.

Mr. KELLY. I believe the bill goes over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Alabama to object?

Mr. SPENCER. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PROOF IN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. KELLY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1225) to amend section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to proof required in homestead entries, to report it without amendment. I will ask that it be put on its passage, for the reason that a bill exactly like this has passed both Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the bill had better go over one day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. KELLY. I am satisfied the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection when I make a very brief statement. This very bill, with one additional section, passed both Houses of Congress during the last session of this Congress. It was returned by the President with his objections, and very properly, on account of a section which I shall read:

Said proofs, affidavits, and oaths shall be properly filed in the land office by the

That objectionable section, which caused the veto, required proofs to That objectionable section, which caused the veto, required proofs to be kept in the local land office, which of course was exceedingly objectionable, as it would revolutionize the whole system of proofs in writing. This bill, as I said, is the same bill with that objectionable clause left out. I would sustain the President's veto, that is, I would vote against the passage of the bill if it were put on its passage in the form in which the bill was sent to the President; but the bill is absolutely required for the purpose of making proofs where people live very remote from the land office. It was introduced by a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Iowa, and he is very anxious on account of the great distance his constituents have to travel to have this bill passed, and so are they anxious for the passage of the bill in every State and Territory in the Union where persons have to travel sometimes over two hundred miles to make proof. I am certain, if the bill is read, that no one can have any reasonable objection to its consideration at the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have great respect for the State of Iowa, and for all its members of Congress, so far as I know of it; but I do not know what that has to do with the question of considering this bill. This, it appears, is a part of a bill that has once been satisfactorily vetoed by the President of the United States, and for aught I know there is another section in it that he would have to veto again. I of course have no reason to suppose so from what my friend from Oregon says; I believe it will turn out to be perfectly correct, but in these measures touching public lands, which it seems we are in the habit of hurrying through, and thereby running against obstacles which we admit ourselves are good ones, I think it is better the bill which we admit ourselves are good ones, I think it is better the bill should lie over again until everybody may see it.

Mr. KELLY. Very good.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the least doubt that in the end the bill will turn out to be perfectly correct.

Mr. KELLY. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

PENSIONS TO WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

Mr. INGALLS. In the early part of the present session the Senate passed a bill increasing the pension of soldiers who have lost both an arm and a foot from the present rate of $24 to $37 per month. The bill went to the House of Representatives, and was there amended so as to provide that soldiers who were under that physical disability should be entitled to a pension for each of their disabilities at the rate provided by existing laws for those disabilities. The effect of the provision of the House is simply to reduce the amount allowed by the Senate from $37 to $36 per month. The bill, with the amendment of the House, was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and I am instructed by that committee to report the bill back to the Senate, with the recommendation that, inasmuch as the difference is so in with the recommendation that, inasmuch as the difference is so insignificant, and as there are but sixteen persons upon the pension-rolls who would be affected by it, it is better that the Senate should concur in the amendment of the House. I therefore move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the bill just reported.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 234) to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That all persons who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in both, shall be entitled to a pension for each of such disabilities, and at each a rate as is provided for by the provisions of the existing laws for such disability: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce pensions in any case.

The amendment was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BARNUM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1254) to authorize the President to appoint Dr.

Thomas Owens an assistant surgeon in the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAWES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1255) for the relief of Henry Voelter; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAWES. I have been requested to introduce this bill, and accompanying it there is a memorial. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Patents, and that the memorial be referred to that committee without being printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1256) amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the act supplementary thereto, approved May 2, 1872, and the act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific Ocean," approved July 27, 1866; which was read twice by if a title, and referred proved July 27, 1866; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. CHAFFEE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1257) to authorize the United States to se-cure a title to the Fort Union military and timber reservation in New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the report of Spencer F. Baird, United States commissioner of fish and fisheries, for the years 1875 and 1876, in compliance with the order of Congress; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 5,000 extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1875 and 1876; of which 1,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the commissioner on fish and fisheries.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 5.050 extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1877; of which 1,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the commissioner of fish and

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR CAPERTON.

Mr. HEREFORD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatines concurring.) That 12,000 copies of the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Allen T. Caperton, late United States Senator from West Virginia, be printed: 4,000 for the use of the Senate, 8,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; and that the Secretary of the Treasury have printed the portrait of Mr. Caperton to accompany

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOGY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate providing that during the session of the electoral commission each day when legislative business shall have been transacted shall, by each House when in session, be considered a day for legislative purposes, and that the Journals of the two Houses shall be so kept and dated.

The message also appeared that the Transacted shall are purposed to the two Houses shall be so kept and dated.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4188) making appropriations for fortifications and for other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Eugene Hale of Maine, Mr. O. R. Singleton of Mississippi, and Mr. Hiester Clymer of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4257) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize

A bill (H. R. No. 4237) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugns and Allegany reservations and to confirm existing leases," approved February 19, 1875; and
A bill (H. R. No. 4576) to provide for changing and fixing the boundaries of certain property ceded to the Government of the United States by the city of Memphis, Tennessee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1139) to change the time of holding the October term of the United States district court for the district of Nebraska; and A bill (S. No. 1141) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

ISRAEL YOUNT.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 481) for the relief of Israel Yount. It is to pay a small sum of money to a person to whom it will do a great deal of good. It can take but a moment to pass it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Israel Yount, of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, the sum of $1,200, in full compensation for the use of his hotel in Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, for our wounded soldiers, and the use of the property therein by United States troops, as a hospital, in the year 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

Mr. SPENCER. There is a bill of pressing importance which I wish to have considered. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purpo

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion? Mr. SPENCER. It is the tax bill of the District of Columbia. Mr. MERRIMON. So I understand, but we cannot get through with it in the morning hour.

Mr. SPENCER. It can be read and the Senator from Louisiana Mr. WEST] will yield to us to finish it at the expiration of the morning

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is the man to whom the Senator must appeal.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am very certain that the bill which the Senator from Alabama moves cannot be disposed of in the morning hour, and at one o'clock I shall be compelled to call for the regular order.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to give notice that I shall continue to call up this bill every day until I can have it acted upon.

NEW EDITION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It is important that it should be taken up at as early a time as possible and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion?

Mr. MERRIMON. That will probably give rise to discussion and consume the whole morning hour.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I think it will take but a few minutes.
Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to have the proposed amendment to the twenty-seventh rule considered in the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Car-

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not like to object to the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Senator from Michigan.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one person, learned in the law, as a commissioner, for the purpose of preparing and publishing a new edition of the first volume of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the commissioner shall receive, as full compensation for all services required to be performed by him, the sum of $5,000.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. An amendment has been suggested since the bill was printed which meets with the concurrence of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and which I shall therefore propose. I move to amend by adding after the words "Constitution of the United States," in the fifth line of the third section, the words "with foot-notes referring to decisions in the Federal courts thereon;" so as to read:

That there shall also be included in said edition the Articles of Confederation, the Declaration of our National Independence, the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwestern Territory, the Constitution of the United States, with foot-notes referring to the decisions of the Federal courts thereon, the act to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States, approved June 27, 1866, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. In section 4, line 9, after the word "cause," I move to insert the words "15,000 copies of;" so as to read:

That said new edition shall be completed in manuscript by said commissioner by the 1st day of January, A. D. 1873, and by him presented to the Secretary of State for his examination and approval, who is hereby required to examine and compare the same, as amended, with all the amendatory acts, and, within one month after having been submitted to him, shall, if the same shall be correct, certify to the correctness of the revision as amended, and cause 15,000 copies of the same to be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office, under the supervision of said commissioner, at the expense of the United States, and without un necessary delay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I move at the end of section 2 to add the words "and he shall revise the indexes and incorporate therein references to the additions herein required;" so as to read:

But which, in the opinion of said commissioner, may in any manner affect or modify any of the provisions of the said Revised Statutes, or any of the amendments thereto, indicating in such marginal notes by a difference in type the references to statutes of this kind; and he shall revise the indexes and incorporate therein references to the additions herein required.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I think that a very proper amendment. I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILLS.

Mr. MERRIMON. I gave notice on yesterday that I would endeavor to call up to-day the proposed amendment reported from the Committee on Rules yesterday to Rule 27. I move now that the proposed amendment be considered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask the Clerk to read Rule 27, to which the amendment is proposed, as the amendment will apply to that rule, if adopted

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

27. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported from the Committee on Rules will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule 27 by adding at the end thereof the following:
; and all bills providing appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and all amendments thereto, shall be referred by the Committee on Commerce to the Secretary of War, who shall make inquiry and report upon the extent, expediency of, and necessity for the proposed improvements; and such report shall be made a part of the report of the committee to the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I inquire of the Senator whether the intention

Mr. CONKLING. I inquire of the Senator whether the intention is, after a bill has come to the Committee on Commerce and the committee is apprised of the instances in which appropriations are proposed, the committee shall then refer to the Secretary of War?

Mr. MERRIMON. That is the purpose; the real purpose being to gather information as to the merit of a great many amendments that we find almost uniformly put into the river and harbor bill for improvements that are utterly useless, whereby the Government sustains great loss at every session of Congress.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask the Senator if he intends to include amendments offered in pursuance of estimates made by a De-include amendments offered in pursuance of estimates made by a Department?

Mr. MERRIMON. It is to embrace the river and harbor bill and all proposed amendments thereto. If estimates have been already made, the inquiries have already been made, and it would give the Secretary of War very little trouble to refer to them and state the merit of the proposed amendment; but as a great many amendments are offered when there has been no inquiry at all about the proposed improvement or its extent or cost, the Committee on Rules are of opinion that such an amendment of the rule would go a long way toward cutting off the pernicious practice that we have all observed in the passage of river and harbor bills.

Mr. SARGENT. The river and harbor bill will not probably pass the House to reach us until the last week of the session.

Mr. CONKLING. It has passed and is here.

Mr. SARGENT. The river and harbor bill does not often pass the House until the last week of the session. I was not aware that it had passed this year. I notice that a bill was proposed in the House extremely sectional in its character, making very liberal appropriaextremely sections in its character, making very neeral appropria-tions for some States in the Union and entirely excluding others, and most others. A bill of that kind reaching us in the last week of the session, as it often does, would require, if an amendment were moved in the Senate, to go to the Secretary of War. It might be reported back during the week and it might not. If it was a subject of any difficulty or any hostility on the part of the Department there would be no report upon it and we would have to take the bill, no matter how partial in its operation, as it came from the House, or have none at all. I am opposed to this amendment for that reason. If exceptions were made, however, in favor of amendments which have already been reported to the Congress, where the items have been considered by the War Department favorably, it would remove much of the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MERRIMON. The object is to let the Secretary of War—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate Senate bill No. 984, being the unfinished business, after which the Chair can entertain a motion to postpone the regular order.

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust that we will proceed with the consideration of this matter.

Mr. WRIGHT. If the consideration can be continued subject to a call for the regular order and concluded in a short time, I shall have no objection; but if it is to take any time, we may as well proceed with the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of the amendment reported from the Committee on Rules subject to a call for the regular order?

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4301) for the relief of A. W. Plymale, of West Virginia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4556) to remove the political disabilities of Reuben Davis, of Mississippi.

PACIFIC PAILROAD ACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Governthe Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of the said first-named act, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Bourwell, in the third section, line 2, of the substitute reported from the Committee on Railroads, to strike out the words "in lieu of" and insert "in addition to," and to strike out the word "however" in the proviso in line 5, so as to read:

That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in addition to all payments or other requirements from said companies under said act and the amendments thereto, in relation to the re-imbursement to the Government of the bonds so issued to said corporations: Provided, That until the claims of the Government for said bonds and interest are fully paid, &c.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to make a single suggestion which will occupy but a moment. As I understand from the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge, the bill is to be a matter of compromise, and it is doubtful whether the company will accept the amendment which I have offered. I withdraw the motion for the amendment which I have observed. I withdraw the motion for the present, reserving to myself, of course, the right to vote against the bill, as the friends of the measure would not accept the amendment.

Mr. BOOTH. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has withdrawn it.

Mr. BOOTH. I re-offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California offers the same amendment, and it is still pending.

Mr. BOOTH. I give notice of an amendment which I propose to section 2. I move to strike out all after the word "that" in the first line of section 2 and insert:

line of section 2 and insert:

The said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company shall each pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $750,000 per annum in equal semi-annual installments on the 1st day of April and October in each year, commencing on the 1st day of October, 1877, in lawful money, until said sums, with interest thereon as hereinafter provided, shall be sufficient when added to the other sums to the credit of said sinking fund to pay off and extinguish the Government bonds at maturity, advanced as aforesaid, with 6 per cent. interest thereon, from their respective dates up to the date when they are so paid and extinguished as aforesaid. Interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking fund shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum: Provided, hovever, That if the foregoing provision shall prove insufficient to extinguish the Government bonds and interest thereon at maturity as aforesaid, the semi-annual payments shall be increased to such a sum as shall be sufficient for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reserved. Mr. BOOTH. I shall further move to amend the bill by striking out section 5 of the substitute and inserting:

That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California also gives notice of this amendment.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, I rise to speak upon this bill, after the long and exhaustive discussion which has been had, with very considerable reluctance, and I should not speak at all if I could give my full consent to allow some of the statements which have been my full consent to allow some of the statements which have been made during this discussion to pass unchallenged.

Under and by virtue of the acts of 1862 and 1864, the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific Railroad Companies received from the Government of the United States a large grant of lands and a loan of the credit of the Government, the principal of which amounts to something more than $54,000,000. The interest already paid out by the Government, and not repaid by those railroad companies, is about $20,000,000, making a total indebtedness now due from them to the Government of about $74,000,000. This advance, this loan of credit, was made upon the express condition as interpreted by the Supreme was made upon the express condition, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, that it should be repaid, principal and interest, at the maturity of the bonds. These companies are now in the receipt of net earnings of something more than $1,000,000 per month. The Government is annually paying out upon those bonds something more than $3,000,000 per annum. It has become perfectly evident, too evident for denial, that unless a sinking fund is provided to meet this indebtedness at maturity, the whole security of the Government will fail and the whole sum will be lost.

Upon this state of facts the whole subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee gave it careful attention, they gave it long consideration. It is an able committee. Finally it reported a bill which embodied the theory that it was the duty of these two companies to begin now to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay this indebtedness at its maturity. That was the scope of the bill, and when it came to the Senate it came with apparent unanimity. The right of Congress to enact such a law is fortified by a long line of precedents, as was ably shown by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] and the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Christiancy,] whose arguments have not been answered, because they cannot be answered.

This bill, so just in all its provisions, in the absence of the chairman of the committee who drew the bill, in the necessary absence of the able Senator who reported it, has been denounced as a violation of the plighted faith of the Government, as a violation of the ten commandments and of a dictum of the supreme court of Massachusetts. It has been held up to the derision of this body day after day, and the language of vitapperation has almost been exhausted in day, and the language of vituperation has almost been exhausted in its abuse. It offends the tender conscience of the Senator from Louiits abuse. It offends the tender conscience of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] It has been assumed that there is abroad in this land a spirit of persecution against these companies, a spirit that prevents them from obtaining even-handed justice from the representatives of this people; and it is said that this is a mere exhibition of jealousy engendered by great success, of that envy which resents superior fortune as a personal affront. This constant assumption of superior virtue, this iteration of reproof, has become stale, flat, wearisome, and offensive. I take leave to say that the American people are a generous people, a liberal people, more willing to suffer injustice than to do injustice; and I take leave to add that they are an honest people and that their common take leave to add that they are an honest people and that their common sentiment of honesty was shocked and outraged by the revelation that their large bounty, their munificent gifts were made the opportunity, the means, and the instrument of fraud and corruption full-blown; and that, when the American people shall not be shocked by a revelation of this kind, corruption will have done its perfect work. The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] admonishes us of the danger that legislative bodies may be betrayed into doing an act of injustice in dealing with corporations which are unpopular. I do not know which most to admire, the learning of the Senator, his eloquence, his ingenuity, or that heroic spirit of self-immolation with which he is willing to stand between a persecuting people and the innocent objects of their wrath. I beg leave to intimate that if we are sometimes in danger of yielding, upon the one hand, too much to the people for the sake of popularity, we are also in danger of magnifying our office until we are prone to believe that allegiance is due from the resolutions of the property of the p from the people to us, not from us to them. We may even reach such an exalted state of self-conciousness as to imagine that we move the springs of human action. The fly upon the chariot-wheel once made a similar mistake. I am unwilling by implication, by giving a silent vote, to be placed in the category of those who follow the hue and cry; who pander to prejudice for the sake of popularity, or who exact from the weak what they would not demand from the strong.

These companies are not weak. If any one supposes they are, let him attack them in the citadels of their strength. They have but one rule of policy—first, employ all means to convince; failing in that, all means to crush! Since I have had the honor to have a seat that, all means to crush! upon this floor, when any question touching a conflict between them and the people has been under consideration, their agents, attorneys, and lobbyists have swarmed in our corridors; they have blocked the way to our committee-rooms, and have set spies upon our actions. To-day they would occupy these vacant chairs but for the timely or-der of the President of the Senate to double-guard our doors.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] in the first speech which he made on this bill said that he would have no difficulty with the provisions of the bill touching the duties imposed upon the railroads if Congress had power to enact them. He seemed to proceed upon the assumption that because there was some limit to the power of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal we must not stir for fear of transcending that limit; that we have no power to do an act of justice because the power may be abused. All legislative power may be abused by error of judgment as well as by disposition to oppress. If it be assumed that government will willfully abuse its power all governments should be abolished, and we should remand ourselves into that primitive state of barbarism which Rousseau dreamed was the condition of happiness.

In order to show that there was a limitation upon the power to alter, amend, or repeal, the Senator from Massachusetts quoted a dictum from the supreme court of the State he represents. He informed us that in the case of a charter granted by the Legislature of Massachusetts to a company to build a dam the Legislature afterward required the company to construct a fish-way. The supreme court of Massachusetts decided that the Legislature had that power, but the Senator told us that the supreme court said in the decision that if the original act had contained words to the effect that the company need not do this thing their decision would have been different. The luminousness of this application is only equaled, in my judgment, by the opinion delivered by the celebrated Judge Bunsby, as reported in Dickens's Dombey and Son, page 331:

"If so be," returned Bunsby, with unusual promptitude, "as he's dead, my opinion is he won't come back no more. If so be as he's alive, my opinion is he will. Do I say he will! No. Why not! Because the bearings of this observation lays in the application on it."

Afterward, however, in further discussion of this case, the Senator told us that this was not a dictum, although the Supreme Court attempted to give construction to words that were not in the statute. He said the pleadings raised that question. How the pleadings could raise such a question is one of the mysteries of the law known to the initiated no doubt, but a puzzle to laymen. In the further consideration of the case, however, the Senator said that when the right was given to this company to construct a dam, there were certain riparian rights which they were bound to protect, and that the Legislature held that the construction of this fish-way was necessary to protect those rights. Grants have been made to these railroads on condition that they shall be repaid. Congress decides that this condition will absolutely fail unless a sinking fund is provided. Do not the cases then go upon all fours? "A Daniel come to judgment."

Further, in order to show that there was a very dangerous limitation that hedged in our footsteps on this question, the Senator said:

tion that hedged in our footsteps on this question, the Senator said: "Suppose the first section of forty miles had been completed and the railroad companies were then entitled to their bonds upon an examination of the road, would Congress have the power then and there to repeal the act?" Then the Senator worked himself into a state of to repeal the act 1" Then the Senator worked himself into a state of eloquent indignation, as though that were the very proposition in this bill. Don Quixote achieved a reputation for chivalrous courage by attacking a wind-mill. It has been reserved for the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts to build a wind-mill for the purpose of attacking it. What would have been that case ? A willful violation by the Government of a contract made after part performance by the party of the other part. What is the case presented here now ? A willful violation by the party of the other part, and legislation asked is to compel them to fulfill their contract.

The Senator says that the act of 1862 and the act of 1864 must be

The Senator says that the act of 1862 and the act of 1864 must be construed together; that the one is amendatory of the other. No one construed together; that the one is amendatory of the other. No one doubts that. The power to alter, amend, or repeal is much broader in the act of 1864 than in the act of 1862. It has been pertinently asked which words govern in law, the first words or the last? What was the consideration upon which this power to alter, amend, or repeal was so broadened? Did the railroad companies take nothing additional by the act of 1864? It doubled their land grant; it increased the time in which they might build the road; it gave them one-half of the pay for all Government business; and more than all it released the first mortgage of the Government and took a second mortgage.

Mr. MORRILL, And released the 25 per cent reserve.

Mr. MORRILL. And released the 25 per cent. reserve.

Mr. BOOTH. And released the 25 per cent. reserve.

Mr. BOOTH. And released the 25 per cent. reserve. They took all these; they took what the Government was willing to give with lavish hands; they have enjoyed it all, and now they come in and endeavor to repudiate the whole condition upon which these additional deavor to repudiate the whole condition upon which these additional bounties were made. I am sometimes tempted to ask myself the question, what did these words "alter, amend, or repeal" mean in this connection. If they do not give us the power to enforce the contract originally made by necessary legislation, they are the most idle, vain, and nugatory words that ever were ingrafted upon a statute. If they do not mean that, the only meaning I can possibly attribute to them is that the railroad companies may "alter, amend, or repeal," and then I may ask where the sovereignty of this people is represented.

The Dartmouth College case has cut quite a figure in this discussion, and although it is dangerous for a layman to lay irreverent hands upon the law I know that it is the feeling of this people, and I believe it is the feeling of the bench and of the profession, that the Dartmouth College case carried the construction of law to the very verge of logic in favor of corporations. That decision was made at a time when there was a feeling in this country that there was danger from the agrarian tendency of the people; that vested rights would not be secure from popular assault. Time has dissipated that delusion. There is no country under heaven where vested rights are more secure and better protected than in this Republic. They are so highly respected that hoary wrongs borrow their sanction and inmore secure and better protected than in this Republic. They are so highly respected that hoary wrongs borrow their sanction and intrench themselves in their privileges. It was because it was felt in part that the doctrine laid down in that decision was harsh, that ever since, State constitutions and statutes have constantly reserved the power to alter, amend, and repeal. Apart from that general considera-tion was there any special reason why there should be such a clause in an act like this?

Let us recur for one moment to the circumstances of the case. the time this grant was made the cost of the construction of this great work was entirely unknown. It was problematic. Nobody could estimate it or guess it. Congress might well say, "We will give with unsparing hand; there shall be no stint upon our bounty; if you cannot construct the road we are ready to give more; and if after you construct it it shall prove to be unprofitable, we will not exact the conditions; we are giving with an imperial munificence that is unparalleled in the history of a free government; we are giving what belongs not to us but to the people; we are acting as trustees and we reserve the right to alter or amend this act so as to compel you to comply with the conditions if you are able to do so; and you take this munificent grant subject to that condition; you are dealing with a sovereign; justice is one of the attributes of sovereignty and you must trust to our sense of justice." They did. Justice is one of the attributes of sovereignty; and it is time now that we should show that to the people of this country.

The Senator from New York [Mr. Conkling] finds the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee harsh, oppressive, almost vindictive. Is it so harsh, is it so unjust, to say that these companies which have been enriched by our bounty must comply with the condition upon which those bounties were given, now that they are abundantly able to do it? If that be harsh and oppressive, in the name of Heaven tall market is interned from the proper of the propersive, in the rand of Heaven tall market is interned for the propersive, in the rand of Heaven tall market is interned for the propersive, in the rand of Heaven tall market is interned for the propersive, in the rand of Heaven tall market is interned for the propersive, in the rand of Heaven tall market is interned for the propersive. the time this grant was made the cost of the construction of this great to do it? If that be harsh and oppressive, in the name of Heaven tell me what is just and fair. The Senator further said that this bill of the Judiciary Committee could only be justified upon the assumption that these companies had persistently and flagrantly violated their contract with the Government; and he cites three instances where it has been charged that the companies have been in default, in which he argues that they have not.

First, in regard to the payment of interest which he said is not due until the principal of the bonds is due. The Supreme Court has passed upon that question and nobody proposes to revive it. The only preposition in the bill of the Judiciary Committee is that they shall provide a sinking fund to meet that liability when the act says it is due.

Second, that there is a difference of opinion between the Government and the railroads as to the time of completion. Such differences of opinion will always arise when there is a conflict of interest. The railroad companies commenced doing through business in 1869. They had the capacity to do all the business then that they have ever had since. In their opinion the road was then completed sufficiently to get the bonds of the United States, but not at all sufficiently completed to commence paying 5 per cent. of the net earnings into the Treasury of

Then we have a disquisition upon what is meant by the net earnings of a railroad company; and I beg to suggest that the honorable Senator seemed to my mind to confuse the ideas as to what are the net profits to the owners of a railroad and what are the net earnings

Senator seemed to my mind to confuse the ideas as to what are the net profits to the owners of a railroad and what are the net earnings of the railroad itself. The earnings of a railroad are the earnings of capital, and so far as determining what net earnings are it is not a matter of the slightest consequence whether the owners pay in their own money or somebody else's money.

But, Mr. President, behind all these technical fulfillments or technical violation there lies a broad fact, that from the time these railroad companies commenced construction, from the very time they realized the fact that large profits could be made out of the construction of their roads, they have steadily and persistently pursued the policy to defeat the security of this Government. Not a contract has been made, not a tie has been laid, not a rail has been placed, not a spike has been driven, without the intention, almost avowed, of absorbing all the gifts of this Government for the purposes of personal profit and plunder. Just how much has been realized by this system of men sitting down at their own desks and making contracts with themselves, just how much profit they have dared give to themselves by that kind of manipulation, will never be known. We have some little evidence, however. There was an investigation in regard to the manner in which the eastern end of this great highway was constructed, and it is a chapter of shame in our national history. So far as the other end is concerned, that is, the Central Pacific, there happened to be a few stockholders who had honestly paid the amount of their subscription, and believing, in the innocence of their confiding bearts that the directors who owned almost the entire franchies. their subscription, and believing, in the innocence of their confiding hearts, that the directors, who owned almost the entire franchises, had no right to make money for themselves out of their trust, they brought suit for a share of their profits, and rather than go into court and have that page of history unfolded, the Central Pacific directors paid to each of these suing stockholders $5.17 for every dollar that had been paid.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. West] especially objects to our taking the report of the Central Pacific Railroad Company as to the amount of its net earnings and assures us that that sum is swelled by the earnings of two roads, the San Joaquin Valley, I believe, and the California and Oregon, which belong to the same company, and have been swallowed up in the same corporate name. It would be easy for the company in making its report to segregate these accounts, but we have no intelligible data. I beg leave to inform the Senator from Louisiana that if the statement is made that these two lines of which he speaks, these four hundred miles of tributary branch road, have contributed in any material degree to the profits of the Central Pacific, it will strike the California public with amazement and incredulity, and contradict every statement made by the railroad companies themselves before committees of the Legislature and before tax-assessors. These branch railroads have been built out of the profits of the construction and operation of the Central Pacific, a con-trolling interest in the California Pacific has been absorbed in the same manner; five or six hundred miles of the Southern Pacific have same manner; nive or six interest miles of the Southern Pacific have been built out of the same profits; and these profits have given this company the control of every important line of communication in California, and all this is not enough.

I shall proceed now, Mr. President, briefly to consider some provisions of Senate bill No. 1134, the bill as it came to us reported by the Railroad Committee. I will read, in order to refresh the recollection of Senators, the second section of that bill:

That the said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company shall cach pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $750.000 per annum, in equal semi-annual installments, on the 1st day of April and October in each year, commencing on the 1st day of October, 1877, either in lawful money or in any bonds or securities of the United States Government, apr, until such sums shall, with interest thereon as hereinafter provided, be sufficient, when added to the other sums to the credit of said sinking funds, to pay off and extinguish the Government bonds advanced as aforesaid, with 6 per cent. Interest thereon from their respective dates up to the date when they are so paid and extinguished as aforesaid. Interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking funds shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum: Provided, however, That if the foregoing provisions shall prove insufficient to extinguish the Government bonds and interest thereon as aforesaid by the 1st day of October, in the year 1912, the semi-annual payments shall be increased to such a sum as will be sufficient for that purpose.

In any work to a question put, by the Sanator from Michigan [Mr.

In answer to a question put by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Christiancy] I understood the Senator from Louisiana to say that no addition would be required to this $750,000 in order to accomplish this result.

Mr. WEST. Then the Senator did not understand me correctly,

Mr. President.
Mr. BOOTH. I will be corrected. I repeat that I so understood it, Mr. BOOTH. I will be corrected. I repeat that I so understood it, and I will give my recollection of what the Senator said. The Senator from Michigan asked the Senator from Louisiana if that was a sum which could be computed to a certainty by a process of arithmetic why not put it in the bill, and I understood the Senator from Michigan further to say that be thought some additional sum would be necessary, and the Senator from Louisiana said, perhaps without rising, that he did not suppose any additional sum would be necessary. I assume that the question has already been worked out. I know that it has been already worked out. I know that the sum has first been fixed upon, and then finally the time determined by the operation of compound interest in which that result will be achieved. It is patent upon the bill.

It is patent upon the bill.

Let us look now at the problem which is presented, and let us see how it is to be worked out. I take one company for illustration, simply because it is more convenient. The Government of the United States is paying out annually to the Central Pacific Railroad Company an interest something more than a million and a half dollars per annum. The railroad company proposes to pay into the Treasury of the United States $750,000 per annum, and the problem for us to solve is how the $750,000 can not only pay the million and a half that this Government is paying out, but also extinguish the principal upon which that interest is paid. That looks like necromancy, but it is only arithmetic. Let us see what these sums will amount to. Here is an extension of credit for twelve years. The Government will continue to pay out this million and a half dollars for thirty-six years. How much does that make? Something more than $50,000,000; $54,000,000 I take it. In addition to that, it will pay $27,000,000 for principal. In thirty-six years, at $750,000 per annum, the Government will receive from this railroad company three-quarters of $35,000,000, that is, $27,000,000. Double that and you have the loss which this bill entails upon the Government of the United States. My friend [Mr. Bailey] reminds me what I had forgotten, that there is due from these companies already $20,000,000 of unpaid interest, and that is to be added to double the pany an interest something more than a million and a half dollars $20,000,000 of unpaid interest, and that is to be added to double the sum t at I stated. That is what the bill of the Railroad Committee means in arithmetic: the Government shall pay $128,000,000 for these companies.

But there is another section of the bill of the Railroad Committee, section 5, printed in italics, which I shall read:

SEC. 5. That each of said companies shall be entitled at any time to anticipate any or all of the semi-annual payments provided for in section 2 of this act, by the payment to the Government of the then present value of such semi-annual payments, discounted at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; but the sum so paid shall not be less than $1,000,000 at any one time.

What is meant in this section by the payment "of the then present value of such semi-annual payments, discounted at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum?" Suppose this bill should pass, what amount could the Central Pacific Railroad Company pay into the Treasury of the United States and at once discharge the $37,000,000 which is now due from that company to the Government, to say nothing of the interest which is to be paid hereafter?

I confess that actuaries may differ exactly as to the best way of ascertaining the "then present cash value" as mentioned in the fifth section. I have taken occasion to have the amount worked out so section. I have taken occasion to have the amount worked out so far as I could by very eminent authority upon two or three different hypotheses as to the meaning of the words "the then present cash value" as used in this section. One theory is that you should first learn what would be the amount of all these installments with simple interest thereon up to the time when they are to be met and then ascertain the sum which put out now at compound interest would ascertain the sain which put out now at compound interest would make that amount; and very respectable authority contends that is the proper construction of the section. If that be the construction, they could pay their entire debt by paying into the United States Treasury $6,893,000.50. There is another method, (and I am bound to say that I think on the whole it is the true interpretation of the section, and when I say that I wish to add that the moment this bill shall be enacted we shall have the first construction placed upon the section, and eminent gentlemen on this floor will contend that we are depriving the companies of a vested right in not allowing them to discharge five dollars with one;) the other theory is that you should ascertain the present cash value of each of these installments, add them totain the present cash value of each of these installments, add them together, and the result should be the present cash value which they would be anthorized to pay. That is the most favorable construction of any that can be devised and would yield the largest sum. Upon that calculation that company could discharge its indebtedness by paying into the United States Treasury $10,957,260, a little more than one dollar in four. I have a table here, such as is used in banking-houses and brokers' offices, recognized as authority everywhere, and from that table I learn that the present cash value of $1 to be paid thirty-six years hence discounted semi-annually at 6 per cent, is 11 90 thirty-six years hence discounted semi-annually at 6 per cent. is 11 90 cents. Under the operation of this bill eleven cents and ninety one-hundredths at the end of thirty-six years would pay off a dollar of the present indebtedness. That is the theory of the bill.

The Senator from Massachusetts said this bill would extinguish the indebtedness without the Covernment leaves without the indebtedness without the Government losing a cent! You could pay one dollar into the Treasury of the United States and leave it there at compound interest long enough to pay off the whole debt; but the United States could not be any richer for it doing that. It would be paying by computation, just as you might set up Babbager's calculating machine to work and let that work out the whole result. We have seen marvelous statements of the growth of money at compound interest; but in this bill that machinery is to be reversed and this vast volume of debt is to shrink and vanish by the reverse process of compound discount. The whole of the $74,000,000 which these two companies owe the Government, under the most favorable construction of that bill, could be discharged to-morrow by the payment of $24,000,000, leaving a profit to the company of more than $50,000,000. "There are millions in it." That is the argument for the passage of the substitute. It is an argument which cannot be answered.

The manner in which the bill from the Judiciary Committee has been denounced and characterized gives me a right to describe the bill of the Railroad Committee. The bill of the Railroad Committee is a bill to take more than $50,000,000 from the houest industry of this country and transfer it to the coffers of two corporations. of this country and transfer it to the coffers of two corporations. The bill is an attempt to make us particeps criminis in the fraud that the men who hang around our doors would perpetrate. Pass this bill, but change its enacting clause and let it read: Be it enacted by the Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroad Companies, and then do not send it for approval to the President of the United States; for he represents the sovereignty of this people. Send it for approval to the presidents of the companies. Yet that is scarcely necessary. It is the coin and mintage of their brain. It was approved in advance.

Mr. WEST. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from

It is the coin and mintage of their brain. It was approved in advance. Mr. WEST. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from California, not that I have any intention of replying to his speechjust now, but for the purpose of illustrating a proposition with which he closed his remarks. The Senator very wisely and very properly stated that there might be differences of opinion between actuaries as to the actual value of a dollar; but I will take his own authority and I will ask him if this money were paid into the Treasury of the United States, the amount that he states, using his own calculation, and the Government of the United States should see proper to done that Government of the United States should see proper to loan that amount, as it can be loaned upon its bonds, at 6 per cent. compound interest, would not the realization of that sum at the term specified amount to the total indebtedness of the company?

amount to the total indebtedness of the company?

Mr. BOOTH. Does the Senator wish an answer now?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOOTH. I will answer the Senator with great pleasure. I do not know that I should object to a sinking fund which would meet these bonds at their maturity. I think it would be a very hard proposition for the Government; but I think I should be willing to assent to thet assent to that.

The hidden sophistry of this bill is that whereas we have to pay principal and interest in 1900 we allow compound interest to these railroad companies until 1912, and if the statement be a fair one, you railroad companies until 1912, and if the statement be a fair one, you might just as well postpone the time twelve years more, and in place of paying $750,000 per annum pay $375,000, and I am obliged to the Senator for calling me to my feet. Under the law as it now stands these railroads are compelled to pay into the Treasury of the United States 5 per cent. upon their net earnings and one-half the cost of the business of the Government is to be applied upon the interest as Pacific Railroad Company to the Government on account of the 5 per cent. $400,000. The average amount due from the company to the Government for half transportation is $175,000. That makes $575,000 of money which the Government was entitled to receive.

The business of these companies will increase. The business of the Government over the roads will increase. Long before this time expires those two sums will amount to more than $750,000, and then the proposition of the bill is what? To pay us our own money, and then have us simply sit down and, with a slate and pencil, figure our interest upon it as though we were getting paid. That is the way this debt is to be liquidated. We are to get our own money and then by a sum on the blackboard, which does not give us a cent, we are to figure out the interest and acknowledge that we are paid. It is computation not receipt, and may be worked out as well with counters as putation, not receipt, and may be worked out as well with counters as with money

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. President-

Mr. WEST. If my friend from Kansas will permit me one moment I should like to have an opportunity of reviewing some of the statements that have been made by the Senator from California.

Mr. HARVEY. Very well.

Mr. WEST. I asked the Senator from California a question with respect to the last statement that he had made when he ended his rerespect to the last statement that he had made when he ended his remarks on the preceding occasion, and I do not see that he has replied to the question at all. Now, I wish also to call attention to another concluding remark of his, and that is, that the business of the Government upon these roads is actually increasing.

Mr. BOOTH. I did not quite say that. I spoke of the operation of the roads for the Government, and the idea I had was that there might be an increase; for instance, in time of war there would be a wonderful increase.

Mr. WEST. That the Senate may understand this matter thoroughly let me quote from some official documents that are at hand. quote from Executive Document No. 25 of the last session. the Union Pacific Railroad I find that the Army transportation done upon that road since the year 1868 is: In 1868, $969,000; in 1869, $478,000; in 1870, $557,000; in 1871, $812,000; in 1872, $399,000; in 1873, $445,000; in 1874, $306,000; showing a gradual and continuing diminishment of the extent of the business done by the Government of the United States with these roads. Furthermore, I think we can assume with some degree of confidence that, as time shall roll along and we shall be able to adjust and handle and master the Indian complications on our frontier, the business which will be done by the Government upon these roads will be gradually diminished on behalf of the United States. That was a very important consideration to the Committee on Railroads in considering the amounts likely to be due from these companies to the Government. Furthermore, by a bill of the last session, the post-office appropriation bill, instead of increasing the compensation of these railroads, you cut them down 30 per cent.; so that the Government charges both for mails and Army transportation have been greatly diminished. But, says the Senator, the amount will be augmented by this 5 per cent. upon the net earnings. O, there, Mr. President, is the rock upon which we all stand in danger of splitting. Let me ask the Senator's attention and the attention of the Senate to one paragraph in the original act of 1862, and let each man put his own definition upon it.

SEC. 18. That whenever it appears that the net earnings of the entire road and telegraph, including the amount allowed for services rendered for the United States, after deducting all expenditures, including repairs, and the furnishing, running, and managing of said road.

There must be some expenditure outside of the inclusive clause most assuredly. Had it been intended otherwise, unquestionably Congress would have said:

After deducting all expenditures for the repairs and the furnishing, running, and managing of said road.

But it says after deducting certain expenditures, making the whole in the aggregate, but inclusive of these items of expenditure. There is a definition by Congress itself that the net earnings are intended to include some other expenditures besides those of running, managing, and operating the road, and were that not all-sufficient of itself, here is another definition put by solemn act of Congress upon what constitutes the actual net earnings of these roads. Take the act approved March 3, 1873, being a section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, and you will find this language:

No dividend shall hereafter be made by said company but from the actual net earnings thereof; and no new stock shall be issued or mortgages or pledges made on the property or future carnings of the company without leave of Congress.

Now let me ask whether the phrase "no new stock shall be issued or mortgages" implied that all existing mortgages, of course both for principal and interest, are a charge upon the earnings of the company, and that no new mortgages or pledges shall be made having such a lien upon the future earnings. It seems to be a provision prohibiting the company from enlarging its interest-bearing debt in order that the actual net earnings may result in something to be realized by the Government by 5 per cent. thereon. I ask and I have asked continually in this discussion for some authoritative definition of what 5 per cent. of the net earnings means. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] who last spoke in regard to this bill said that he had seen a decision somewhere, but he gives neither volume nor page, and we are left to infer that in his opinion 5 per cent. on the net earnings means 5 per cent. after deducting the operating expenses. Surely the Senator from Ohio will pardon me if I in this case will scarcely consider him more orthodox as to a question of law than I did on another occasion. When the question of this interest was before the Senate the Senator from Ohio laid down another legal proposition. He said:

As a legal proposition. I have no doubt that the United States have the right to enforce against these railroad companies the payment of all the interest that accrues upon our guarantee bonds. It is a mere question of discretion in the United States. The guarantee of the United States is a secondary liability. The first liability is by the railroad company, and if the United States have been compelled to pay interest on these bonds, in my judgment the United States can at any time enforce its rights under the act of 1864, and compel the railroad companies to pay the interest on the bonds. I have no doubt of it. * * * Indeed I have never had any doubt about the right of the United States to make these railroad companies, if they are able, pay every dollar of interest on the bonds we guaranteed to them as it accrues.

He laid down the law here that it was perfectly competent for the United States to command from these companies that they should pay the interest as it accrued. The case was submitted to the Supreme Court, and with what result we all know. So again when he dogmatically lays down the law for us in this case, we may be permitted to doubt whether his perceptions are any clearer now than they were then. It is because of that very fact, the question being already remitted to the courts of the United States and we awaiting their adjudication, that we should hesitate to take any action either one way or the other to construe what may be their determination, because, even while this debate is going on, we see by telegraph from San Francisco that-

The trial of the case of The United States vs. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, to recover 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the road from the time of completion of the road, July 16, 1869, to October 31, 1874, commenced in the United States circuit court to-day. The amount involved is $1,836,635.

If the decision in that case is made in the way that it is anticipated by the railway companies, we will be left with barely $250,000 per annum to come from these companies on their earnings of 5 per cent. Suppose we are left there, what assurance can we have that these companies will not so complicate their expenditures as to make it impossible to distinguish earnings from expenditures? It is in view of all these difficulties staring us in the face in connection with legislation and adjudication on these subjects that the Railroad Committee have brought forward a bill which in their judgment will enable the Government of the United States to be repaid at the time specified by the outlay, but the Judiciary Committee grants compound interest or whatever amount may be put to their credit outside of the amount due to them by law.

I will not reply to the strictures of the Senator from California on these companies. I know nothing about them. He is more familiar with them and their action, but according to the law, in 1893 unless you prove yourself adequate to deal with the subject, $125,000,000 of the money of the United States will be sunk irrecoverably; and it is against that contingency and against that loss we have striven to bring the Senate to such action as will prevent it.

Mr. HARVEY. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. McCreery in the chair.) There is an amendment pending now.

Mr. HARVEY. I will offer it now and it can be considered when it will be reached in order. I move to insert after section 6 of the substitute reported from the Committee on Railroads what I send to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That no provision contained in either the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph from the Miss-uri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal and military purposes," approved July 1, 1862, or the act amendatory thereto, approved July 2, 1864, or in any act of Congress granting lands in aid of the construction of any railroad or wagon-road, shall be so construed as to exempt from taxation by State authority lands which any of the companies in said acts mentioned, or its successors, shall have earned by the construction of its road or parts thereof: Provided, That such road or parts thereof shall have been first accepted by the United States in the manner in said acts prescribed; and taxes assessed e ther before, or as may be assessed after the passage of this act, upon lands carned by said companies, or their successors, or any of them, shall be valid as against any claim or title of the United States in or to such lands.

SEC. —. That if any company entitled to said lands or parts thereof, as aforesaid, shall fail to pay the costs of surveying and selecting the same, or the land officer's fees where such payment is required by any of said acts, the purchaser of any of said lands at tax sale may pay such costs and fees due upon the lands by him purchased to the proper officer; and thereupon letters-patent shall issue to such company conveying said lands to it, but subject to the legal rights and title of such tax-sale purchaser: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as enlarging any grant of lands heretofore made to any of said companies.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. President, the object aimed at in this amendment is a very worthy one indeed; it is to equalize the public burden of taxation by making it bear equally upon the lands of citizens and corporations, or rather, more precisely speaking, natural-born persons and corporations. Hitherto this has not been possible in some of the States for the following reasons: To secure railway connection with the Pacific coast Congress granted to several corporations lands greater in extent than some of the States of this Union, besides the other aid extended: and these companies proceeded to defraud the greater in extent than some of the States of this Union, besides the other aid extended; and these companies proceeded to defraud the States within which their grants lie of the taxes due them, and it is done in this way: the law requires that the companies shall pay the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the lands granted; but to avoid the payment of taxes the companies neglect to pay the costs required, thus holding the land in such a condition that even though so held for years for purposes of speculation, they cannot be taxed, for the reason that the Supreme Court has decided upon appeal and upon the plea of the companies that while the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying remains unpaid, the Government holds such an interest in the land that it cannot permit it to be sold for taxes, because the interest of the Government in the costs yet due from the because the interest of the Government in the costs yet due from the company might be lost, and the same rule applies to such lands when the companies have sold or mortgaged them without paying those costs, thus not only wronging the States by avoiding the payment of taxes on the lands they yet hold, but enabling their vendees to further escape the payment of taxes upon the value of improvements made by them upon the lands, making such immunity an inducement to purchasers to pay a high price for the lands, thus banking, as it were, upon the benefits of a legal subterfuge and perpetrating a great outgree upon the States and local numicinal organizations as well as rage upon the States and local municipal organizations, as well as upon all property-holders who pay their taxes honestly and promptly.

It will be readily conceded that a State, in return for the protection afforded, has the right to raise the necessary revenue by levying an equitable rate of taxation upon all the property within its boundaries not legally exempted, and surely no one will contend that it was ever the intention of the law-making power that such lands should be exempted from taxation after the time that the companies should be entitled to a conveyance upon the payment of the costs of surveying, &c., for if so they could be held indefinitely free from taxation, in palpable derogation of the rights of the States. In point of fact they are now largely so held either by the companies or their vendees, are now largely so held either by the companies or their vendees, the vendees in some cases being other corporations formed for the purpose of speculation in these lands, and shamelessly vaunting the exemption from taxation attainded by this evasion of the spirit of the law, and violation of the plainest principles of equity.

The liability to have the lands of the grants not disposed of by the companies within three years after the final completion of the road sold to actual settlers at $1.25 per acre, and the money paid to the company, is avoided by selling all the land worth more than $1.25 to a few persons and corporations holding peculiar relations to the grantees, and through their connivance by the neglect to pay the costs of surveying &c., escaping taxation and preventing the settlement and veying &c., escaping taxation and preventing the settlement and improvement of the country; the grantees at the same time pleading the hability to pre-emption before spoken of as an additional reason for exemption from taxation.

This persistent wronging of the General Government and the States and the nature of the pleas made to the courts makes these corpora-tions appear much like the man who murdered his father and mother and then expressed the hope that the court would not order the execution of a poor orphan. Corporations to be sure cannot be executed or sent to the penitentiary, yet to prevent them from becoming extortioners or tyrants they must be controlled and made subject to law. The manner in which these companies and their vendees use the General Government as an accomplice in cheating the States out of the moneys due to them as taxes is very much like the New Yorker used his brother Jacob to cheat his creditors. I will tell you how they

A New Yorker, while journeying the other day, was recognized by another citizen doing business near the Bowery, he being also away from home on business, and after a little preliminary conversation the first remarked:

"Well, I hear that you had to make an assignment."

"Yes, dat is drew," replied the other.

"And your brother over on Chatham street, he assigned too, didn't he?"

"You zee it was just like dis," said the Bowery man. "I was owing a good deal. I makes over my stock to Jacob and Jacob makes over his stock to me, and I do his peesness and he does my peesness, and dem vellers vhat was after money doan get some!"

The company does business for the Government and the Govern-

The company does business for the Government and the Government does business for the company, and the State tax-gatherer when he goes after money "doan get some."

It may be suggested that without legislation time will bring a remedy. "Lay not that flattering unction to your souls." To ordinary creatures, natural persons, mortal as we are, the flight of time brings death and taxes with a certainty that is proverbial. We live in fear of the one and groan under the periodical infliction of the other; but artificial persons, whose organizations contemplate no dissolution and whose landed estate pays no tribute to the public coffers, can look with complacency upon "Time, the tomb-builder," knowing that his course but tends to strengthen the power of aggregated capital, and hoping that associated knavery, when Credit Mobilier is no longer possible, may still be subserved and the rights of the people, of individual settlers, and of the States may still be ignored or overridden. Like children are said to cry for a favorite patent medicine, these corporations cry for time. Why? Because they expect to transmute fragments of eternity into material wealth. How? you ask. Have they found the philosopher's stone? Not exactly; but a generous Government advanced to them many millions of bonds and interest thereon. They fight in the courts for the longest time for the repayment of that interest to the Government, and succeed in getting a decision that the interest is not payable until the maturity of the bonds. Meantime they cast about for an easy way to pay this great debt and make a proposition new only in its peculiar application.

Allison's History of Europe tells us that Mr. Pitt, more than one hundred years ago, knowing the prodigions powers of accumulation of money at compound interest, and that Dr. Price had demonstrated with mathematical certainty that any sum, however small, increasing in that ratio, would in a given time extinguish any debt, however great, and that it was shown that a penny laid out at compound interest at the birth of our Saviour would in the year 1775 have amounted to a solid mass of gold eighteen hundred times the whole weight of the globe—so that British statesman proposed that a million pounds sterling should be granted yearly by Parliament, to be vested in commissioners; that the payments should be made to them quarterly; and that the whole sums thus drawn should be by them invested in the purchase of stocks to stand in the name of the commissioners, the dividends on which ware to be periodically applied to the further dividends on which were to be periodically applied to the further purchase of stock to stand and have its dividends invested in the same manner, that is, in the purchase of national stocks from individuals, and invested in the public trustees, called the sinking-fund commissioners. Says the historian:

The powers of compound interest were thus brought round from the side of the creditor to that of the debtor, from the fund-holders to the nation; and the national debt was eaten in upon by an accumulating fund, which, increasing in a geometrical progression, would to a certainty, at no distant period, effect its total extinction.

And so it would have done could the sinking fund have been kept intact; but that is a hard thing to do, and in the case cited it was not done. But let us examine this sinking-fund proposition made by these railroad companies. After the absorption of an imperial gift in lands and becoming indebted to the Government many millions of dollars and becoming indebted to the Government many millions of dollars for bonds advanced and interest paid, they make this proposition for the liquidation of the debt and redemption of the mortgages.

It will be seen that Mr. Pitt's proposition differed from the one before the Senate in that this one proposes, instead of giving the nation and the people the benefit of compound interest, to give it to corporations, to associations of men banded together for a speculative purpose, for the benefit of their private fortunes.

A cool suggestion on their part certainly. Being neither more nor less than a proposal to pay an insignificant sum into the Treasury and then to lay hold of the law of difference between arithmetical progression and geometrical progression, causing the interest upon their debt to the Government to advance by simple addition and upon their payments by multiplication, thus making time the principal material of payment from the company to the Government. Surely such a company can have the cheek to express a willingness to "negotiate at any time with the propor representatives of the Government," and remind the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that—

Meantime it is entirely certain that the United States as a second-mortgage creditor of the company is, more than any other person or corporation, vitally interested in protecting the company and maintaining its credit and financial standing.

Does any one doubt longer in view of all these facts the statement of a former Attorney-General speaking of such acts?

This is but a continuation of the Credit Mobilier iniquity, by which large sums of public money were transferred from the people and put into the hands of these stockholders, out of which some of them were able to make vast fortunes.

In view of the history of these companies and their transactions with the United States and the different States, as well as the people generally, perhaps we ought to regard it as modest in them that their proposition implies that the computation of compound interest on their sinking fund and of simple interest on the Government mortgage should cease at such time as the sums may become equal. No principle of equity would demand that such a system of computations if once adopted should cease at that particular juncture. The money already had and used by them was no more desirable than that which will still be in the Treasury at that period; and having then had profitable knowledge of the truth of the adage that "time is money," they will wish to keep the fierce spirit of the glass and scythe still in their service.

The evidence of this disposition on their part is constantly cumulative. I have cited their pertinacity in resisting the payment of their obligations to the General Government, and we see the same policy adopted by them toward the States, resisting as long as possible any legislation of the character proposed in this amendment, then invoking the aid of their old friend Time once more, "Time, my lord, bears a wallet at his back, in which he places alms for oblivion." They ask you to grant years more of time before the States can collect any of the tayes which accure on these lands bereafter and oblivion of the maker. taxes which accrue on these lands hereafter and oblivion of the rights of the States to collect those already accrued. Do you call this maintaining the rights of the States? I call it gross wrong and outrage upon them and a leniency toward powerful corporations, such as indi-upon them and a leniency toward powerful corporations, such as individual property-holders never dare hope for.

It is a wrong against the theory of our Government, against the theory of every civilized government. Taxation is the vital power of States, a necessary evil for which there is no remedy in civilized communities, though Sancho Panza said there was a remedy for everything but death. He had evidently forgotten that taxes are equally without remedy, and equally certain the only alleviation possible is to rest the burden equally upon all property of individuals and corporations alike, and provide the most efficient means of collection. This, in the end, is mercy as well as justice to all. To show the Senate that railway companies, however averse to having their property taxed, yet exercise the power of taxation at will monthe transerty taxed, yet exercise the power of taxation at will upon the transportation of persons and property, I will quote from the report of the Senate committee upon transportation:

In the matter of taxation there are to-day four men representing the four great trunk lines between Chicago and New York who possess and not unfrequently exercise powers which the Congress of the United States would not venture to exert. They may at any time, and for any reason satisfactory to themselves, by a single stroke of the pen, reduce the value of property in this country by hundreds of millions of dollars. An additional charge of five cents per bushel on the transportation of cereals would have been equivalent to a tax of $45,000,000 on the crop of 1873. No Congress would dare to exercise so vast a power except upon a necessity of the most imperative nature; and yet these gentlemen exercise it whenever it suits their supreme will and pleasure without explanation or apology. With the rapid and inevitable progress of combination and consolidation those colossal organizations are daily becoming stronger and more imperious.

This, remember, is not the unmeasured railing of prejudice; it is the conclusion reached by one of the most important committees of this Senate, and the facts warrant the conclusion.

Why, Mr. President, no longer ago than last night we saw in the press dispatches the following:

PREIGHT RATES FROM THE WEST-IMPORTANT ACTION OF THE CONFERENCE AT CHICAGO.

NEW YORK, February 13.

A Chicago dispatch says a very important meeting of general freight agents of the trunk railroads was held there yesterday. There were representatives present from the Baltimore and Ohio, Michigan Central, Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne, Pittsburgh. Cincinnati and Saint Louis, and the Grand Trunk. The meeting was called to settle the schedule, the complications which have arisen regarding the rate on foreign freight; that is, to adopt a plan for insuring uniform rates in competitive traffic destined to European ports. A tariff was agreed upon. While the plan adopted admits of but one uniform rate on all export freight, the trunk lines are left free to make any inland rate they please, so long as it does not conflict with the agreed tariff of European points. This arrangement goes into effect to-morrow, and as an experiment will remain in force during this week at least, and for as much longer time as may be agreeable to all parties. It is a part of the agreement that the general freight agents shall meet every Saturday and revise, or if necessary revoke the new schedule, and at the meeting in New York on the 27th instant, the plan will be finally approved or disapproved by the eastern and western lines in convention.

Not content with taxing the internal commerce of the country at will, they now propose to tax our international commerce in the same way, operating at first experimentally, a week at a time, until the 27th instant, when the plan will be finally approved or disapproved by the eastern and western lines in convention.

In discussing this bill, a few days ago, the senior Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK,] alluding to the Credit Mobilier frauds, said that in its incipiency the Union Pacific Railway Company was marred and scarred by the acts of bad men. This is true, and it is also true unfortunately that the same spirit which then controlled these corporations controls them to-day and will endeavor to so shape events that, in the contingency of the roads reverting to the Government under the mortgages, nothing should remain but two streaks of rust and the right of way. I know that no Senator intends to leave the way open for such results, but events have no pity for good intentions.

It behooves the Senate to consider thoroughly all these propositions. If these roads are to be given the great privilege of making use, in their own favor, of the computation of compound interest on their sinking fund for such time as the bonds may run before maturity, the sinking fund should be made sufficiently large to secure at that time the liquidation of the whole obligation. This requirement should be included in the same bill, and the assent of the company to this legislation should be insisted upon. I say it should be coupled with such legislation as will secure, unquestionably, to the States in which lie the land grants the right and power to secure the taxes due upon those lands. Any other policy would be gross injustice and outrage upon

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. For the purpose of ascertaining the precise purposes and objects which the Railroad Committee and the friends of their bill seek to accomplish by that bill, I desire, at this stage of the debate, to propound to them a few questions, the answers to which ought to have and will be likely to have a very direct bearing upon the question whether it will be sound policy and better for the public interest to substitute that bill in place of this bill from the Judiciary Committee.

First. I wish to inquire if it is the intention and desire of the committee to deprive the Government of the power of amendment and repeal secured by the act of 1864 and of all future power to amend or repeal any of the provisions of the act of 1862 and that of Second. If such be not the intention, why was the sixth section of the bill inserted and the first sentence of the third section, which clearly would have that effect? I here read this sixth section, to show the pertinency of the question.

The section as reported by the committee is as follows:

That if this act shall be accepted by the said companies within four months from the date of its passage, by votes of the directors and stockholders at regular meetings duly called, the same shall be deemed and construed to be a final settlement between the Government and the company or companies so accepting the same; such acceptance to be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

The first part of section 3 also would, as I contend, have the same effect, especially without the amendment proposed first by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] and now renewed by the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH:]

That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in lieu of all payments or other requirements from said companies under said act, and the amendments thereto, in relation to the re-imbursement to the Government of the bonds so issued to said corporations.

If such be the intention, and this Government is to give up for-ever the security which this power of amendment and repeal might afford, does it not become our imperative duty to see, beyond all doubt or question, that the other provisions of this bill shall be such as to secure the public interest in all the various contingencies which may arise?

Fourth. In this view is it wise and will it tend to the promotion or security of the public interests to bind the Government until the distant day when it shall receive full payment for its bonds and interest to send all its eastern and western bound freights by this road when perhaps long prior to that period it might profitably avail itself of the lower rates of charges by competing lines? And more especially can it be wise not only to compel the Government to send by this line, but to pay for such transportation as high rates as it would cost if sent by wagon-trains, pack-horses, and pack-mules, between the same points, which would certainly be the effect of the third section of this bill? Fourth. In this view is it wise and will it tend to the promotion

Fifth. And ought the companies to be relieved from all obligations to maintain their railroad and telegraph line even after their other obligations to the Government have been performed, as would be done under this third section?

To show the pertinency of this question, I read the third section as it stands:

it stands:

That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in lieu of all payments or other requirements from said companies under said act, and the amendments thereto, in relation to the re-imbursement to the Government of the bonds so issued to said corporations: Provided, koncever. That, until the claims of the Government for said bonds and interest are fully paid, said companies shall not in any manner be released from their present liabilities to keep the said rullroads and telegraph lines, constructed under the acts of Congress aforesaid, in repair and use, and to transmit dispatches over said telegraph lines, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroads for the Government, whenever required to do so by any department thereof, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, (said rates not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service,) the whole amount of which shall, upon the compliance by the companies with the provisions hereof, be paid by the Government to said companies on the adjustment of the accounts therefor; and that the Government shail at all times have the preference in the use of said railroads and telegraph lines for all the purposes aforesaid: And provided also, That all Government freight and transportation west-bound, destined for points between the Missouri River and the Pacine coast, and on the Pacific coast, and from said coast, or any point east thereof, east-bound, shall be sent by the said railroads until the aforesaid claims of the Government on account of bonds advanced to the companies are fully paid and satisfied, whenever such freight can be so transported to its place of destination at rates not exceeding the cost at which such freight can be carried by any other means of transportation.

Is it wise to extend the time as this bill does for thirteen or four-

Is it wise to extend the time as this bill does for thirteen or four-teen years for the payment to the Government for its bonds and in-terest, while the Government is paying compound interest semi-an-nually, and the company are only bound to pay simple interest at the maturity.

There were a number of other questions which I thought of pre-senting to the committee for explanation, but, as they have already senting to the committee for explanation, but, as they have already been touched upon, several of them by the Senator from California, [Mr. Booth.] and will undoubtedly be answered by the committee as well, I will refrain from propounding any further questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, [Mr. Booth.]

Mr. WEST. Which one? I should like to have that amendment reported, for the Senator from California offered quite a number of amendments.

amendments

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The pending amendment is to strike out in section 3, line 2, the words "in lieu of" and insert "in addition to;" so as to make it read: "That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in addition to all payments or other requirements from said companies under said act;" and to strike out the word "however," in the proviso, line 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY and Mr. WEST called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. WEST. While the officers of the Senate are engaged in get-Mr. WEST. While the officers of the Senate are engaged in getting a sufficient number of Senators here to vote upon this amendment, I should like to say just one word. This is a distinct proposition to make the companies pay an additional sum to that which they are in law bound to pay. They are bound under the law to pay so much. There is a question how that amount may be computed and what will be the extent of the 5 per cent. application; but this is a direct proposition to make them pay more than the law requires them to pay. If the Senate imagine that such a thing can be accomplished except by the mandates of the courts I think they will find themselves very much mistaken.

The proposition, therefore, remits us at once to the litigation that is contemplated by the Judiciary Committee's bill, with the result.

The proposition, therefore, remits us at once to the litigation that is contemplated by the Judiciary Committee's bill, with the result, as I have stated repeatedly before, if decided adversely to the United States, of involving the loss of over $100,000,000.

Mr. BOOTH. I feel somewhat startled by the proposition that this amendment involves a possible loss to the United States of $100,000,000, and I feel duly grateful to the Senator from Louisiana for his care.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator will pardon me, he did not understand my remark. I said that the remission of the matter to the courts of the United States would inevitably follow the incorporation of such the United States would inevitably follow the incorporation of such an amendment into this bill, and that a decision adversely to the Government of the United States would involve the loss of a hundred millions of dollars.

Mr. BOOTH. The Senator says this would be in violation of the original agreement. The original agreement on the part of the railoriginal agreement. The original agreement on the part of the railroad company was that they should pay a certain sum into the Treasury of the United States, to be applied upon the principal and interest. As interest is due, legal application would first be made for the payment of interest. It is also proposed to pay these bonds, principal and interest, if the interest is not fully paid by this provision, at maturity. This, I acknowledge, changes the theory of the bill, so as to make it conform to the theory that the companies are under obligation to the United States to pay this sum, principal and interest, if it cannot be paid except by the provision of a sinking fund. The object now is to compel them to provide that fund.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to say one word before the vote is taken. I do not propose to make any speech on the bill. The vote is taken. I do not propose to make any speech on the bill. The Senator from Louisiana has several times assumed that the Judiciary Committee's bill contemplated litigation. I am at a loss to imagine Committee's bill contemplated litigation. I am at a loss to imagine why he should assume that. I have no reason to know or believe that the company will or will not accept the propositions that are made in the Judiciary Committee's bill. We have assumed that it would be fair legislation, such legislation as we had a right to indulge in under the law as it stands and under the Constitution. We have assumed the law as it stands and under the Constitution. We have assumed that the companies are prepared to do what the law requires of them or may require of them. We have assumed that they are prepared, as we supposed they pretend all the time to have been, to do their duty under the law and to fulfill their contracts. We have not assumed, nor do I assume, that the bill of the Judiciary Committee insumed, nor do I assume, that the bill of the Judiciary Committee invites, provokes, or brings on unnecessary litigation. I do not know any reason why it should bring on litigation or why the companies are more likely to reject this proposition than to reject the bill reported from the Railroad Committee. However, if it be true that the bill of the Railroad Committee is better for them and worse for the Government they would be more likely to receive it.

But all I desired to say was that I wished no one to accept the proposition of the Santon for I will be the proposition of the Santon f osition of the Senator from Louisiana that this bill is to invite litiga-tion or that it proceeds upon the theory that litigation is to follow.

tion or that it proceeds upon the theory that litigation is to follow. It goes upon the theory that they are prepared to do their duty, and that we are indulging in such legislation as we have a right to indulge in under the Constitution and the laws.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to say one word in regard to the suggestion made now for the third or fourth time by the Senator from Louisiana, that if the Judiciary Committee's bill should pass and the Government should be involved in litigation, and the act should be held unconstitutional, the whole debt against the company would be lost.

Mr. WEST. Does the Senator put that proposition to me now?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I say that such have been the intimations on several different occasions from the chairman of the Committee on Railroads, the Senator from Louisiana; while, on the other hand, I undertook to show—whether I succeeded or not is a question for others than myself—that if we should pass the bill of the Judiciary Committee and it should be held void the old law would remain, and we should have the same law that we have to-day.

Mr. WEST. I am glad that the Senator gives me this opportunity to answer that proposition. I take it for granted that these companies and their successors will be actuated by the common impulse of greed that attaches unfortunately to all human nature; and if we should get a decision from the Supreme Court of the United States, should get a decision from the Supreme Court of the United States, as we got a decision in October, 1875, we will be confronted with the proposition that there shall be placed only to the credit of these companies, between now and 1898, the sum of $25,000,000. Let them once get a decision that you cannot make them pay any more, and you will lean upon a reed if you trust to the honor of any man that he will pay you more than the law requires or compels him to pay.

The stocks of these companies are in the market in the city of New and the moment that such a decision would be rendered they York, and the moment that such a decision would be rendered they would instantly pass into the hands of speculators, and be held for their profit and their advantage; and you will find on October 1, 1898, when your bonds are due, that these companies will have paid only the amount of $25,000,000, and that $125,000,000 will be due to the Government of the United States, with a prior mortgage on the roads of $60,000,000. Then what will be your recourse? To step forward and pay the first mortgage of $60,000,000, and you own a railroad that will have cost you $185,000,000.

I ask the Senator from Michigan whether it is not in his experience that the ownership, the sovereign power of any works of great pulsaria.

I ask the Senator from Michigan whether it is not in his experience that the ownership, the sovereign power, of any works of great public utility will not fritter away the property of the people, and may we not expect that that will be absolutely the result here, so that you jeopard this money? I put the proposition once more that $25,000,000 will be compelled to be paid under the loan of the Government, and they will owe you $125,000,000 more under your first mortgage. Therefore you would be compelled to pay $185,000,000 to buy a great railroad; and in that case you will embark upon a species of business which I do not think very profitable to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTK,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll:

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] upon the main question of the bill. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment. If at liberty to vote I should vote "nay" on the amendment. I do not know whether I ought to vote or not and will ask the opinion of my friend from Iowa in regard to his understanding of the pair.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think the understanding was that the Senator from Connecticut was paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] on all questions in connection with the bill. I know that the Senator from Delaware is opposed to the substitute, but he would be in favor of any proposition that would perfect it.

Mr. EATON. Very well. I will consider myself paired and shall decline to vote

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On the main proposition I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I am informed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT,] who has charge of the bill, that if the Senator from Vermont were here he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL, (when Mr. WHYTE'S name was called.) The Senator from Maryland is detained at home by sickness.

Mr. STEVENSON (when his name was called.) On this question.

Mr. STEVENSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] If he were present I suppose he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea." He is not here, and therefore I decline to vote.

Mr. CHAFFEE, (when his name was called.) I am paired on the main question with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.] Ido not know whether the pair applies to the amendment or not. If he were here I suppose he would vote "yea," I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 22, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bailey, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Harvey, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Oglesby, Robertson, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Kelly, Kernan, Logan, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Spencer, Teller, and West—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Blaine, Bogy, Burnside, Chaffee, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, McMillan, Morton, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Whyte, Windom, and Withers—33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

So the amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute as amended.

Mr. President, I do not rise to detain the Senatelong in relation to this question; but it is obviously a question of vast moment to the people of this country whether they shall lose all the money they have invested in these roads or whether they shall subject the companies to a re-imbursement. Take the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Their annual receipts are over $14,000,000, and their run-Company. Their annual receipts are over $13,000,000, and their running expenses considerably less than 50 per cent. They are able to pay. Under the original charter this stock was to be divided into a hundred thousand shares of a thousand dollars each. That was subsequently amended so as to be a million of shares at a hundred dollars each. Under the first act of 1862 the company could levy and collect as much of the capital stock as they pleased, and no more. Under the act of 1864, they were to hold out subscription books to the extent of hundred million of dellars and they were required to collect the act of 1864, they were to hold out subscription books to the extent of a hundred million of dollars, and they were required to collect that regularly every six months, $5 on a share, until every dollar of this stock was fully paid, and paid in in money. Now it is claimed here on the part of many Senators that these various acts created a contract and nothing but a contract with these roads, and they insist by all manner of ingenious interpretations that the United States is bound by all unfavorable conditions, by every doubt, and yet they do not even allude to any portion of these various acts which imposes obligations upon these companies. It seems to me that here, at the first outset, these companies have nerrographed a great outrace. at the first outset, these companies have perpetrated a great outrage upon their franchise. They were authorized to obtain subscriptions to the extent of a hundred million dollars, and they were required in 1864 to make their stockholders pay up every dollar of their subscriptions. Does anybody suppose that either one of these companies has forced its stockholders to contribute and pay the stock which has been subscribed for by them? If that had been done, would it have been necessary that this first-mortgage lien, which now stands ahead been necessary that this first-mortgage lien, which now stands anead and in advance of that of the United States, should have been made? Why, sir, they would have had funds in their paid-up capital to build the road if they had strictly complied with their charter. Instead of that, unless they are greatly belied, they distributed as profits some millions of the money obtained for the first-mortgage bonds to holders of unpaid stock. They issued bonds to the utmost limits of the law, whether needed to build the road or not, and now they complain when we propose to require them to pay their own debts.

Again, Mr. President, under these various statutes, they were to pay, over to the United States 5 per cent. of their net earnings. They were to pay over one-half of the amount under the last act, and the whole as under the first, of whatever they might have earned for whole as under the first, of whatever they might have earned for transportation on Government account to the United States, and this was to be "annually applied" to principal and interest. Those are the words. Will anybody contend that it is not a legal proposition that whatever is to be applied to a debt must go first to extinguish the interest? Again, Mr. President, they are under direct obligations to pay over this 5 per cent. annually of their net earnings. For eight long years this has been wholly neglected and refused. And we have heard the various—I can call it by no more respectable term—quibblings in relation to what are net earnings. I have never understood that net earnings meant anything more nor less than the amount left on hand after paying the operating expenses of working and managing the road. No annual railroad report was ever made on any other basis. Will it be contended that these roads may include the expenses which they are called upon annually here to maintain for a large lobby in order to get such legislation as they want or to defeat such legislation as they do not want? Will it be contended that such expenses may be deducted before they can pay this 5 per cent. on their

Mr. EATON. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.
Mr. EATON. The first-mortgage bonds of the railroad companies amount to something over $50,000,000. Now, may I ask the Senator from Vermont whether the interest on the first-mortgage bonds must not first be paid before you commence to calculate the net earnings of your company?
Mr. MORRILL. Of course not. That is not a part of the operating expenses.

Mr. EATON. I did not say it was. My own impression is that the operation of the road would cease very quickly if the interest on the first-mortgage bonds was not paid.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Connecticut is a lawyer. If I was asked what are the net earnings he derives from his profession I should say it would be what he earns clear of expenses from his clients; and from no part of that is to be deducted whatever he may owe or pay out on old debts. His net earnings are what he gets from his clients, deducting the cost of daily living.

Mr. EATON. I suppose I may be entitled to deduct what I pay for my library, the rent of my office, &c.

Mr. MORRILL. My friend from Connecticut may make as ingenions an answer as possible to the idea that the interest on the debt of these companies is first to come out of their earnings, but I believe that the common sense of the country will declare, in harmony with all railroad reports, that they can only deduct their operating ex-penses and what would follow from the ordinary management of the road. They may pay out their net earnings on debts, if they have any, or may pay them out in dividends if they have no debts, but these payments are only the application of funds arising from net earnings, without which no such payments could be paid.

Mr WEST. If it will not inconvenience the Senator, will he give his construction-

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I do not propose to occupy a large amount of time and I would rather occupy it without any interruption from my very alert friend from Louisiana.

Mr. WEST. I merely wanted to ask the Senator a question. I am afraid he could not answer it.

Mr. MORRILL. Very likely I could not. I admit my incapacity to answer all of the questions that might be asked. I only propose to talk upon a few points of the case which appear to me to be worthy of some attention.

Mr. President, one thing is very clear, that if there is any ambiguity Mr. President, one thing is very clear, that if there is any ambiguity in the law, the corporation can take no advantage of it. Whatever is ambiguous in its terms gives them no rights whatever. But I do not think, when we come to look at this question, that there is any fatal ambiguity in relation to it. All rights of the Government of the United States are not lost. It appears to me perfectly evident that all that the Government of the United States intended to give to these railroads was a grant of lands and a loan of their credit, which was to be repaid, every dollar of it, principal and interest. Under the bill as reported by the Senator from Louisiana, they are not only to have all the rights that they had under the original acts, but here is perhaps a larger additional gift than was bestowed upon the companies at the very outset. We are to be made to furnish additional capital every year without interest. And how is that to be ditional capital every year without interest. And how is that to be ditional capital every year without interest. And now is that to be brought about? By refusing to apply any payments for the earnings of the company in behalf of the United States, or in any form or manner to the interest as it annually accrues and is paid by the United States, and yet providing that a sinking fund of the charges for services of the road shall be set apart which shall not only be computed at a compound rate of interest but a double compound rate of interest, so to speak. That is to say, it is to be compounded once of interest, so to speak. That is to say, it is to be compounded once in six months instead of once in a year, while all that the Government pays out annually, amounting to between three and four millions of dollars, is to run without any interest under this very astute plan, as reported from the Railroad Committee, until the whole bonds mature, thirty years after their date. And this is said to be the law of the case. If it is, then it is quite time to alter and amend it. But I think it is a subterfuge of the railroad managers.

Mr. President, the grant on the part of the United States that their lien should be suburdinated and come in subsequently to a mortgage lien should be subordinated and come in subsequently to a mortgage on the road of an equal amount to the bonds which were loaned by the United States to the company did not operate to postpone the payment of a dollar to the United States. We only parted with a val-nable security and postponed it. If there was anything due annually, as time went on, it was to be paid and applied to the bonds and the interest thereon. Now let me read from the original act:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the grants aforesaid are made upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity, and shall keep said railroad and telegraph line in repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroad for the Government, whenever required so to do by any Department thereof, &c.

Then it says:

And all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid.

And then, again:

Said company may also pay the United States, wholly or in part, in the same or other bonds. Treasury notes, or other evidences of debt against the United States, to be allowed at par; and after said road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid, at least 5 per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof.

These words must be operative with all their force in these acts, and the clear intent beyond all question was that the Government of the United States was to give absolutely nothing but the lands and the loan of their credit, for which they were to have full and entire repayment; yet as a part and parcel of some of these various propositions that have been made here there is one, made undoubtedly with the approval of the railroad company, that strikes me with some little astonishment, which is that the Government of the United States shall buy back their lands, six million acres, and allow these States shall buy back their lands, six million acres, and allow these companies $15,000,000 therefor.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is nothing of that kind in this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. That is one of the propositions which has been presented. It is not now pending, but it is one of the propositions which have been seriously presented. It is not here in the bill before us; and I only allude to it as being in character and keeping with all the other propositions that seem to be gotten up here for the sole use and benefit of these roads. That proposition went upon the idea of liquidating at least $15,000,000 of debt on the part of these companies. Every foot of land of any value has long since been sold or retained. Every foot of land of any value has long since been sold or retained for the benefit of the roads, and under the very provisions of the act these lands after they have been held by the companies three years were to be sold by the companies themselves for a dollar and a quarter an acre. Even this bald proposition, it seems, has been withdrawn to give place to something possibly more advantageous to the corporations.

Mr. President, there is another thing about this matter. By the first act we retained a limited power of alteration and amendment of the charter, but even under that act the power is amply sufficient, because it required that we should protect the general interest and welfare of the United States, and to keep the road in perpetual working order, whereas it seems to me if we should adopt the policy as proposed by some of the bills here in opposition to the bill proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary, we should ere long find ourselves in the position of a man who sells his far n and takes a mortgage back and then finds that the person he had sold it to was tripping and wasting it. These parties mean to get their three or four millions annually from the Government of the United States; yet I can see no provision by which they are to make not only repayment of the money paid out by the United States, but to keep their roads in perpetual repair or in good working order. They are to pay fat dividends as long as the United States can be made to pay between three perpetual and four millions annually on their account and then go into bankmruptey.

Mr. President, the last proposition in the second act, that of 1864, sets forth that "Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act." That was really the operating, life-giving act. It gave additional privileges to these roads of vast amount, and under that act we have retained the right to alter, amend, or repeal at any time the provisions of it. I would not injure these great corporations one jot or title, but I would not let them jockey us. They can afford to live up to the terms imposed by law and good faith.

The Supreme Court may have decided in a case where the terms of the law were conflicting or ambiguous some provisions against the United States and in favor of the roads, but I have no sort of idea that if the United States Congress should pass an act by which we should give these acts an interpretation of a later date, according to the true intent of Congress, that the Supreme Court would defer to our interpretation. They would not regard this as a closed contract only to be construed in favor of the corporation. There is not one of the various bills before us in relation to these roads which does not present some variance from the letter of the charter. If the bill of the Judiciary Committee is a violation of the contract, so are they all; but our reserved power to alter or amend at any time gives all the power needed to make the original intention of the statutes plain and explicit.

But, Mr. President, I only desire to call attention for a moment to these various provisions in the law, where, as I claim, the roads have not lived up to their contract, and we should require of them, before we give them any large additional favor, to live up to what they were required to do under the original law. Take the man who was most potential in building the Union Pacific Railroad. I think that if he were here to-day and as influential in the management of this road as he was in building it, he would scorn to take advantage of the United States in the way that some of the provisions of these various amendments propose. He would have wished to leave these roads not only as a source of income, but of honor to his successors.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask to take from the Calendar a private bill (S. No. 1175) granting relief to Major P. P. G. Hall, paymaster, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT. As I was about to move a recess I gave way to the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] for the purpose of making a report from a committee of conference, without any expectation that any business would be done or that we should entertain anything else than what was proposed by the Senator from California, and I think it is out of time and out of place to bring up anything in the nature of legislation now.

of legislation now.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not propose to displace the pending order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent not being given, it is necessary to make a motion to postpone the present and all prior

Mr. SPENCER. All I ask is that the railroad bill may be laid aside temporarily

Mr. INGALLS. I think we had better not proceed to the consideration of general business. The Senator from California appealed to the Senate to postpone the consideration of further legislative business for a few moments, in order to allow a conference report to be made. I know that several Senators have left the Capitol, supposing that legislative business for to-day was at an end when we went into executive session, and I trust that the Senator from Alabama will not call up his bill now.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall insist upon calling up the bill. It has been reported unanimously from the committee and it is a bill that ought to be passed, and a bill that any one who understood it, not even the Senator from Kansas, could object to it. Surprising as it may appear, even the Senator from Kansas, when the bill is understood, would not object to it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Alabama is attempting undoubtedly to be facetious at my expense. I do not know anything about the bill and I do not care anything about it. I dare say it is a bill that ought to be passed; but what I say is that at the present time, with the understanding with which we went into executive session, that legislative business would only be resumed for a specific purpose, this bill ought not to be considered.

Mr. SPENCER. Idiffer with the Senator from Kansas entirely. We did not resume legislative business for any specific purpose. Quite a period of time has passed, five or ten minutes, enough to pass just and meritorious bills. There is a majority of the Senate here and I hope they will take up this bill and pass it. I do not attempt to be facetious with the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Alabama ? Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Alabama is attempting undoubtsideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Alabama i

Mr. INGALLS. I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is sufficient. If the Senator from Alabama wishes to make a motion to postpone the present and all prior orders he can do so.

all prior orders he can do so.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to postpone the present and all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding with the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. The Senator from California appealed to me to withdraw the motion for the purpose of making a report from a conference committee. I did so; and now I think, with the Senator from Kansas, it is not the thing to take up other business at this time, when Senators have left the building, and least of all that we should displace the pending order for the purpose of allowing that bill to come up and to pass at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. WRIGHT. I shall not insist on the motion. I am waiting for

Mr. WRIGHT. I shall not insist on the motion. I am waiting for the Senator from California that he may make a conference report. Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from California said it would be five or ten minutes; and he asked the Senate to wait in the mean time. I am satisfied the Senate would pass this bill as soon as it is understood.

EXPENSES OF ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

Mr. WINDOM. If in order I desire to submit a proposition which I am sure will not meet with any objection. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (8. No. 1238) making an appropriation for the expenses of the electoral commission, with an amendment, and I ask its present consideration.

Mr. SPENCER. I will not object to that.
Mr. WRIGHT. It is not to displace the pending order, of course.
By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It appropriates the sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of the electoral commission provided for by the act approved January 29, 1877, entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term compencing March 4, A. D. 1877," the sum to be disbursed upon the certificate of the president of the commission.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided. That any person employed by said commission may receive such compensation as may be allowed by said commission in addition to any other compensation or salary he may be receiving as an officer of the Government.

Mr. WINDOM. In explanation of the amount appropriated by the bill I desire to state that it was fixed upon consultation with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] who is a member of the commission. The Senator from Vermont said that the amount ought to be from $5,000 to $10,000. The committee have thought $7,000 was a little below the average and probably was the judicious sum to be fixed. The amendment reported from the committee was also made at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, and I suppose at the suggestion of the commission. That is the information upon which

Mr. WINDOM. The amendment is designed, as I understand it, to pay the persons who are employed extra time the extra compensation which the commission may allow them.

Mr. MERRIMON. What is the character of the services which are to be paid?

Mr. WINDOM. Of that I am not advised.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose the stenographers and doorkeepers. Mr. WINDOM. Stenographers, doorkeepers, and all the employés of the commission.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to inquire whether the bill contem-

Mr. KEKNAN. I should like to inquire whether the bill contemplates paying the commissioners themselves.

Mr. WINDOM. It does not.

Mr. KERNAN. Merely the employés?

Mr. WINDOM. The employés? I suppose the sergeant-at-arms, the doorkeepers, the stenographers, and whatever the employés are. If we can submit to the commission the great question who is to be President, we can trust them a little in regard to the payment of their employée.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know so well about that. I should like to have their judgment first upon the other question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report:

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. No. 12:2) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment after the word "for," in line 2 of said amendment, and substitute therefor the following: "Composition than fifty cents per thousand ems, and forty cents per hour for time-work, to printers and book-binders."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Mr. SARGENT. This is simply a compromise between the two Houses, and fixes the rate of compensation after the best advice we could get. The second amendment is simply to the title.

The report was concurred in.

EXPENSES IN ELECTION CONTESTS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. By order of the Committee of Elections, I ask unanimous consent to move as amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill, when it comes to be considered in Committee of the Whole, various items to pay expenses of contestants and contestees in election cases. I suppose there is no necessity of reading the various items.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let them be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let them be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FORT. I have no objection provided the gentleman will accept an amendedment for Mr. Farwell as contestant for $5,000.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have no objection to accept the amendment with the understanding it shall be liable to a motion to strike out; for there are already two cases I expect myself to move to strike out when the question comes up for consideration.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman has included all others except Mr.

Farwell.

STURGEON BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. LYNDE, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, asking for an appropriation to aid in the completion of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-Canal and harbor, and to extend the time for the completion thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, ordered to be printed, and also printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial to Congress for an appropriation to aid in the completion of the Sturgeon Bay a d Lake Michigan Ship-Canal and harbor, and to extend the time for the completion thereof.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully represents that in the year 1866; ongress made a grant of 200,000 acres of land to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a ship-canal from Sturgeon Bay to Lake Michigan and to construct a break-water and harbor at the mouth of such canal in Lake Michigan; that by the terms of said grant the lands so appropriated could not be used or made available for the commencement of this important work nor for the pro-ecution or completion thereof within the time required; that for the purpose of prosecuting said work the State conferred said grant upon a corporation created, organized, and known as the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-Canal and Harbor Company. That this company has constructed more than one-quarter of said canal mostly from its own resources and private subscriptions; that said company has exhausted all reasonable efforts to borrow money to prosecute the work by pledging the entire land grant and canal for security, but owing to the depreciation of said grant in consequence of the destructive fire of 1871; which destroyed much of the timber thereon, and the unusual terms of the act granting said lands, in authorizing the Government of the United States to take possession of said canal when completed, the company has been unable to raise means to prosecute the work.

Your memorialists therefore ask that Congress appropriate the sum of $100.000 to aid in the completion of said canal and barbor, and that the time for completing the same be extended three years from the 1st day of July next.

Approved February 6, 1877.

Secretary of State.

Mr. LYNDE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4647) making an appropriation to aid in the completion of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-Canaland harbor in the State of Wisconsin, and to extend the time for the completion thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize gentlemen in their turn to get rid of business usually presented on Monday.

SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HALE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4648) authorizing the Treasury Department to settle certain accounts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HUMPHREY CALLAHAN.

Mr. HALE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4649) granting a pension to Humphrey Callahan, late a private soldier in the service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the State of Illinois, concerning Government swamp lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed, and also printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 11, concerning Government swamp lands.

Senate joint resolution No. 11, concerning Government swamp lands.

Whereas section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1855, entitled "An act to amend the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled 'An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits," provides that upon due proof by the agent of the State or States before the Commissioner of the General Land Office that any land was located subsequent to the 28th day of September, 1850, by warrants or scrip, the State or States should be authorized to locate a quantity of like amount upon any of the public land subject to entry at $1.25 per acre or less;

And whereas said law is inoperative on account of the rules and decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, declaring that said indemnity scrip can only be located upon lands subject to entry in the State of Illinois, and of his refusal to further issue said scrip: Therefore,

Be it resolved, (the senate and house concurring therein,) That the Congress of the United States be requested by act or otherwise to instruct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue said scrip and to allow its location upon any of the public lands subject to entry at $1.25 per acre or less, within cr without the State of Illinois, and that he be directed to issue the same in eighty and one hundred and sixty acre tracts.

COMMISSIONERS OF DEEDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CRAPO, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4650) relating to commissioners of deeds in the District of Columbia for the various States and Territories: which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT LAW IN RESPECT TO NEGLIGENCE.

Mr. CRAPO, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4651) to amend the law in respect to negligence in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN L. TAYLOR.

Mr. KIDDER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4652) granting a pension to John L. Taylor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JULIA A. NUTT.

Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 807) for the benefit of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased, with amendments; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered

ELIZABETH CARSON.

Mr. MILLIKEN also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (S. No. 973) for the relief of Elizabeth Carson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

AMOUNT OF BULLION IN THE TREASURY.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution of inquiry for action at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to this House within ten days from the passage of this resolution, the actual amount of gold coin and gold bullion and silver coin and silver bul ion respectively now in the Treasury, together with a detailed statement of all outstanding obligations payable on demand in coin, with the balance actually owned by the Government available for the resumption of specie payments. Also, whether any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations have been issued during the past or present year in the purchase or otherwise obtaining of any such coin or bullion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution ?

Mr. KASSON. I must object to so much of it as relates to bullion owing to its influence on certain speculative operations in the market.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot object in a qualified manner.

Mr. KASSON. It is necessary that I make the objection in that way in order to give the gentleman from Ohio the option of modifying the resolution or not. I object to it in its present form.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio consent to modify the resolution?

Mr. SAYLER. I do not. I withdraw the resolution and will offer it on another occasion.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. GOODIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1715, a bill (H. R. No. 4653) to authorize the assignees of the State of Illinois to select and enter public lands, to which said State is entitled under and by the provisions of the several acts of Congress, namely: the act of September 28, 1850, known as the swamp-land act; the act of the 2d of March, 1855, known as the indemnity act, and the act extending the provisions of said act, passed March 3, 1857; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGREEMENT WITH SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. BOONE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1185) to ratify an agreement with certain bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians and also with the Northern Arapaho of the Sioux Nation of Indians and also with the Northern Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians, and that the bill be now put upon its passage. Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. BOONE. Then I will ask that the bill be made a special order to be considered immediately after the naval appropriation bill is disposed of. It is an important measure, and if gentleman had examined the bill I am sure there could not be an objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that this bill be made a special order after the naval appropriation bill shall have been disposed of?

Mr. MILLS. I object unless there is an amendment put on the bill prohibiting the Sioux Indians being removed to the Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize a qualified objec-

Mr. MILLS. Then I object unconditionally.

Sometime subsequently,
Mr. MILLS said: I withdraw my objection to the assignment of the Sioux agreement bill as a special order, having the assurances of friends of the bill that they will not oppose my amendment when it comes up for discussion and that we will have a free discussion. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I rise to make the inquiry if that order will supersede the consideration of the other measures already assigned for consideration as special orders, the Oklahoma bill and the Omaha bridge bill.

The SPEAKER: The bills to which the gentleman from Texas

[Mr. Throckmorton] alludes are in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. This would be a special order in the House.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Then I make no objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further objection the order will be made as requested by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Boone.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that it be made a condition of the order that this bill shall not run on from day to day, so as to interfere with the consideration of the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The order will be so modified as that it will not interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills.

There being no further objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and made a special order for consideration immediately after the naval appropriation bill shall have been disposed of.

JOHN T. MASON.

Mr. ROBERTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4654) to remove the political disabilities of John T. Mason, of Maryland; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask that the bill may now be put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It provides for the removal of all political disabilities imposed upon John T. Mason, of the State of Maryland, by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States by reason of participation in the rebellion.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the petition.

The petition was read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ODELL. I desire to introduce a bill for reference. Mr. HOLMAN. After this I shall have to insist on the regular

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that if he will permit it business will be expedited by allowing gentlemen to introduce bills for reference, as they have been cut off for several Mondays, and also by allowing the disposition of other matters by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Although I think a more appropriate time might have been selected than the present for that purpose, I withdraw the call for the regular order that bills may be introduced for reference.

BRIDGING NEPPERHAN CREEK.

Mr. ODELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a petition praying for the construction of bridges over the tide-water of Nepperhan Creek, in the State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be

ESTATE OF GEORGE H. LEE.

Mr. MONEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4655) for the relief of the estate of George H. Lee, late of Lowndes County, Mississippi, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A. W. PLYMALE.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary, for the purpose of putting it upon its passage, the bill (H. R. No. 4301) for the relief of A. W. Plymale, of West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill ?

Mr. CONGER. Is this a report from a committee?

Mr. CONGER. Is this a report from a committee?
The SPEAKER. It is a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.
Mr. CAULFIELD. I hold in my hand letters from the Secretary of the Interior, showing the propriety of the passage of this bill.
Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to this bill, nor do I object to the introduction of bills for reference, but I object to any legislation.
Mr. CAULFIELD. I supposed I had the floor.
Mr. HOLMAN. I stated distinctly I did not object to the introduction of bills for reference, but I do object to the introduction of bills for reference, but I do object to the introduction of bills for the purpose of putting them on their passage.
Mr. CAULFIELD. The bill would have been passed by this time if the gentleman had not objected.
The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed to direct the pension agent at Wheeling. West Virginia, to issue duplicate check No. 18776, for $1.032, in favor of A. W. Plymale, for one lost in the mail on or about July 1, 1876: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be satisfied that the same has not been paid: And provided further, That said A. W. Plymale shall first execute a bond, with good and sufficient surveites, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, to hold the United States harmless against the double payment of such check.

So the bill was passed.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAULFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOLDEN, GEORGETOWN AND CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4653) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Golden, Georgetown and Central Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT AUSTIN, TEXAS.

Mr. WOODWORTH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4657) as a substitute for House bill 1512, to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, and internal-revenue offices at Austin, Texas; which was read a first and second

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be constructed a suitable building with fire-proof vaults at Austin, in the State of Texas, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and internal-revenue offices, at a cost not exceeding $100,000, including the cost of the site, and provides that no money shall be used or paid for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the land for the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess the said site or property of the United States thereon during the time that the United States shall be owners

Mr. CONGER. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he put in an amendment providing that the State of Texas shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over the site.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think that is included in the bill.

Mr. CONGER. No, it requires the State of Texas to relinquish the right to tax this property, but does not require it to cede jurisdiction

Mr. WOODWORTH. I have no objection to an amendment to that Mr. CONGER. I move, then, to add to the proviso the words:

And cede jurisdiction thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to that amendment. That is already done by the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WOODWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREEDMAN'S BANK.

Mr. STENGER. In behalf of the select committee in charge of affairs of the Freedman's Bank I ask unanimous consent to report back the bill (H. R. No. 4289) to amend the act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, with amendments thereto, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object to that bill on account of the last section. The bill requires more time for its consideration.

Mr. SAVAGE. I demand the regular order of business.

TONNAGE TAX.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SAVAGE. I will yield for that purpose, and then I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent to report back with an amendment, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the bill (S. No. 994) to amend section 2931 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow repayment by the Secretary of the Treasury of the tonnage tax where it has been exacted in contravention of treaty

I will state that this bill has been unanimously passed by the Senate and its passage is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the provisions of section 2911, of chapter 6, title 34, of the Revised Statutes, shall not apply to cases of the payment of tonnage tax on vessels where the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that the exaction of such tax was in contravention of treaty provisions; and he may drawh is warrant for the refund of the tax so illegally exacted, as is provided in section 3012½ of said statutes.

The amendment reported from the committee was to make the proviso read as follows:

Provided. That the Secretary of the Treasury is not hereby authorized to refund any tonnage duties that may have been paid before the 14th day of July,  $\Lambda$ . D. 1862.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the right to object for a mo-

Mr. SAVAGE. I must insist upon the regular order.
Mr. CONGER. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair in reference to the various bills, &c., that have been referred and committed this morning. I would inquire if they can be brought back into the House by motions to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the rule all bills

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the rule all bills introduced and referred by unanimous consent cannot be brought back into the House by motions to reconsider. But bills reported from committees and recommitted may be brought back by motions to reconsider. The Chair has taken occasion this morning whenever there were reports from committees that were recommitted to make himself, as it were, the motion that they shall not be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider. Sometimes members do not recollect, and the Chair always exercises that right.

ELECTION IN FLORIDA.

Mr. HALE. I would inquire of the Chair what is the regular order, and what is its position before the House?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the resolution reported from the select committee on the recent election in the State of Florida, upon which the gentleman from Massachusets [Mr. Thompson] is entitled to the floor

Mr. HALE. The main question has been ordered upon the resolution ?

The SPEAKER. It has been, and the vote will be taken after one honr for closing debate.

The resolution of the committee is as follows:

Resolved. That at the election held on November 7, A. D. 1876, in the State of Florida, Wilkinson Call, J. E. Yonge, R. B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock were fairly and duly chosen as presidential electors, and that this is shown by the face of the returns and fully substantiated by the evidence of the actual votes cast; and that the said electors having, on the first Wednesday of December, A. D. 1876, cast their votes for Samuel J. Tilden for President and for Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President, they are the legal votes of the State of Florida and must be counted as such

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, she special committee sent to Florida were charged to investigate the recent election therein, and the action of the returning or canvassing board in that State with reference thereto, and to report all the facts essential to an honest return of the votes received by the electors of the said State for President and Vice-President, and to a fair understanding thereof by

That is the duty with which this committee was charged. I would not now say a word with regard to their report, as the questions involved in it have been quite fully discussed upon the one side and upon the other, were it not for the fact that the minority of the committee in their report have reflected most severely and unjustly upon the action of the majority of the committee in the conducting of the investigation with which they were charged by this House. They say substantially they were treated unfairly in this investiga-

Mr. Speaker, nothing can be further from the facts of the case. They were treated by the majority with the highest degree of consideration. And certainly the majority would have been justly entitled to the scorn and contempt of this House and of the country had they undertaken in any manner or form to restrict the minority in a fair and full examination of the case as they understood it. The fair and full examination of the case as they understood it. The majority of this committee have done no such thing. They have afforded the minority every possible facility. The minority never asked for anything to be done that was reasonable but what it was always done. They were always consulted as to the time, place, and manner of conducting the investigations; and any charge to the contrary I pronounce here to be untrue.

Now, allow me to call the attention of the House to some matters in reference to which the minority of the committee make this charge. They say that we treated them unfairly in this particular: that we did not permit them to spread upon the record and bring before this House all the papers that were used by the people in the State of Florida before the board of State canvassers. Had we done that we should have been guilty of a gross violation of duty. We that we should have been guilty of a gross violation of duty. We were sent down there, not to gather up chaff, but to obtain facts.

We were not sent there for the purpose of collecting a mass of exparte affidavits that never were read to the parties. That fact is clearly established that the affidavits were not read to the parties; that they did not know what they signed, and they denied even that they were sworn.

The majority of that committee would have been pleased to have the minority exercise their right of calling before them every person who made an affidavit before that canvassing board. The minority had the right to call every person whose affidavit was so used to have him examined and the facts made known. They say that we kept from them the papers in the case. Sir, they had access to them in the office of the secretary of state of Florida. They took from the office of the secretary of state affidavits, summoned their witnesses from them, carried them to places where the examination was had, and conducted the examination from those affidavits. They had over a hundred of these witnesses who had subscribed these affi davits summoned and present before the committee. Finding that they were testifying falsely they dismissed one hundred and eight of them without putting them on the stand. That is the class of testimony they wanted this committee to bring back to this House, testimony they wanted this committee to bring back to this House, testimony they wanted this committee to bring back to this House, testimony they wanted this committee to bring back to this House, testimony they wanted the same testimony that the same testimony they wanted the same testimony they wanted the same testimony that they are the same testimony that they are the same testimony they wanted the same testimony that they are the same testimony that the same testimony that they are the same testimony that the sam mony they wanted this committee to bring back to this House, testimony of witnesses that they would not put on the stand when they had the opportunity to do so, when they had the witnesses present.

The course pu sned by the majority of the committee I know will meet the approbation of the House. So far as the majority of the committee were concerned we did not intend to bring here any testimony but what would be legal testimony in any court of justice in the United States. We conducted the examination in the same manner that we would have conducted the trial of a cause in court, because we supposed that the country wished to know facts, not rumors. cause we supposed that the country wished to know facts, not rumors. We assumed that the country expected us to bring sworn testimony, to have the witnesses before us and have both parties examine them fully, so that it might be judged whether they were truthful witnesses or not, that their testimony might have such weight as it was honestly entitled to.

Now the minority of the committee complain that we did not ermit them to cumber this record with a great mass of falsehoods. permit them to cumber this record with a great mass of faist hoots. They acknowledge that these affidavits were false; yet they desired to enlighten the country by bringing forward a mass of falsehoods! Certainly the majority of the committee desired to do nothing of that

Ah, but we have an explanation of the disposition of the minority. We have their statement as to what they were anxious to do. Let us see what the minority were laboring for:

The want of these documents thus withheld was felt at every step of our investigation, and rendered us unable in many instances to make that defense of the canvassing board which it justly deserved. We believed then, as we believe now, that the board acted with singular fidelity and utmost fairness.

They were down there for the purpose of justifying the illegal action of the canvassing board. They admit that in the clearest and plainest terms. They were not down there to get facts with reference to the election at all; they were not down there for the purpose of ascertaining whether that returning board acted legally or illegally or their own. gally; but they were down there, as they admit here over their own signatures, for the purpose of justifying the action of the returning board, every act of whom, where they undertook to change the result as it appears upon the face of the returns, was illegal. The minority believe that to be just, believe their illegal acts are just. Mark their language in regard to the canvassing board: "The board acted with singular fidelity and utmost fairness." "Fidelity" to whom?

with singular fidelity and utmost fairness." "Fidelity" to whom? Fide.ity to the country? No; they endeavored to impose upon the country a usurper. "Singular fidelity" to the State of Florida? No; they undertook to cheat the people of Florida out of their governor and to impose upon that State a governor not of their choice. This is the "fidelity" which the minority admire.

I ask the attention of the House to the facts in this case. That returning board, "acting with singular fidelity," made a false return, a return that they knew to be false, which they intended to make false. They intended to put upon the State a person as governor who was not elected; and the minority say that that was "fidelity." That is the spirit of the minority report. I say that the minority of this committee were certainly very faithful in this direction.

who was not elected; and the minority say that that was "fidelity." That is the spirit of the minority report. I say that the minority of this committee were certainly very faithful in this direction.

Why, sir, what did that returning board do? Although they were ordered on the 27th of December to meet and canvass, it was not until the 1st of January, just before the inauguration of Governor Drew, that they made return that he was elected. They exercised "singular fidelity" in this matter! They had said that Stearns was elected by over 400 majority, when, in fact, Drew had a decided majority. In this they showed their "fidelity;" and the minority believe that they were very faithful in this matter.

The minority say that by reason of the majority not allowing all the papers on file in the office of the secretary of state relative to the canvass to be consulted, they were compelled throughout the entire investigation to grope their way in the dark. If they did not see those papers and documents, how did they learn that the canvassing board acted "with singular fidelity and the utmost fairness?"

The majority simply wished to present the facts. They did not go to Florida to justify or condemn the action of that board. They went there to ascertain whether its action was legal or illegal. If it had been legal, the majority would have so reported just as cheerfully as they now report the fact that their action was wholly illegal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is charged against the majority that we did

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is charged against the majority that we did not examine the precincts. I say that the charge is untrue in every particular. The minority affirm substantially that they knew of frauds in Florida committed by democrats; but they admit they did frauds in Florida committed by democrats; but they admit they did not bring them to the attention of the committee while there. It ill becomes them now to make that charge here. They have a right to confess their own misdoings, their own shortcomings; but they have no right to make charges here against the majority for not making an examination where they had no notice of the matter to be exam-ined into. It may be true (for I am prepared to believe any wrong they may confess) that, being sent down there by this House to make an investigation, they heard of democratic frauds and did not summon witnesses to prove such frauds, for the reason that they did not believe the reports. Every witness that they ever asked to have summoned was summoned if he could be found. They summoned one hundred more than the majority did. Yet they come here now and confess before this House and the country that they knew of democratic fraud down there and did not call the attention of the committee to it. They do not state those frauds to-day. They never intimated to the committee while in Florida that they had any information with regard to the committee while in Florida that they had any information with regard to such frands; and I do not believe that they ever did have any information in regard to them which they regarded reliable. They may confess their fault, but they have no right to make the charge that democratic frauds did exist when they failed to report them to the committee or to have the witnesses they were informed knew the

The water water and the state of the state and the state with facts summoned to give the facts.

Why, sir, look at the report of the State canvassing board which the minority have brought in here, although it certainly does not belong here. The minority say that there were as many precincts not examined as we did examine. Examine that report. Nassan County was canvassed according to the face of the returns by a unanimous vote. I suppose that is one of the places where there were democratic frauds, though they never said anything about them and never intimated to us that there were any. In Orange County 7 illegal votes were deducted from the democratic electoral and State vote; and with that deduction the county was canvassed by a unanimous I suppose there were democratic frauds in Orange County; for that is one in regard to which they did not see fit to call any witnesses. It was a county two hundred miles from Tallahassee. At one place in that county there were 7 illegal votes, not fraudulent votes; and the canvassing board had no right to consider those votes or make the deduction which they did.

In Alachua County 4 republican and 13 democratic illegal electoral votes at Waldo precinct were unanimously thrown out. There is no allegation of fraud; the votes are alleged by the board to be illegal. There being no fraud alleged the committee did not examine into that precinct. The minority did not ask to have it examined into and did not call any witnesses with reference to it. Your committee were advised that the votes were cast by parties under a misapprehension of their rights and without any fraudulent intent. Your committee did not hear of any other allegations of irregularities.

They were to make the canvass upon the face of the returns; and now the minority come and say because we did not go to Orange, two hundred miles, and inquire into 7 illegal, not fraudulent, votes, votes the canvassing board had no right to make any inquiry into, and did not inquire in the Waldo vote, therefore we are guilty of a great wrong. I ask the gentlemen of the minority, "Why did you not summon witnesses if there was any fraud and have the fraud examined into?" If they knew of fraud why did they not prove it? They had full newer to approach witnesses. had full power to summon witnesses.

They come now and charge upon the majority a want of fidelity. Where is the want of fidelity? Is it not with them and not with us? I say this: we did examine into every case of fraud which we heard of in the State of Florida.

Mr. DUNNELL rose.

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot allow you to interrupt me; you were discourteous to me yesterday, and now for me to seem to be so is cour-

Mr. DUNNELL rose.

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot allow you to interrupt me, sir; you cut me off twice yesterday.

Mr. DUNNELL. Stop your questions, then.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not by any manner of means. [Langhter.] I do not propose to let a man who openly upon the floor of the House on two recent occasions declined to have me put a question now claim successfully that which he himself would not grant.

They summoned a witness a thousand miles distant. They took him from Washington to Tallahassee, and after they got him did not call him. They took him I believe to act as side counsel and not for his testimony. Then they called witnesses five hundred miles from where they claimed there was fraud.

I say again, Mr. Speaker, that declaration, that we failed to make a full, fair investigation into all the frauds which were alleged in the State of Florida, is without any foundation in fact at all. If they had made the suggestion of fraud and that they wanted witnesses to made the suggestion of fraud and that they wanted witnesses to prove it, they knew how readily the subpœna would have been issued, how prompt the Sergeant-at-Arms would have been to execute it, and how pleased the majority of the committee would have been to have seen such witnesses. Some of the best witnesses produced were those called by the minority to show up the frauds they seemed auxious to conceal. Their witnesses helped them but little if at all, and they now come here to cover up the fact they did not get any evidence there of value by saying they did not have the opportunity to get

Ah, Mr. Speaker, they admit, as far as the examination went, it was favorable to the majority. Let me read from this report. Sometimes truth is told by accident, and when it is it is most reliable. [Laughter.] Here is what they say in their report :

But ten of these precincts are inquired into, and the other ten shunned, as if rom fear that disclosures there might overturn the findings in the other ten.

Overturn the findings in the other ten! Admitting clearly and conclusively the findings in the ten we did examine were all in favor of the position which the majority have taken. But I may suggest, if they were informed of any frauds, they believed the success they had had in the examination made by them did not warrant them in calling witnesses to such alleged frauds.

ing witnesses to such alleged frauds.

I am commenting now upon the fairness of the minority. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] said in his place; said it deliberately; said it after his attention was called to the fact in regard to Manatee that no voting-places had been assigned or inspectors appointed there; said that Mr. Graham, the only witness called from Manatee, testified no voting-places had been assigned nor inspectors appointed in that county. I read from the testimony of Mr. Graham in answer to interrogatories put to him by the gentleman from Minnesota, and what does he say? These are the questions put to Mr. Graham by the gentleman from Minnesota himself: Graham by the gentleman from Minnesota himself:

Question. Were there any inspectors appointed by the county commissioners? Answer, Yes, sir.

He says he said no. Let us look at the voting-precincts. It is his own qestion; he knew the facts:

Q. Who were the inspectors †
A. I do not know their names.
Q. Did the county commissioners of that county create voting-places †
A. Yes, sir.

He knew that fact. He put the questions himself, but still knowing that fact, knowing the testimony, he said in his place the witness swore that the county commissioners had not assigned voting-places, that they had not appointed inspectors. And I say this, upon my honor as a member of this House, that is about an average misrepresentation of the minority in their report.

Mr. DUNNELL rose.

Mr. DUNNELL rose.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not permit the gentleman to interrupt me when I am making a plain statement of facts. [Laughter.] And here is the certificate of the minutes of the county commissioners of Manatee appointing voting-places and inspectors of election, to which his attention was specially called before he made his speech, certified by the clerk of the circuit court of Manatee, who is also clerk of the county commissioners, showing that was done upon the 14th day of September last regularly and lawfully, and he knew it when he made the statement he did upon the floor of this House.

Now Mr. Speaker I want to come to two or three other equally.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to come to two or three other equally clear statements. The gentleman says upon the floor of this House that in Alachua County Mr. Moore said that he authorized either Mr. Black or Mr. Vance to sign a paper, and that that fairly interpreted means that he gave them the authority to sign two papers. He admits that they or one of them did sign two in his name. Now, I call the attention of the House to this fact in particular. Let me state it first and then produce the testimony. The testimony of Black and Vance was that there was only one paper which Moore authorized them to sign. And now they say that the authority to sign but one gives the authority to sign two, and that Black and Vance were entitled to write another, to commit a forgery, and sign another return in place of the one which Mr. Moore had already signed. That is their interpretation of the law.

Let me read a little now to refresh their recollection. I read now from the testimony of Mr. Black. Mr. Black says this: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to come to two or three other equally Question. After the count was made what did the inspectors and clerks proceed to do?

Answer. After the count was made they proceeded then to count up, make a tally. Then I rise up myself in my seat and asked Moore to come up and sign the returns. The clerk having compared them, I signed my name. Mr. Moore complained of having a sore finger, or something to that effect, and I insisted upon his signing, which he did.

"Which he did." He signed one; and this is the testimony of Mr.

Q. You remember of Moore signing one return?
A. Yes, sir: I know that he came up and signed one. I wrote mine first and then Floyd Dukes's and had him to touch the pen; then Moore came up and signed his; and we did the same way, with the exception of his making that report, as near as I can recollect.
Q. And whether he signed the second one you cannot say?
A. That I can't say now.
Q. He may have signed the second one for aught you know?
A. Yes, sir; as far as I know.

Vance says in answer to the question:

Q. Did you see Floyd Dukes when he made his mark?
A. Yes, sir; he touched the pen.
Q. And Green R. Moore, when he signed it?
A. He signed one of them and the other he asked Black to sign. He says "My finger is sore." I don't know which one it was that he signed? I am not familiar with Q. Do you remember as a distinct fact that Mr. Moore signed one of them? A. Yes, sir. writing.

He remembers as a distinct fact that Moore signed one of them. Moore swears that he signed one of the returns, and now when it is found that neither of them are signed by Moore, that two are brought in neither of which was signed by Moore, they undertake to come before the House and say that his authority to sign one gave authority to sign two. When there was but one to sign they had a right to disregard the one that was signed by Moore and commit a forgery.

There never was a clearer case of forgery proved than was proved in that case. But the minority say that the parties proved to have committed it are unimpeached witnesses; say that that does not impeach the witnesses. They were both guilty of perjury. They speak of Black and Vance as being two witnesses unimpeached. Let me show you what kind of witnesses they have who they say were not impeached. Here is Mr. Vance who acted as clerk at that election. Let me show his perjury in detail. He went down from Gainesville to Archer for the purpose of acting as the clerk of election there. Let me read his examination as to this. This is Mr. Vance who they say is unimpeached.

By the CHAIRMAN:

By the CHARMAN:

Question. How came you down to Archer on the 7th?

Answer. I went down the day before, on the 6th, to see Mr. Brown.

Q. Where did Mr. Brown live?

A. In Archer.

Q. How far from this voting-precinct?

A. It might be tifty or twenty-five yards.

Q. What time of day did you go down there?

A. I went down on the evening train.

Q. Did you go down there on any business connected with the election?

A. No, sir.

Q. Only private business with Mr. Brown?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go down with any intention of remaining and acting as clerk of election?

A. I did not at that time.

See whether I meant to entrap the witness or not; whether I used the witness fairly or not.

Q. Do you understand my question? I ask you if you went down to Archer with the intention of acting as clerk at this voting-precinct, or either of them?

A. I went down to see Mr. John Brown.
Q. I ask you now again whether you went down to Archer with the intention of being clerk at either one of these voting-precincts?

A. No, sir.
Q. Had it been suggested to you in any manner or form that you might be wanted as clerk down there?

A. I don't remember of it.

Then, I had the certificate of the clerk, that at Gainsville, on the 6th day of November, before going to Archer, he subscribed and took an oath to act as clerk of election at Archer, Archer being thirteen miles from Gainesville.

Question. Is not that your signature? [Handing document to witness.]

Question. Is not that your signature? [Handing document to witness.] Answer. Yes, sir. Q. Where did you sign that? A. At the polls. Q. Did you not sign it here in this city before you went down? A. No, sir. Q. Are you sure about that? A. I am. Q. Look it over carefully. I do not want you to make any mistake about it. A. I am sure of it. Q. Read it aloud.

I asked the witness to read it aloud. He did so.

I asked the witness to read it aloud. He did so.

"State of Florida, Alachua County. I, the undersigned, Thomas H. Vance, clerk of the election held at Archer, in the county of Alachua, in the State aforesaid, on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1876, under and by virtue of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the registration of electors and the holding of elections, approved Angust 6, 1868, and an act amendatory thereof, approved February 27, 1872, do solemnly swear that I will perform the duty of clerk of the before-mentioned election according to law; that I will endeavor to prevent all frand, deecit, and abuse in conducting the same. Thomas H. Vance, clerk of election. Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 6th day of November, A. D. 1876. Irving E. Webster, clerk of the circuit court."

And the clerk of the circuit court made oath that he swore him to it. I will read what the clerk says:

TRYING E. WEBSTER recalled and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. You were clerk of the circuit court of this county?

Answer. I was. I am now acting clerk.
Q. Have you the oath of the clerk of Archer Precinct No. 2?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Please produce it.
[Witness produces oath.]
Q. Did you administer that oath to Mr. Vance?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. When did you administer it?
A. On the 6th day of November; on Monday, I think it was.
Q. The Monday before the election?
A. The day before the election.
Q. Where did you administer it to him?
A. In my office in the court-house.
Q. About what time in the day?
A. That I could not state; it has gone from my mind.
Q Did he say anything to you about whether he was going to act and what he wanted the coath for?
A. Yes, sir; I asked him if he was to be clerk of the election there, and he said it was understood so, I believe, and he wished to be sworn.

And this, let me say, is republican testimony. The evidence of the

And this, let me say, is republican testimony. The evidence of the perjury of Black is equally clear. Now the minority say that forgery and perjury do not impeach a witness. I know that in their estimation it does not. I know from their report in their estimation perjury and forgery proved against witnesses in the very cause they are witnesses in does not impeach them. It was the testimony that they wanted, and they took it willingly from such witnesses and present it to the House, claiming it to be reliable, unimpeached testimony. Yet this perjury of the clerk and inspector of election at Archer No. 2 was proved before the member from Minnesota; he heard the perjury; he saw the forgery, and knew it; and now he comes in and says that those witnesses were not impeached. I admit that from his stand-point they were not. [Laughter.] But from the stand-point of the majority they were impeached, and in my judgment and, as I believe, in the judgment of this House and of the whole country, they were impeached. And when the minority undertake to impose upon this House and the country such witnesses as unimpeached witnesses, they will have very little respect for the report which is made upon such a basis as that and upon such a code of morals as that.

such a basis as that and upon such a code of morals as that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they say that in Archer the majority did everything to prevent letting in light. There were these perjured witnesses, witnesses from whom they proposed to give us light. These were their witnesses from Archer convicted of perjury and forgery, and yet the gentlemen say we would not let in light. Let in the light of forgery and the light of perjury! That is the light the minority wanted to get in. But the majority would not agree to let in their light; they let in the light of truth, the more of it the better. We sought for it. We love it as we do the light which comes from heaven. Now, sir, I have replied to some charges of the minority of this committee made against the majority of this committee, and I ask this House whether or not I am justified in saying, after the testimony I have read, that these witnesses committed perjury and forgery. Sir, I should deserve to be expelled from this House, and would make no defense to a motion to expel me, if I came upon this floor attack-

Sir, I should deserve to be expelled from this House, and would make no defense to a motion to expel me, if I came upon this floor attacking two innocent men in the State of Florida and charged them with such crimes which were not proved beyond all reasonable doubt. If there were any possibility that these charges were not true, I certainly would not make them. It would be cowardice for me to do it. But when it was proved before the eyes of the committee, when it was established beyond all controversy, justice to this House and justice to the country demands that the declaration should be made, that the mask should be torn off from those who undertake to impose that as truth upon the country which they knew to be false. Now I that as truth upon the country which they knew to be false. Now I find that the clock goes faster than I do, and I must hasten on. All the members of the committee know that Florida went as clearly for the Tilden electors as Massachusetts went for the Hayes electors. the Tilden electors as Massachusetts went for the Hayes electors. I say that the returns in the office of the secretary of state of Florida show that. The exhibits produced here, certified copies of returns from every county in the State, show it. And we presented that exhibit in order that the country might canvass for themselves the vote and see who were elected. We are not compelled to learn it from the canvassing board of Florida, but we lay before the country the testimony upon which they acted in making the canvass, and any person can make the canvass here. I say that the canvass gives a majority of at least 90 to the Tilden electors, and there has not been a word said here which in any manner goes to show that this count majority of at least 90 to the Tilden electors, and there has not been a word said here which in any manner goes to show that this count is not fair, that result not correct.

Why, I want to read to you a moment. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Woodburn] said yesterday that in Clay County the return was uncertain, and that if the board had not thrown out the vote of Clay County they would have been liable for contempt. Let me read the return for electors in Clay County. This is the return as to presidential electors:

That the whole number of votes cast for presidential electors was four hundred and nine (409) votes, as follows, namely: Wilkinson Call received two hundred and eighty-six (286) votes; James E. Yonge received two hundred and eighty-seven (287) votes; Robert B. Hilton received two hundred and eighty-seven (287) votes; Robert Bullock received two hundred and eighty-seven (287) votes; F. C. Humphries received one hundred and twenty-two (122) votes; C. H. Pearce received one hundred and twenty-two (122) votes; T. W. Long received one hundred and twenty-two (122) votes; T. W. Long received one hundred and twenty-two (122) votes.

And yet the minority say that that return in these words is so uncertain and indefinite that the canvassing board were compelled to throw it out. And that is the best foundation they have for saying that Florida went for Hayes. It was one of the clearest returns made in the whole State, and indicates conscientiousness and truthfulness, and there is nothing in any manner or form to impeach it.

Then they speak of another county, Baker County, where there was a most wicked fraud attempted to be committed on the people of the a most wicked fraud attempted to be committed on the people of the country, where a judge attempted to execute it. The returns from that county were signed by the clerk of the circuit court and justice of the peace, with a certificate explaining fully and clearly the reasons why neither the county judge nor sheriff signed the returns. That is a good and valid return. But the minority say that another return, where the sheriff who had no right to act came in and acted as a member of the board, being a mere intruder, that it should be canvassed. That return is not improved but rendered suspicious by having the name of an unauthorized person upon it. I say that upon having the name of an unauthorized person upon it. I say that upon every principle of law it injures it.

This is a plain principle of law, and I call upon the lawyers of the House to decide whether or not I am correct in saying that where a party has authority to act only in special contingency in order to justify his action it must appear of record that the contingency has arisen which authorizes him to act. There is nothing in the return which comes from Baker County, claimed to be the most regular, which shows that any such contingency had occurred which authorized the shoriff to act. ized the sheriff to act. And I say upon every principle of law that the return signed by the clerk of the circuit court and justice of the peace, with the certificate explaining the absence both of the county judge and sheriff, is the return which the State canvassing board were bound to canvass. That board knew that it ought to be canvassed. The minority of the committee know that it should have been canvassed and admit this by approving of the canvass of the returns by the board of State canvassers of the returns from Duval County, signed by the clerk of the circuit court and a justice of the peace, and where there is no certificate setting forth the reason why either the judge or sheriff failed to act. The certificates state that the judge was present, but does not state that he took any part in the canvass or give any reason why he did not act.

Where such a return gives the democracts 95 majority it is illegal; where it gives the republicans 930 majority it is perfectly legal. That which the carvassing board, which they say was conducted with singular fidelity and the utmost fairness.

Now I say that the action of the board with regard to those re-

Now I say that the action of the board with regard to those returns shows a willful and corrupt purpose, shows that they acted knowingly, maliciously, and with intent to defraud the legal voters of Florida out of their votes and to defraud the country out of the President of their choice. This is fidelity; this the minority call sin-

President of their choice. This is identity; this the minority can singular fidelity.

They were anxious, very anxious indeed, to justify the action of this canvassing board, and they say we did not give them all the facilities that might have been given to justify this wicked action on their part. Now I submit that we gave them every opportunity which the law would give them. They have had the right to call just as many witnesses as they desired to call. We did not intend to have put upon the record a mass of falsehoods without at least having an appropriate to sift them, to see the witnesses and examine them. opportunity to sift them, to see the witnesses and examine them.

I have said thus much with regard to Baker County, and thus much with regard to Clay County and Duval County, the counties where they make a question as to how they should be disposed of. The ques-tion is whether upon the face of the returns as they appear in the office of the secretary of state of Florida, according to the record as shown by those returns, the Tilden electors or the Hayes electors had

Now I repeat that it is as clear as demonstration can make it that the Tilden electors did have a majority, and the returns which the returning board had before it and were bound to canvass clearly show this. Any certificate given by them to the contrary is illegal and a false-hood. You need only to read the returns which we produce here to see how utterly false and groundless is the position taken by the board of State canvassers

Now, that being the case, I will devote only a moment or two to the other facts. The minority say that, if it appears upon the face of the returns that the Tilden electors were elected, taking the votes as they appear upon the canvass, upon the examination made in the county, such is not the case.

Now in answer to that I reply that they show no case of fraud on the part of a democratic office-holder in the State of Florida. I will repeat it; they show no case of fraud on the part of any democratic office-holder in the State of Florida. Everywhere where there was a fraud committed it was shown clearly to have been committed with the connivance, knowledge, and aid of republican office-holders in every case. I say that that is the fact about the matter.

Take the case of Leon County, where they stuffed the ballot-box with seventy-two or seventy-three small ballots which were never put into the box as votes, and nobody swears they were except one Joseph Bowes, an appointee of the governor, who went down to Richardson school-house for the purpose of committing that fraud which he did commit. That fraud was proved there beyond all question. It was a small precinct; nobody saw one of these small ballots voted; nobody saw them distributed; no one was brought up who voted one of them, although Joseph Bowes was an inspector there and had a great interest in having the honesty of the votes shown. He would have shown it had they been real votes.

In that case seventy-two names were added to the poll-list for the In that case seventy-two names were added to the pointies for the purpose of covering those 72 small votes that were fraudulently put into the box, and the minority of the committee know that to be the fact, for it was proven beyond all reasonable doubt. Yet they come in here now and undertake to say that, if anything was proven, only 25 illegal votes were proven. The whole 72 were fraudulent. The 25 illegal votes were proven. The whole 72 were fraudulent. The ballot-box was stuffed, and Bowes did it, or assisted in doing it. There can be no possible question as to this. There can be no question but what Wiley Jones, a republican, who went with Bowes from Talla-hassee to act as clerk at this precinct, assisted in it. The seventy-two names put on the poll-list to cover the small votes were in his handwriting.

Then we come to another place where fraud was committed, Archer No. 2. I commend Archer No. 2 to the consideration of the minority. They were at Gainesville, near there, and did not get any testimony at all to disprove the fraud. They had the process of the United States for every witness they wanted. But now, upon the testimony taken by the Senate, or rather upon the report of the Senate committee, made by that committee upon an investigation conducted in secret, where the people of the county did not have an opportunity to know what was going on, where men were brought in and sworn in secret, what was going on, where here were brought in and sworn in sector, they claim that a democratic fraud is proved. When we went there we had the examination conducted openly, we invited the people to come in and hear the evidence, to make charges if any were to be made. When the Senate committee went there they sat with closed doors, and it is upon the report of that committee upon which the minority of this committee relied, although being upon the ground they had an opportunity to examine into the matter. But they took the report of the Senate committee for the purpose of intimating that there was a fraud down there on the part of the democrats.

Why did they not show it there? Why did not they summon their witnesses? Because they knew that if they summoned a witness and he was brought upon the stand, brought to the light of day before the people of the vicinity, the falseness of his testimony would be made apparent if in fact it were false; and therefore they would not call the witnesses. They did call a few witnesses, and some of them substantiated most forcibly the position taken by the majority of the committee in their report. It was clearly proved that at Archer No. 2 the returns were, as I have before stated, forgeries. The vote was declared on the night of the election as being for Stearns for governor, 180; for Drew, 136. It was clearly shown that not more than that number voted at this precinct. Still the forged returns produced by Black and Vance, forged by them, showed 399 for Stearns and 136 for Drew, thus making a show of 219 more republican votes than were actually cast. This fraud was committed by Black and Vance, republican officers, at this precinct—a most flagrant outrage upon the people not only of the State of Florida but of the whole country.

We are now told by the minority that they have endeavored to report without prejudice and truly the facts. They say they endeavored to do just as fairly as human infirmities would permit. Only think of the term. I do not know that I have got it exactly right. I will read it so that there may be no mistake about it. Here it is: Because they knew that if they summoned a witness and

We endeavored, as far as the infirmities of human nature would permit, to divest ourselves of all partisan prejudice and report truly the facts from the evidence, regardless of political consequences.

"As far as the infirmities of human nature would permit." I regret to say that human infirmities bound them hand and foot. I think they might make the confession of the apostle Paul that "when I would do good evil is present with me." Now, I am willing as a parliamentary matter to concede to them honest intentions; but human infirmities most certainly took away from them the capacity to act fairly in the premises.

I pity human nature. I was not aware that it was in such a sad condition as I find it in this case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have briefly gone over this case so far as time would allow. I have done so somewhat disconnectedly. I have spoken earnestly, but I have not misrepresented the minority. I know I have earnestly, but I have not misrepresented the minority. I know I have not done that. I have not stated the case strongly enough; for I have not language to portray what the minority report contains, its unfairness, its entire misstatement of facts. I say again that it is from beginning to end substantially nntrue, although the facts were well known to the minority when they made that report.

In conclusion, I say that upon the returns as they appear in the office of the secretary of state, Florida elected the Tilden electors by a clear and decided majority; and that upon the examinations made in the country, applying the same principle to every precinct and giving to the Hayes electors the benefit of the most favorable construction, the majority for the Tilden electors is 543. Analyzing the struction, the majority for the Tilden electors is 543. Applying the struction, the majority for the Tilden electors is 543. Applying the priaciple which the minority apply to those precincts where they say democratic irregularities or frauds were proved, the Tilden electors have 1,600 majority. The only way the minority make out that there is a majority for the Hayes electors is by applying one principle to those precincts where the republicans had a majority, and another principle to those where the democrats had a majority. I ask whether that is honest or fair, whether it is stating the case as it is? But I remember that in their report they state that "human infirmities" may have prevented them from stating the facts. may have prevented them from stating the facts.

Their report is hard indeed upon human infirmities. I think I have the right to call upon the minority to apologize to human infirmities.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the pending resolution, on which the main question has been ordered.

The resolution was as follows:

Resolved. That at the election held on November 7, A. D. 1876, in the State of Florida. Wilkinson Call, J. E. Yonge, R. B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock were fairly and duly chosen as presidential electors, and that this is shown by the face of the returns and fully substantiated by the evidence of the actual votes cast; and that the said electors having, on the first Wednesday of December, A. D. 1876, cast their votes for Samuel J. Tilden for President and for Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President, they are the legal votes of the State of Florida and must be counted as

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise for the purpose of moving that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the naval appropriation bill. As Whole on the state of the Union on the naval appropriation bill. As a preliminary to that motion I move that all general debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be limited to one hour and a half.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I object to that limitation. The time indicated by the gentleman is not long enough for the debate on this great bill. I hope he will consent to three hours of general debate.

Mr. WILSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman on the other side be kind enough to tell us whether this debate is to be confined to the

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as my motion is concerned, the purpose is to confine it to the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The rules of the House require it, but there is also required the faith of the majority to carry the rules out.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can only say so far as I am concerned that it is our purpose to confine debate strictly to the bill itself.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We found it heretofore difficult to confine members in debate to the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. This is not a special order in the Committee of the Whole, and debate therefore can take a wide range.

the Whole, and debate therefore can take a wide range.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the Chair say it is not a special order?

The SPEAKER. Such is the Chair's recollection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I thought it was.

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the Committee of the Whole and not made a special order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from New York if he proposes to confine the debate to the pending bill.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The House cannot limit the character of debate in the Committee of the Whole House on an appropriation. of debate in the Committee of the Whole House on an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Not unless it was made the special order, and the The SPEARER. Not unless it was made the special order, and the Chair is informed this is not a special order. He does not recollect with certainty how the fact is and has sent for the Journal.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let us have that question settled before we agree to any additional debate.

The SPEAKER. It is a proper question to settle before going into committee

Mr. HOLMAN. This is not a special order.
The SPEAKER. That is the recollection of the Chair.
Mr. HOLMAN. But it may be made the special order at once by vote of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was my understanding that it was a special or-

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the motion that it be made the special order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. That was my understanding at the time and it was my view until the statement just made by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only give construction to it as it appears upon the Journal.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not speak of it as it appeared upon the Journal, but merely stated such was my understanding. The question has now been raised whether or not it is the special order in committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sent for the Journal.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that it be made the special order in committee now

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that motion cannot be received at this time to cut off the amendment of the gentleman from New York

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true if the gentleman from Georgia maintains his present motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia made a motion that general debate on this bill be limited to an hour and a half, and the gentleman from New York rose and was recognized and moved the debate be extended to three hours. The Chair thinks a vote should be taken on that before entertaining a motion by which the gentle-man from New York who wants three hours' debate can be taken off the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the House will vote down the motion extending debate for three hours, and agree to limit debate to one hour and a half.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the entry of the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Blount, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the naval appropriation bill; which was read twice, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER reserved all points of order on said bill.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Let me ask whether according to the order of the House the bill has been printed.

The SPEAKER. It has not been printed, in consequence of the Public Printer declining to print it, and his reason for so declining is that he has not funds. It has, however, been printed in the RECORD of to-day

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Is that in pursuance of an order of the

The SPEAKER. It has been printed in the RECORD in pursuance of an order of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I adhere to my amendment to allow three hours of debate.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. Wood, of New York.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 100.

The question next recurred on the motion of Mr. BLOUNT.
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend so as to limit the debate to one hour, which will permit the gentleman having charge of the bill to explain its provisions.

The SPEAKER. A vote will be taken first on the leavest the special content of t bill to explain its provisions.

The SPEAKER. A vote will be taken first on the longest time, which will be an hour and a half. Those who desire one hour will reach it by voting down the motion for an hour and a half.

Mr. BLÖUNT. Before that is done, I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa that the Committee on Naval Affairs have proposed a bill looking to a naval commission for the bettering of our Navy, and I thought it was due to that committee, as a matter of courtesy and as a matter of public interest, they should be heard from on so important a proposition. Therefore I saked for this time vielding most of it to proposition. Therefore I asked for this time, yielding most of it to

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman assures the House it is to be confined to that subject, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I understand the proposed amendment to this bill

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with that. The Journal, however, shows the gentleman from Michigan reserved all points of order.

Mr. BLOUNT's motion was then agreed to, limiting debate to one hour and a half.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was received by Mr. SNIFFEN, one of his secretaries.

RAILROAD LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. GOODIN. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take from the

Mr. GOODIN. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill for action at this time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am willing to yield to the gentleman for that purpose if the matter gives rise to no debate.

Mr. GOODIN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1122) to secure the rights of settlers upon certain railroad lands, and to repeal the first five sections of an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866.

I desire that the bill may now be put upon its passage. It unanimously passed the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. It unanimously passed the Senate on yesterday. It has met the unanimous approval of the Committee on Public Lands of this House; and it is a matter of great importance that it should now be acted upon.

it is a matter of great importance that it should now be acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which it will be open to objections, if any.
The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the right to object until I hear read the law sought to be repealed. The five sections sought to be repealed imposed, I presume, some liability on the railroad company, and I think we should hear those sections read.

Mr. HALE. I must object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I must object to the present consideration of the bill. The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

SALE OF LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. SCALES. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to make

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. SCALES. I submitt the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The colors read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same.

A. M. SCALES, J. H. SEELYE, Managers on the part of the House. W. B. ALLISON, A. S. PADDOCK, L. V. BOGY, Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX ON BANKS.

Mr. PIPER, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, asking for the removal of the tax on banks; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery; and

An act (H. R. No. 4556) to remove the political disabilities of Reuben

Davis, of Mississippi.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. MILLS in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other pur-naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHITTHORNE proceeded to address the committee. After having spoken a few sentences he was interrupted by Mr. WOOD, of New York, who said: I rise to a question of order. I demand the first reading of the bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. That can be done after I am through.
Mr. WOOD, of New York. I prefer to have it done now.
Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose that the gentleman from New York may demand ultimately the first reading of the bill. But he certainly cannot take the gentleman from Tennessee off the floor to require its reading at this time without his consent. We cannot of course proceed to consider the bill for amendments until it has had its first reading. But the gentleman from Tennessee is rightfully on the floor, and cannot now be taken off it by a demand for the first reading of the bill.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I have no disposition to be discourteous to the gentleman from Tennessee. When he took the floor I was absent from the Hall, and supposed the first reading would be proceeded with, that being the rule and the usage. But if the full reading of the bill shall be required at the conclusion of the gentleman's speech, I will be satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be the right of the gentleman from New

The CHAIRMAN. It will be the right of the gentleman from New York to call for the reading of the bill at the proper time. He cannot insist upon it now when the gentleman from Tennessee is on the floor.

Mr. WHITTHORNE then resumed and concluded his remarks,

Mr. WHITTHORNE then resumed and concluded his remarks, which are as follows:

Mr. WHITTHORNE. By the courtesy of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] I take the floor on the present occasion, and inasmuch as I am indebted to him for the courtesy, I take this occasion to refer to a passage at arms which occurred between us the other day when the deficiency bill was before the House. The question of furlough pay being under discussion when I was upon the floor the gentleman asked me if I referred to him. I believe I said: "If the gentleman puts me to the wall I will say I do." It was intended on my part at the time as a peace of pleasantry. I was satisfied that the gentleman from Georgia knew then, as he knows now, the difference between leave pay and furlough pay.

But my main purpose in taking the floor at this time is to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that pending the consideration of this bill, it is my purpose on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer as an amendment what is now upon the files of this House as House bill No. 4389, and which is now a special order before the House. That bill, in brief, provides for the appointment of a mixed commission to inquire and report as to the future naval policy of the United States. The reason which operated upon the minds of the Naval Committee of this House, and induced them to bring this bill before the House for its engaging and induced them to bring this bill before the House for its consideration, was the result of their deliberation and examination into the present condition of of their deliberation and examination into the present condition of the United States Navy. I beg the committee to go with me for one moment while I pass rapidly in review the condition of the Navy.

First, Mr. Chairman, let it be remarked that from the origin of our Government to the present time there has been expended upon the United States Navy the sum of $951,820,937.66; and of this since the year 1861 there has been expended down to the close of the last fiscal year the sum of $591,778,750.48.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, there has been expended since the year 1851 upon the United States Navy up to this date over the sum of $500,000,000.

Now, then, our Navy to-day is not, relatively and in comparison with the navies of foreign powers, as efficient as it was in the year 1860. To be sure the President of the United States in his last annual message, and the Secretary of the Navy in his last annual report, draw the attention of the country to this fact, which it seems to them to be true, that the United States Navy is now in a better condition than it ever was before. Now, the country may be misled condition than it ever was before. Now, the country may be misled by that statement. What does constitute the strength of a navy? Is it the number of vessels in commission? Is it the number of its officers? Is it the number of its seamen? Not that, Mr. Chairman: but it is in the power of that navy to injure its adversary; it is in its power to destroy; and I beg to say to you, sir, and to this House, that when the United States Navy in 1860 stood relatively with the navies of the world as third, to-day the United States Navy has sunk to low as not to have a standing among the navies of the world. In the power to destroy an adversary, the United States Navy is to-day below the Brazilian and Turkish navies, and has been since 1861. And while you have expended this vast sum of money which I have named, of over $600,000,000, will you remember the fact that since 1664, since the close of the active hostilities in our southern waters, 1664, since the close of the active hostilities in our southern waters, you have expended over $400,000,000, and since that time your Navy has decreased from nearly seven hundred vessels to now one hundred and forty-seven. Four hundred million dollars of your money has disappeared, and with it this long list of naval vessels.

Now, again, since the year 1864, there has been appropriated and used in the Bureau of Construction and Repair, in the Bureau of Steam Engineering, in the Ordnance Bureau, and in the Equipment Bureau, the sum of over $125,000,000. Now, sir, I dare state to this House, and I make the statement believing that it will not be questioned, that it would have been cheaper to the people of the United States in 1865 to have burned up every vessel, to have given them States in 1865 to have burned up every vessel, to have given them to the winds and the storms, and taken the sum of $125,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing or building entirely new vessels. If you had done so you would have had to-day a Navy that would have been an honor to our country, instead of as it now is a disgrace.

Now, sir, in what manner have these vast sums of money disappeared? I am not here to-day to state to the committee anything in a partisan view in reference to the Navy. I am not here to cast any reflections upon the administration of the Navy Department during the last few years. I have a higher and a better motive than that, and that is to put it upon such a footing as that it shall be the honor and pride of the American people. I am not here to say to-day even that this waste, extravagance, and mismanagement is chargeable to the Department or whether it be chargeable to Congress; but I am here to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that vast sums of money have disappeared and that we have nothing to vast sums of money have disappeared and that we have nothing to show for it. I have to call attention to the fact that under the name of "repairs" vessels have been patched up whose existence should have been terminated at once; they have been doctored so as to exist for a week or perhaps a month and then have been decided to be worthless and turned over to the auctioneer's hammer. To appropriate money to maintain the Navy in this way is like putting water into a rat-hole; it is of no use either to the Navy or to the country. If you desire an economical expenditure of the public money reverse your policy, and with that object and purpose the Committee on Naval Affairs have matured and will submit to the House the amendment which has been referred to.

In this connection I beg to submit to the House a statement of the

In this connection I beg to submit to the House a statement of the reduction which is to be made by that amendment.

I will read the following statement to show the extravagance in the repairing department of the Navy: The original cost of the Pensacola was $500,000, the Kearsarge $292,918, and the Lackawana $451,069, making the total cost of these three vessels $1,243,987. The $401,009, making the total cost of these three vessels $1,243,987. The repairing of these vessels was as follows: The Pensacola, $1,000,000; the Kearsarge, $612,122, and the Lackawana $766,364. This is nearly a hundred per cent. more for the repairing than the original cost of the vessels. This vast amount of money has been spent on repairs, and yet when they are repaired at this great expenditure of money, they are not the vessels that are required and demanded by the progress made in naval science within the last six or eight years; and to-day you have hardly a single vessel borne upon your Navy Register which in its enginery, in its armament, is equal to the demands made by the progress in naval science.

I have said that the strength of a navy is not in its numbers, either of vessels or of officers. It may derive much from the courage and soldierly bearing of its officers. Who can forget, in a brief retrospect of the United States Navy, the daring that made our infant Navy the pride and boast of the Colonies? Of course I refer to the bearing and courage of Paul Jones. Again, who can forget that in 1812, with a small Navy, the courage and gallantry of naval officers and men, together with the speed of our vessels at that time, made and men, together with the speed of our vessels at that time, made a comparatively small Navy very powerful.

Again, when the curtain was lifted upon the first scene of our civil war, who can forget that one vessel belonging to the Confederate States held in awe the entire Navy of the United States? Or who can forget that it was one vessel, the Monitor, commanded by that brave and gallant officer, Worden, that disabled the Merrimac?

And let we point our recollections in this retrease to that despends to the terms.

And let me point our recollections in this retrospect to that scene. Can we forget that from that day naval warfare has been revolutionized in this world? And while other countries have responded to that revolution and kept pace with it, the United States, notwithstanding the vast expenditures of money to which I have referred, have not kept pace with that revolution.

There have been in naval science, in naval architecture, in naval armament, in what I may term the physical science of naval wararmament, in what I may term the physical science of naval warfare, more improvements than in any other field of friumph whatever during the period of time to which I have referred. But your appropriations and your policy in Congress have not been responsive to those improvements. The management of the Navy Department has not been responsive to them. And to-day the Naval Committee of this House submits that, in view of this progress in naval science, in view of the present condition of your Navy, in view of the demands of the times, there should be a change of policy upon the part of the Legislature and upon the part of the Executive Departments of the Government, and that the policy of the future should be fixed and permanent.

And that brings me to the point, what of that policy; what shall be its character? You, Mr. Chairman, [Mr. Mills,] are a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House. You can appreciate the difficulties which have environed and which do environ a committee composed entirely of men from the civil walks of life. Even now how little are the suggestions from this committee heeded by gentlemen who have been so reared and educated. The House and the country demand something more than that; they demand the experience and wisdom of men who have been trained in this

It is with the view of reaching that end that the Committee on Naval Affairs have suggested a mixed commission, composed of members of the House, of members of the Senate, and of officers of the Army and Navy. I refer now to the composition of the commission as recommended by the committee. The committee recommend a commission composed of the Admiral of the Navy, the General of the Army, three members of the House of Representatives, two Senators, and two effects of the Navy. and two officers of the Navy. It is a commission of nine, the members of the House to be the exponent if not the advocate of the recbers of the House to be the exponent if not the advocate of the recommendations of that committee. This commission is to be charged with the duty of looking into the present condition of our naval laws, the condition of our Navy, our relations with the commerce of the world, our relations with the navies of the world, the progress made in naval warfare and naval armament, our coast defense, and to look to the great future, if you please, and see how in that future our naval policy shall be aligned with our position in the world.

I am free enough to say to you, Mr. Chairman, as I believe I can say for every member of the committee, that we have looked forward not to a large Navy. My judgment is that the day of large navies has passed forever. My judgment is that the day of costly structures, of armored vessels has passed and passed forever. My judgment is that the future naval policy of the United States should be confined alone to the idea of swiftness in our vessels, to speed; in other words, to to the idea of swiftness in our vessels, to speed; in other words, to

to the idea of swiftness in our vessels, to speed; in other words, to light unarmored vessels.

When you come to look at the coast of the United States you will see how nature has made that coast, if not a barrier at least a fortness against our adversaries. How little likely is it that we should be attacked by the navies of the world. How little have we to fear in our coast defenses from the large vessels now being built by the great powers of Europe. Our coast is protected and defended by nature. What we shall need in the future is to protect our coast either through torpedoes or by fortresses, and then a Navy of light cruisers, swift commerce-destroyers, with which to meet our enemies upon their first appearance.

My friend from Oregon [Mr. Lane] remarks to me that that is all we can do. My mind rests upon that proposition. To my judgment the progress made in naval armament has its parallel in the soldier. the progress made in naval armament has its parallel in the soldier. Centuries ago it was thought wise and best to encase the soldier in his armor, to make his armor impenetrable. It was first made heavy; then it was made light. And then, in the progress of military science, it was found that the best soldier was he who had no armor at all, and who could move with promptness and celerity.

I think you will find this analogy and parallel in the progress of the developments being made in naval warfare. I believe the committee of which you, Mr. Chairman, have the honor to be a member, in making this recommendation to the Committee on Appropriations and to the House, believe that by basing the future naval policy of the country upon these ideas you will economize and retrench your expenditures. And I dare now say for myself and as the result of my own examination that, if an intelligent naval policy be adopted, you can reduce the expenses of the Navy to a less sum than $12,000,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend from Tennessee a

Mr. BLOUNT. For a long period before the war and since there has been a feeling in Congress and throughout the country that we has been a feeling in Congress and throughout the country that we have had too many navy-yards. In the hope that there might be a reduction, a commission was created at the last session for the purpose of reporting what navy-yards could be dispensed with. That commission has not met at all the expectations of the country; on the contrary it proposes to retain all the yards but one. That report having disappointed Congress, I ask the gentleman whether we have any assurance that any commission to be appointed in the future will not act as this one and others have, disappointing the expectations of the country by rejecting economical suggestions?

any assurance that any commission to be appointed in the ruture will not act as this one and others have, disappointing the expectations of the country by rejecting economical suggestions?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I thank my friend from Georgia for having asked the question. It brings to mind certain parallels in the history of other naval powers. In the year 1848 when the French navy had sunk to as low a condition comparatively as the present condition of the United States Navy, when in fact the French navy was not regarded as at all respectable in the opinion of any other naval power, the French government upon the suggestion of the Prince de Joinville raised a mixed commission at the head of which was that prince; and the result was that within a very few years the French navy sprang from its prostrate condition into the position of the leading naval power of Europe. The British government, seeing the result of the French commission, resorted to the same expedient; and time and again when the British navy has degenerated, its fortunes and its prestige have been revived by the creation of similar commissions.

When my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] puts his inquiry upon this point, I do not hesitate to express my regret that the commission to which he refers made the report that they did. But it was in accordance with the action of Congress at the time. He will remember that the Committee on Appropriations had made a recommendation looking to the abolition of one or more of our navy-yards, while the Committee on Naval Affairs, acting somewhat in response to the suggestion made by his committee recommended that the while the Committee on Naval Affairs, acting somewhat in response to the suggestion made by his committee, recommended that the yards be classified into building navy-yards and repairing stations. This House did not concur in the recommendation either of the Naval Committee or of the Committee on Appropriations; and it looks as if the commission responded to what they believed to be the judgment of the majority of this House. I have no other explanation to make of the action of that commission.

I know, and the gentleman knows, how hard it is to get rid of navy-yards throughout the country. Local interests and political consider-ations demand their continuance. But, sir, we are now at the close of one administration and another is about to come in. We do not know whether it shall be democratic or republican; but I dare hope and believe, and I take courage here to express it, that if the administration of the republican party is to be continued by the inauguration of Rutherford B. Hayes, we shall witness a revolution and a reformation in its methods of administration. No matter what may be the politics of the incoming administration, let it start as the friend of the people and as the advocate of retrenchment and reform.

Mr. HOLMAN Will the continue allowed a particular and the property of the people and as the advocate of retrenchment and reform.

of the people and as the advocate of retrenchment and reform.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. During the last session of Congress we organized three commissions or committees: one on the postal system of the country, one on the re-organization of the Army, and one on the question of Chinese immigration, the cooly question. One was a congressional committee purely, another a committee of gentlemen experienced in the field to which they were appointed, and the other a mixed committee. I believe that we appropriated $10,000 for the expenses of each one of those committees. Has the gentlemen heard anything from them? Have they furnished a single fact upon which to predicate legislation? Year after year for years past we have had pleasant junketing committees traveling over he country; but up to this time I have never known a valuable fact to be brought but up to this time I have never known a valuable fact to be brought out in that way. Why? Because from the very necessity of the case Congress is informed in advance of all the facts which can be gathered by any of these committees.

Mr. LANE. We have heard from the Chinese committee in a political wa

Mr. HOLMAN, Certainly; that is the only way. Mr. LANE. We have heard from them in the carrying of Califormia and Oregon against us.

Mr. PIPER. I would like to correct the gentleman from Indiana on two points. The appropriation for the Chinese committee was not $10,000, and the committee has made a report.

Mr. HOLMAN. The money was all exhausted, I believe.

Mr. PIPER. No, sir; they put back a part into the Treasury.
Mr. HOLMAN. How much?
Mr. PIPER. One hundred and eighty-nine dollars. [Laughter.]
Mr. RANDALL. The only instance of the kind on record!
Mr. WHITTHORNE. That is an evidence that we are approaching the days of honesty and reform. I understand that the Chinese committee has submitted its report to the Senate. As to the results of their investigations I am not informed. Again, sir, my friend from their investigations I am not informed. Again, sir, my friend from Indiana is rather hasty, I believe, in his remarks about the commission appointed to report upon the re-organization of the Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. They have never met yet, have they?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. O, yes. My friend ought not to be unjust. He and other gentlemen on this floor ought to look facts squarely in the face. Whoever examines into the condition of the Navy Department must discover that there is a want of harmony, a want of purpose, a want of co-operation, and this has led to wastefulness and extravagance in that Department.

travagance in that Department.

travagance in that Department.

I say this, Mr. Chairman, without intending to reflect upon any one whatever. The facts are that way. It needs method, it needs harmony, and it needs purpose. I say to gentlemen if they go along year after year as we have been going on since the close of the war, voting so much as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] and his colleagues upon the committee now report in this bill, without telling the House what each item is for and the purpose of it, covering np one million and a half to three millions of dollars in half a dozen lines, I tell him and them that they become co-operators and colleagues in the robbery and plundering going on. It will not do for gentlemen like him who are so old in the service and so long here, when it is attempted to reach methods by which these reductions and economies can be made in the public service, it will not do for him or economies can be made in the public service, it will not do for him or them to hide themselves behind half a dozen lines which appropriate a million and a half of dollars and nothing to tell which way it is to go.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will give me credit at least for trying to prevent the adding to that plundering of the Treasury of this item of $10,000 for junketing expenses for members of Confidential.

gress. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My friend assumes it will be expended in junketing, an assumption which none but a Christian statesman would intimate. [Laughter.] One of these wicked, cussed fellows would not do it, but for a gentleman who has stood here for years and seen how naval estimates have been submitted, how naval appropriations have been made, when he knows during the last session of Con-gress at the instance of the Naval Committee this House with singular gress at the instance of the Naval Committee this House with singular unanimity passed a bill requiring the Secretary of the Navy should make detailed estimates, itemizing them, and here again permits this thing to be done, it illy becomes him, I say, to charge anybody with junketing. I again say, and I trust I am not partisan in it, this appropriation of one million and a half of dollars may be spent upon tug-boats which are really the junketing concerns under which officers have their pleasure. He might prevent that, but does not, but year after year, (and I trust the House will pardon me for this episode,) year after year these appropriations have been made, no items, no details being submitted to Congress; year after year money has been expended in the manner I have pointed out in the instance or the Pensacola, Kearsarge, and other vessels; year after year these immense sums of money have been wasted without any purpose, because I say it is wasted when it does not accomplish anything in the building up of our Navy.

building up of our Navy.

I ask you, sir, to let us leave the beaten track which has been followed by my friend from Indiana and others. Let us try some other lowed by my friend from Indiana and others. Let us try some other expedient. Let us see if we can build up the Navy; let us see if we cannot make that Navy as it has been in times past, the pride of the American citizen and the boast of our countrymen abroad. This is the purpose which the Naval Committee have at heart, however illy I may have expressed it to the House in my remarks.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in reference to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. Whitthorne.] I desire to discuss it, however, entirely outside and above all questions of politics or party feelings. I desire if possible to come to the question before the House, and to present the reasons by which the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs were actuated in reporting this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not stop to make reply to any remarks of the Committee on Naval Affairs were actuated in reporting this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not stop to make reply to any remarks of the chairman of the committee, which I think are unjust; for if he and I were to discuss the question of who is to be charged with fault in the past administration of the Government, we should doubtless differ widely. While I might admit the facts and figures which he has referred to in the main, I should ask what is the reason there has been waste in the expenditure of public money upon the Navy, and my answer would be because Congress has never had a policy on that subject up to this hour. It is idle to charge that the Secretary of the Navy during the last eight years is responsible for the fact we have no larger Navy than now exists, for I should say in reply that Congress has never appropriated a dollar during the last ten years for the construction of a new ship of war, except for the construction of eight light cruisers, not measuring over nine hundred tons burden each; and if we have a navy at all, it is because during the past administration money has been taken from the general appropriation with which to reconstruct old vessels which otherwise would have sunk out of sight and gone gone out of existence. out of sight and gone gone out of existence.

But, Mr. Chairman, why discuss the question in this way? We have been told by distinguished officers of the Navy there are faults in our system, and I recognize the truth of their statements to some extent. We have a bureau system, a system which comes in for pretty general abuse from some gentlemen of the House. We have a bureau system; and it is stated by the Admiral of the Navy, Admiral Porter, that it is an inefficient, vicious system; that different officers of the bureaus operate independently of each other.

One has a hobby as to the prow of a vessel; another as to its engine; another as to its armament; another as to some other portion of the vessel. They do not act unitedly and in harmony, and do not produce a vessel of the first class.

Now, sir, how shall we have a policy? How shall we reach a

Now, sir, how shall we have a policy? How shall we reach a policy? The bill presented to the House recommends that a commission, consisting of the Admiral of the Navy, three competent officers of the Navy, (to be appointed by the President,) the General of the Army, and five members of the two Houses of Congress, shall sit to gether, consider the laws, consider the condition of foreign navies, gether, consider the laws, consider the condition of foreign navies, consider the condition of our own American Navy, and recommend to the next Congress of the United States a system and a policy which shall govern the future construction of ships of war. Is there a gentleman in this House who would fail to embrace this opportunity to improve the Navy at the cheap price which it would probably cost? And what are the questions that are to be submitted to this commission? Shall we embark in the building of great ships of war, the immense iron-clad vessels of war which may meet successfully on the ocean the great ships of England, France, and Italy? Shall that he immense iron-clad vessels of war which may meet successfully on the ocean the great ships of England, France, and Italy? Shall that be our system? Shall we pile five millions of dollars into one hull, in order that we may take our place upon the ocean and be the rival of the European powers in foreign seas? That, sir, is not my view of what should be the American policy. Or shall we confine ourselves to defending our own rivers and harbors and protecting our own seacoasts entirely? I believe that to be one of the great questions to be determined. We ought in my judgment to be able to defend our own coast against all the world; but I doubt the policy of being able to mingle in the wars of Europe with vessels of any class whatever.

But, Mr. Chairman, shall we have vessels to send across the ocean which shall be unable to fight and alike unable to run away? For that, I submit, is the condition of the vessels which we call our fast that, I submit, is the condition of the vessels which we call our fast cruisers of the present day; light armaments, small power to resist an enemy, and yet not with speed enough to capture an ordinary steamship of the merchant service. Would it not be wise for the American Navy to have some fast cruisers, as suggested by my friend from Tennessee, which should be able to capture, whenever it may be necessary, any of the ships in the merchant service of foreign countries, and be able at the same time to run away from any of the heavy armed vessels of the foreign navies of the world?

Mr. Chairman, the torpedo system which has come to be one of the most important branches of the naval service in our country is suffered to go unattended to. The inventors of America have been discarded and rejected when they have brought to the attention of the American Congress weapons of destruction, in my judgment, far in advance of those which any nation of the world has shown or can produce. Shall we protect ourselves from foreign invasion by the best system of torpedoes that have thus far been produced? that, I submit, is the condition of the vessels which we call our fast the best system of torpedoes that have thus far been produced?

Many questions will be submitted to this commission, Mr. Chairman, outside of these questions to which I have called attention.

The laws governing our Navy are patched up and amended and altered from time to time, until they have no harmony; until they altered from time to time, until they have no harmony; until they cease to be a system perfect and complete, but are a series of laws independent of each other which in many instances do not harmonize with each other. We have connected with our Navy a great retired list. And I submit, Mr. Chairman, to any gentleman who will see fit to examine it, that the immense retired list of the American Navy needs public examination into it. A system should be adopted which should govern in all future time in the retirement of officers of the Navy, which ought to be forever prohibited. Congress ought to prohibit itself from ever again putting upon the retired list of the Navy an officer who could not reach that class according to the laws and rules laid down governing that subject.

Mr. Chairman, the condition of my lungs will not permit me to occupy more time. I merely desired to say that this bill was originated in cupy more time. I merely desired to say that this bill was originated in the hope and in the expectation that many of the faults which have been talked about in this and past Congresses may be reached and remedied by sending the whole subject to a commission having no reference to any political question or party; a commission so organized that it can take up the subject independent of every other issue, and present it to the next Congress in such a form as that the system which they recommend may be readily apprehended and, if found to be instead greater and may be readily apprehended and, if found tem which they recommend may be readily apprehended and, if found to be just and proper, adopted.

Mr. Chairman, with these remarks I submit the question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.] How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. FALE. I think about ten minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is an eccentric man so far as the management of naval affairs is concerned. He came here having had a large experience in relation to the Navy and in relation to the element upon which the Navy floats. He has given the subject much attention, and I suppose Navy floats. He has given the subject much attention, and I suppose had sailed all over the world in ships, and had compared the condition of the navies of the world. He has from time to time entertained this House with one method or another for reforming the Navy. Last year his method was to impeach the Secretary of the Navy; and [Mr. Hale] a question.

starting out with that end he took up his pilgrim's staff and traveled from one yard to the other, taking testimony as to the conduct of the Navy Department.

And finally he reported at last that in order to relieve the Navy, in order to put it in good shape, the Secretary of the Navy must be impeached. That experiment failed; the Law Committee of the House peached. That experiment failed; the Law Committee of the House took the case and the papers and have at this session reported exonerating the Secretary. But the gentleman was not satisfied; he has started out again and he has got now an entirely new method, and his new proposition to reform the Navy and to build it up is a commission which I assume may start out at the moment Congress adjourns and at the expense of $6 a day and their traveling expenses shall again take up a traveling tour and observe the navy-yards of this country and perhaps the navy-yards of foreign governments and report at last to the House some method for changing the policy of the Navy Department. That commission is to be made up of the General of the Army, who of course knows all about its duties and all about its policy and the Admiral of the Navy who has passed his life in its serve. icy, and the Admiral of the Navy, who has passed his life in its service and who would therefore be strangely out of place and not at home with any other member of the commission, and two Senators and three Representatives. Now, I tell the gentleman my experience is that you cannot for a given amount of labor, time, and money get so little in the result from any department of the Government as you do from any commission of that kind.

I never have known in my experience anything to come out of any investigation by a commission made in this way. If this thing is to be done, if you want to appoint an intelligent commission, let the commission be made up entirely or made nearly entirely of men who have passed their lives in the naval service, and who would know more about this Navy and the navies of other nations than other gentlement. I do not believe that whatever as he have a release the result of the contraction of the navier of the result of t men. I do not believe that whatever may be the weakness or the difficulties in the Navy Department that the gentleman's panacea would be efficient now. I have not time nor have I the inclination to go into the general question about the condition of the American Navy to-day; but I will state this, that the gentleman and I are totally at odds on his proposition that the American Navy has sunk to a lower position than it ever held before, for I believe and I think the records will show and the vessels afloat will show that since the year 1869 there has been built up a better navy than this country ever put on the waters of the world. The appropriations for the Navy Depart-ment have, under the system of retrenchment and reform, not inau-gurated by the present committee, but long years ago, been steadily and gradually reduced. And yet while a large portion of these annual and gradually reduced. And yet white a large portion of these annual appropriations have been consumed in paying, clothing, and supplying the Navy, the Secretary of the Navy out of the balance remaining has built up a navy. And the real complaint, and that was the burden of the complaint in the investigation of the gentleman from 1 connessee, is that he had misappropriated funds in building up a navy. Mark you, $900,000,000 have been appropriated for the Navy, and for a time since the close of the war $500,000,000 have been appropriated and the gentleman selection was a supplementation. expended and the gentleman asks what you have to show for it. expended and the gentleman asks what you have to show for it. Did it ever occur to the gentleman that almost all annual appropriations for the Navy go for the payment for things that are consumed necessarily and will "show nothing?" The gentleman might just as well arraign the Navy Department before the American people for spending $100,000,000 for food, clothing, and pay. Supposing that nine hundred million dollars of the property of this country was consumed in whisky, and what is there to show for it? It has all been doubt. Four hydrody stilling of this $200,000,000 by the for for the state. Four hundred million of this $900,000,000 has gone for food, pay, and clothing. Pay does not last; clothing does not last; food does not last. They are all consumed. And if gentlemen will examine the facts of the case, they will find that the Secretary had to build up a navy and that no money has been misappropriated or extravagantly spent.

I wish further to state that under the control of the present Secretary of the Navy there are more vessels in the United States Navy better able to cope with the vessels of other nations now affort Navy better able to cope with the vessels of other nations now ahoat than ever before. Should trouble have arisen in the last flurry with Spain I have reason to believe that our Navy, smaller as it is, I will admit, than that of Great Britain or France in the proportion of one to five, would be enabled to cope with the navy of either country. The Secretary of the Navy has built up in five years a navy more effective for actual service than any navy that the United States ever had. He came into the office and inherited a navy composed of rotated that the desired and extraction of the composed of rotated the composed of the composed had. He came into the office and inherited a navy composed of rotten ships, decayed, rotting, or built with too much rapidity under the extravagant system which prevailed during the war, because under the turmoil of the war it was impossible to build ships deliberately, and the Secretary therefore, as I have said, inherited them, and they were liable to fall to pieces at any moment. He sat to work religiously to build up a respectable navy. Now, it has been said in this case we have spent large amounts upon the Navy and we have now nothing to show for it. I would say to the gentleman that I do not believe so, and my belief is as good as his that it is not so, and that the report is true, and that an examination of the Navy will show the report is true, and that an examination of the Navy will show that it is efficient; and I wish to enter my protest against this attempt to decry what has been done by that branch of the public service. With these remarks I leave the question.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say a few words.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] yield for that purpose?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will have an opportunity before the debate is closed. I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] rises in relation to the matter of time for debate.

Mr. CONGER. Yes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this fact: when I asked that there be allowed an hour and a half for general debate I understood that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] would want only about an hour, and that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] would want about ten minutes. I myself desire to have twenty minutes for the purpose of explaining the bill. Since the order limiting debate was purpose of explaining the bill. Since the order limiting debate was made, a disposition has been shown on the part of gentlemen on the other side to discuss this bill. I think it is but fair, it has always other side to discuss this bill. I think it is but fair, it has always been thought fair, to divide the time for debate between the different sides of the House. I therefore ask unanimous consent that twenty minutes' additional time be allowed for general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has limited the time for debate, and it is not competent for the Committee of the Whole to extend it.

Mr. BLOUNT. By unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee cannot transcend the time allowed by order of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If nobody objects I think it can be done; it has been done several times in other cases.

The CHAIRMAN. If nobody objects it may be done. There are

Mr. BLOUNT. I want some time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. If no objection be made, the time for general debate will be extended for twenty minutes.

Mr. NEAL. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it is but fair to the other side of the House that some time should be allowed them for debate; that has always been done. I will therefore move that the committee now rise for the purpose of obtaining from the House an order extending the time the purpose of obtaining from the House an order extending the time for general debate for twenty minutes.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MILLS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sympson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 1222) providing for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the fiscal current year, and for other purposes;

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 481) for the relief of Israel Yount; and

A bill (S. No. 1251) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I move that twenty minutes additional time be allowed for general debate. I move that the rules be suspended and the House

The question was then taken upon the motion to extend the time for general debate; and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole upon the naval appropriation bill; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole,

Mr. MILLS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole now resumes the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and by order of the House the time for general debate has been extended for twenty minutes; making forty minutes in all that there is now for general

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Con-

GER] for fifteen miuntes.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire any time to speak generally upon the bill. But understanding that this amendment would be offered, I took occasion to reserve all points of order upon it. Before the amendment was introduced, one hour of the hour and a half that was allowed for general discussion of the bill before the commit-tee had been spent upon the proposed amendment, unexpectedly to me and to many others in the House. If the point of order is sus-tained—and I have no doubt it must be under our rules—there would be no time to reply to what has been said or to discuss the proposition. I therefore desire to refer to this amendment before the time comes for raising a point of order upon it.

The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whitthorne,] the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, from which committee this amendment is reported, has compared the present condition of our Navy with its condition in former days. He asserts, first, that the Navy at the present time is inferior in condition to our Navy in former times, an place, he asserts that the expenditures upon the Navy at the present time are greater than they were in former times, and that we have a less effective Navy to-day than we had in former days when there was even less expenditure.

Now to remove all these evils the gentleman recommends the appointment of that scape-goat of all iniquities, a commission; a thing which so far as my observation extends has never heretofore been of which so far as my observation extends has never heretofore been of any benefit in our deliberations or in the formation of our laws. How does the gentleman propose to make this commission, which shall take in the whole scope of the world's naval history, the whole field of naval experience, the whole question of naval armament, all our naval laws, and naval rules, and to report at the commencement of the next session of Congress, through the President of the United States, to this House, such a well-digested system upon all these subjects that all wisdom shall die with them and all legislators for the future shall have an infallible guide?

future shall have an infallible guide?

He would have an infallible guide?

He would have that commission composed of three persons connected with the Navy and six persons who from their position and mode of appointment will not necessarily—I may say with a good deal of safety, will not probably—have any knowledge of naval affairs whatever. The Admiral of the Navy is to be one of this commission, and two officers of the Navy are to be appointed by the President. Then comes the General of the Army. Why, my friend thinks that because in the confusion of past years the General of the Army made a "march to the sea," he is perfectly familiar with proceedings on the sea. There is no particular reason why that distinguished officer sea. There is no particular reason why that distinguished officer—a man I venture to say as familiar as any other man in the United States with all branches of the Government service—should be called from his regular duty to revise naval matters merely.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusotts. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the General of the Army does not understand as well, perhaps as any other man in the country, what the coast defense re-

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman had his fifteen minutes. He now sees the importance of my proposition; but during his whole fifteen minutes it did not occur to him to mention it. I regret that he did not then see that this, the most vital of all questions arising here, should have been spoken to a moment.

But who are to be the other five members of this commission? Two gentlemen from the Senate and three from the House, taken probably from the mountain regions of our country, from the inland, as I have noticed that almost uniformly members of the Naval Committee of this House are taken from those living most remote from the water, and frequently the case is the same in the Senate.

This is the commission to go forth on a ten-thousand-dollar approriation to gather in the knowledge of the world and report to this House. Those who desire to be appointed upon this commission will advocate it. Those who desire to inform themselves and are active in procuring the passage of this proposition will have the opportunity of travel and of gaining information. Whether this House or the Senate or the country will ever derive any more benefit from this commission than from others which have been appointed to examine into other branches of the Government, I know not.

But one remark of the gentleman from Tennessee struck me as very peculiar. He says the day for large vessels of war is passed; the time has come when we need only swift, fleet, smart craft that can rush upon an unarmed vessel, sink it, and then escape before the larger one approaches. Is that to be the American Navy—swift to attack the unarmed and unoffending? That this was the gentleman's meaning, he illustrated by saying that one of the confederate cruisers put to shame the American Navy. Ah! it put to shame the American Navy because contrary to all precedent in the civilized world it failed to meet an armed opponent but sought the weak and flying failed to meet an armed opponent, but sought the weak and flying merchantman and cruiser. It was magnificent in carrying the torch and lighting up the ocean; it was the fleetest of all vessels in hiding upon the approach of a foe. Shall our Navy follow that illustrious example?

But, sir, for the gentleman's information I wish to compare the expenditures of this Congress for two years with the expenditures of a democratic Congress in former years. In this comparison we shall see what was the expenditure of our fathers for a Navy. I will not go back to the earliest times in our history, nor to the later times. Midway between the two I will take up the subject.

In the year 1846-47 the expenditures in this very Department which the gentleman criticises were under a democratic Congress $1,325,000, and in the year 1847-48, $2,500,000, making an aggregate in the two years of $3,835,000. For construction and repairs we appropriated under the recommendation of the committee last year $1,750,000, and this year it is proposed to appropriate $1,500,000 making an aggregate for two years of $3,250,000, or $1,625,000 per year. The aggregate appropriation in 1847-48 was $1,917,500. We had then but seventy-six vessels in our Navy, only four of them, and those among the smallest vessels in our Navy, only four of them, and those among the smallest of our craft, were steam-vessels. Now we have one hundred and forty-six vessels, of which one hundred and twenty-three are steamers. All men know how much more expensive it is to build, equip, man, and run steam-vessels than sailing-vessels. With seventy-six vessels in the Navy, and only four of them small steamers, the Government expended in the two years I have mentioned $3,835,000. In these two years the Government expenditure, if we appropriate what is now proposed, will be only $2,850,000; a little more than half what our fathers expended upon a much less numerous Navy and composed of fathers expended upon a much less numerous Navy and composed of vessels costing far less to keep in service.

But, sir, if the gentleman, in going back to pick up Paul Jones has stopped to examine the Navy in the intermediate time, he will rememstopped to examine the Navy in the intermediate time, he will remember that in those days the wages in our construction yards were $1.12 a day; at this time the average rate of wages is $2.80. At that time the men worked ten hours a day; now under the laws of the laud they work but eight hours a day. I might mention many other differences in expense and appropriation between former times and the present. In 1846-'47 there were in commission forty-two vessels; at this time there are in commission eighty-four of these larger vessels. This is from the record, and shows the difference in the size of the Navy. The appropriations then were almost double what they are Navy. The appropriations then were almost double what they are now. That was in the good old honest democratic days which the gentleman will be proud to be referred to. At the present day, also, the democracy control the appropriations for the Navy; but how difthe democracy control the appropriations for the Navy; but how different their spirit! Then they did not leave questions to be settled by commissions. They did not expect such bodies to remedy faults which arise from lack of appropriations. Every man knows that the great fault in our Navy to-day is that appropriations are made with a stingy hand. No vessels are built now; old vessels must be repaired; and the very fault which the chairman of the Naval Committee charges upon the Navy Department arises from the unaltered provision of law which forbids the building of any new vessel. Has the gentleman forgotten how he charged this Navy Department with wrong because they built a vessel on its own keel and said that was violation of law—made it all new except its keel—has he forgotten that? that?

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Tenne

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, upon cool, calm reflection, I have no occasion to regret that I was born in the interior, and not in view of salt water. I am no salt-water dog, and when I say that, I do not mean to reflect upon the dog, for he is as remarkable for his fidelity as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] is for his fidelity to everything that concerns the present naval management of the coun-In that, he may be right, as he says, and I may be wrong, but I have to repeat to him, rejecting from the account the pay of the Navy, rejecting from the account the management of the dock-yards, and coming down to the expenditure made for the Bureaus of Conand coming down to the expenditure made for the Bireaus of Construction and Repair and Steam Engineering, and for permanent equipment of vessels, there have been expended during the administration of the present Secretary of the Navy over $60,000,000! And I dare say in the face of the country, if that $60,000,000 had been expended in the purchasing or building of new vessels, we would have a better Navy than we have now.

Over $60,000,000 have been thus expended, and what is the present and it is the present of the present of condition of the Navy? I need not refer gentlemen to the volumes of testimony taken by the Committee on Naval Affairs, commencing with the testimony of Admiral Porter, Commodore Nichols, and others, to show I am warranted in the statement I submit to the House, but leaving our own officers, going out to the world, seeking the judgment of our adversaries, I beg leave to read to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] the opinion of a recent distinguished English authority, John C. Paget, upon The Naval Powers and their Policy:

To the nineteenth-century Englishman Spain is simply an incomprehensible country, which pays no interest on her bonds. But even now, low though she has sunk in the scale of nations, she is far from insignificant at sea. A nation which has practically defied the United States cannot be classed with the small powers, however weak may be her forces on land, however torn by civil war. We suppose there can be no dispute about the fact that the United States did "cave in" on the Virginins question on account of their utter inability to cope with the Spanish fleet. Seven iron-clads, including three of the first class, constitute the armada which the United States refused to face.

And no man who looked at our squadron as it exercised at Key West during the Virginius excitement but must hang his head in west during the virginius excitement but himst hand his head in mortification and shame, because we did submit to insult and disgrace for and on account of the inefficient and shameful condition of the United States Navy. And that is the truth of history as testified to by our own officers, to whose testimony I refer gentlemen.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. Congen] compares the expenses as he says during a period of democratic administration. Now, will he tell the country, at the period to which he referred that democratic Administration was defending and maintaining the honor of the United States; that it was during the Mexican war?

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to take any part in this general debate. I designed simply to state to the House some of the provisions of this bill and to point out wherein it differed from the bill for the present fiscal year, and the reason for the difference, and then to ask for the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. I think it is germane, however, to the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations, to wit, to endeavor in the midst of the distressed condition of the business interests of the country, and in view of the discussion in that direction, for me to turn from that purpose for a moment.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] who has just taken his seat stated to the House what was the amount of money expended under the head of Bureau of Construction and Repair, in 1846, 1847, and 1848, and that the appropriations then made were simply for construction and repair. The gentleman has fallen, in the selection of the years which he has presented to the House, either by design or accident—it is unimportant to me which—upon the period of the Mexican war. Simply to illustrate how unfair that statement will be, I refer to the tables for several years, including 1845, 1846, and 1847.

The Secretary of the Navy says in this connection:

I deem it not inappropriate to the occasion, as illustrating the expenditures of the Navy Department since the commencement of the Mexican war, to present a comparative statement of appropriations and expenditures for the last three years, under the heads of appropriation of "pay," "contingent," increase and repair," "provisions and clothing," and "surgeon's necessaries and appliances." These may be denominated the variable appropriations, and will show the increase of expenditure during the war over that of a corresponding period in time of peace. This comparison exhibits the following result:

For the year ending—	Appropriations	Available aggregate.	Expenditures.
June 30, 1845	$5 058, 815 71	$6, 194, 451 28	$5, 818, 388 79
	5, 085, 892 00	6, 564, 426 62	6, 471, 544 50
	6, 434, 349 00	7, 961, 733 48	6, 435, 416 56

And of the expenditure for increase and repair, during the past year, $45.571 have been paid for fifteen vessels, store-ships, steamers, and schooners, of suitable draught of water, purchased and sent to the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. CONGER. That is for 1846. I spoke of 1846-'47 and 1847-'48,

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot yield to the gentleman. It was an extra-ordinary year and there was an extraordinary demand upon the Navy Department. More than that, we were not then as now with a heavy public debt, with our industries groaning, with an irredeemable paper currency, and with the prospect of resumption remote and in doubt. currency, and with the prospect of resumption remote and in doubt. If the gentleman had been seeking a kindred occasion to the present—although I confess there is nothing exactly similar to it during the whole period of our history, if we except the period of depression just after our Independence—if he had sought, I say, for a kindred occasion he would have gone to a period before the war; and here permit me to say that the Secretary of the Navy has selected that period, or a period prior to the war, but the most expensive period in the history of the American Navy. Herefers to the expenditures in 1856 being $15,000,000 and in 1858 being $13,000,000. I use round numbers. Now, sir, by referring to the reports of that year it will be found that we were adding to our naval list the finest vessels in the world, comparing with any navy in Europe and imitated sels in the world, comparing with any navy in Europe and imitated by those governments afterward.

But, sir, what was the result? The Bureau of Construction and Repair had reached an expenditure of somewhere about three millions, or a little over three millions of dollars. There was discontent, there was a cry of corruption and of extravagance. And the gentleman's own party in this House, in view of these appropriations, perhaps answering to the popular mind at that day, in the person of Mr. Sherman, offered the following amendment, under the head of Bureau of Construction and Repair. Mr. Sherman moved to strike out these WORds:

"For increase, repair, armament, and equipment of the Navy, including the wear and tear of vessels in commission, fuel for steamers, and purchase of hemp for the Navy, $3,100,000."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For fuel for the Navy, to be purchased in the mode prescribed by law for other materials, and for the transportation thereof, $500,000.

"For the purchase of hemp and other materials for the Navy, $300,000.

"For the repair, armament, and equipment of vessels, $1,000,000: Provided, That not more than $1,000 shall be expended in any navy-yard in the repair of any vessel until the necessity of such repair and the probable cost thereof are ascertained by the report of a board of not less than three officersof the Navy."

The result of this motion which was adopted by the House was the reduction of that bureau from $3,200,000 to $1,000,000; and, sir, to the credit of the democratic party at the other end of the Capitol, they responded to it, and accepted that reduction.

So, sir, I might take up bureau after bureau and show how the gentleman's own party, in a manner more cruel than that adopted by the Committee on Appropriations of this House in the last session, cut them all down with a relentless hand. And the Senate accepted it, and the next year there was no request on the part of their friends, and the next year there was no request on the part of their friends, or on the part of anybody, as there is now from the Navy Department, that we should allow a million and a half additional for the current year. But they accepted it as an accomplished result, as the flat of the American people.

It is entertaining, sir, to recur to the debates of 1858-759 and 1859-760. There was a cry then, as there is now, that you are ruining the American Navy; that is was not retrenchment and reform but that it was revolution—a purpose to destroy the Government by paralyzing all its functions. But the cry was useless. The gentleman's own party and many of the democratic party stood by those reduc-

But, sir, again in relation to that period of 1856-'57-'58 to which the Secretary of the Navy refers; while that was the most expensive period selected by the Secretary of the Navy, there the appropriations had been small in previous years; the Department, it was claimed, had been well administered and the Navy was claimed by aval officers as ranking higher than other navies as at this day. I say while that has been the case since the war—for I take a period subsequent to it-it was not to be expected that during war and the subsequent to it—it was not to be expected that during war and the destruction of war there was to be economy. But beginning with the year 1865 you have for that fiscal year an expenditure of $122,-617,000. You have in 1866 an expenditure of $43,285,000. You have in 1867 an expenditure of $31,727,000. You have in 1868 an expenditure of $25,734,000. You have in 1869 an expenditure of $20,055,000. The expenditures of the Navy for every year since the war make an average of over $30,000,000.

But gentlemen tell us that the Secretary of the Navy has rendered the country great service; that out of the bare appropriations made the country great service; that out of the bare appropriations made he has increased the Navy, and it is in a far better condition than it ever has been before. Well, sir, there is a variety of opinion upon this subject. I have very little confidence in my own judgment in regard to it; but the Secretary of the Navy who preceded the present head of that Department in 1868-69, referring to the iron-clads, which are now a part of our cruising vessels, insisted that in time of peace they were utterly useless for cruising or other purposes, and advocated their sale; and Congress accepted that as the true policy. Scarcely had the new Secretary come into power, without experience, or without the long and valued experience which the other one had, before out of this fund he commenced to construct these vessels, to repair them, to change them in various particulars, for the purpose to repair them, to change them in various particulars, for the purpose to repair them, to change them in various particulars, for the purpose as he understood it of rendering them more valuable to the Navy. Now, sir, they are atterly valueless at this time; utterly valueless for cruising purposes; and, I undertake to say, not very valuable in the event of war. He has proposed, in his present report, a change of policy. He seems to think that we only need a few monitors, double-turreted, for the defense of our harbors, with light ships for coasting purposes.

So that, so far as the question of the improvement is concerned, it is at least dubious, and, running back through a period of years, we find the officer at the head of the Navy Department continually changing his opinion as to what is the true policy in relation to our Navy, and so far as I can gather the facts the true interest of the country is to be deduced from the various opinions of the several heads of this Department, belonging to different parties sometimes. But this system of adopting one policy one year and another policy another year is detrimental to the best interests of the service.

Thus much I desire to say, generally, so far as the naval appropriation bill is concerned: The Committee on Appropriations have reported a bill appropriating $12,489,324.40. The bill of last year which became a law appropriated twelve million seven hundred and thirty odd thousand dollars. The change in this bill over the bill of last year relates to the pay of the Navy, and the increase in this bill over that of last year is about $250,000.

The question in reference to the pay of the Navy has been discussed very fully in the debate upon the dediciency bill appropriating $5,000,-000 extra for that pay which passed a few days ago, and there is a little more that should be said here in that connection.

I desire, however, to call the attention of the House to an act passed by Congress which will be found in the eighteenth volume of the Statutes-at-Large, page 107, in relation to balances, and, as the time is so short, I will simply include that section in my remarks; it is as

All balances of appropriations contained in the annual appropriation bills and made specifically for the service of any fiscal year, and remaining unexpended at the expiration of such fiscal year, shall only be applied to the payment of expenses properly incurred during that year, or to the fulfillment of contracts properly made within that year; and balances not needed for such purposes shall be carried to the surplus fund.

It will be very evident from that that the statement made by my It will be very evident from that that the statement made by my colleague on the committee from Maine, [Mr. Hale,] that it was by the appropriations used as unexpended balances under this law that the improvements of which he speaks of in the Navy have been made. It is not true that the law contemplated that any such unexpended balances should be used upon works of this kind. I wish to impress upon the House that the law simply provides that where an appropriation for the pay of the Navy, for instance the pay of men who are off upon a three years' cruise and could not be paid during the fiscal year, it should not lapse into the Treasury to become a permanent fund. But it did not justify any interference with the appropriations in doing work which should be provided for in subsequent years.

The appropriation for construction and repairs which the committee reports is $150,000. The appropriation bill of last year was $175,000. The committee have reported the amount which in their judgment is right and proper. During the last session of Congress the House of Representatives added to this appropriation the sum of $250,000. The reasons for this were then very fully stated, and I shall not take up the time of the House now, but shall wait until we shall reach the consideration of that paragraph in the bill, and will state at that time more fully the views of the committee. Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs, and read as

For pay of commissioned and warrant officers at sea, on shore, on special service, and of those on the retired list and unemployed, and for the actual expenses of officers traveling under orders, and for pay of the petty officers, seamen, or linary seamen, landsmen, and boys, including men of the engineers' force, and for the Coast Survey service, seven thousand tive hundred men, $6,250,000.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out in the last line of that paragraph the words "$6,250,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$7,000,000." I will say that if this amendment is not adopted before the next fiscal year expires there will be a deficiency which will have to be appropriated for to cover the pay, &c., for the Navy. As this matter has been much discussed heretofore and I have put my protest against this reduction on record, I will not trespass on the time of the House. I make the

Mr. BLOUNT I desire to say this in reference to the prediction of the gentleman: He may prove to be a prophet; he doubtless knows more than I do at this time about this question. I have had great difficulty, although I have gone to the fountain head, to understand why it was that during the period from the present to the 2d of November last the sum of $6,500,000 has been expended, when there is a proposition on the part of the Secretary to increase the number of the Navy to 12,000 men, and this increase of expenditures is asked for. had in the Navy 8,500 men at one time, and now cut down to 7,500, and the expenditures have never reached that sum now asked for, taking the average. As I said the other day, there are men in the Navy now upon cruises who have to be paid for several years back, and the force of 13,000 was increased 1,500 more during the war, and it is a singular of 13,000 was increased 1,500 more during the war, and it is a singular fact that never until this House came into operation under the democratic party has the Secretary of the Navy ever said that $7,500,000 is necessary to support a navy of 8,500 men. Just the preceding year, the very last year of their power in the House, they ran it up to $6,250,000. When we were met here with these large estimates we were told that the balances were all exhausted, and we were referred to Exhibit E of the Book of Estimates, which was nothing in the world but a pay table, and that is just as near an explanation as this House or the country has ever had while this has been done

House or the country has ever had while this has been done.

My friend stated the other day that it was by reason of the consumption of unexpended balances. Now I make the prediction that if an estimate for deficiency shall come in, it will be found that the money which we have appropriated for the past year, instead of being nsed as the law requires and as should have been done, for the pay of the Navy during that year, has been used for the pay of the Navy during preceding years, and it was done in order to make a record of economy which is perfectly false. That is my prediction.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I concur with much that has been said by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr.BLOUNT.] I believe it possible, with an honest, impartial administration of the Navy Department, to reduce the expenditure for the pay of the Navy without destroying the efficiency of the service, to reduce that expenditure below the sum named in this appropriation bill.

I hold in my hand a table which has been sent to me by a gentle-man, and which shows the difference in the pay of officers of an English frigate and officers of an American sloop of war, (approximate,) both in active service. The table is as follows:

The United States frigate Franklin, (3,173 tons,) cost while in European waters, for pay of officers (and ration in money,) the sum of $83,523 in gold, or $58,603 more than the English frigate Raleigh, (5,200 tons,) serving in the same waters.

It will be seen by a reference to this table that the total pay and allowance for the officers of the British iron-clad Raleigh, 22 guns, 5,200 tons, 5,639 horse-power, was $24,920. The pay of an average United States sloop of war, wooden, 8 guns, 910 tons, 1,150 horse-power, was $57,404.50, or an excess over the British frigate of $32,284.50.

By reference to the table, it will be seen that this difference is produced by the multiplication of unnecessary officers who are assigned to duty upon the American vessels. It is this that adds to this item to duty upon the American vessels. It is this that adds to this item "pay of the Navy." It is the unnecessary duplication of officers upon high or sea pay. They might be put upon leave pay, and in that way you could retrench the expenditures of this part of the Navy.

I have no doubt that the expenses of the Navy are increased by putting officers under what are called traveling orders, under which they receive mileage. When this item is closely scanned, it will be seen that during the last few years the amount has been increased.

they receive mileage. When this item is closely scanned, it will be seen that during the last few years the amount has been increased for this purpose very largely.

It is in the power of the Secretary of the Navy, if he is so disposed, to favor officers by giving them these traveling orders, while, upon the other hand, if he will look to the interest of the tax-payers of the tax-payers of the tax-payers of the results. the country, the expenditures, at least in this respect, can be greatly

Mr. BANKS. I move to strike out the last word. It would give me great pleasure to sustain any well-considered proposition for the reduction of the expenditures of the Navy. I have no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations, at least in their own view, have given proper attention to this bill. But it does not seem to me that given proper attention to this bill. But it does not seem to me that the conclusions to which they have arrived are calculated to strengthen the Navy of the United States or to maintain the integrity and honor of the Government in that Department.

What the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] has just said shows that in order to bring the naval service within the appropriation, so far as the pay of officers is concerned, a large number of officers must be put upon reduced pay and a smaller number upon what he calls high pay or pay for sea service. It is undoubtedly true that this may be done; but concludent what he calls high pay or pay for sea service. It is undoubtedly true that this may be done; but gentlemen must remember that to do so would subject a great many honorable officers of the Government to distress and to what they would esteem a degradation. Putting a man upon half pay is to to degrade him.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me to interrupt him upon the question of reducing officers of the Navy to furlough pay, I will say that I am totally opposed to that. But leave pay and furlough pay are two different things.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] had better be careful or the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHIT-

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] had better be careful or the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] will charge him, as he did me the other day, with knowing nothing about naval affairs. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKS. I know there is a difference between leave pay and furlough pay. But a deprivation of employment is considered degradation by the officers of the Navy, and it is so understood by the country at large. Now if in this particular regard a reduction of expenses is to be made, it should be commenced by a re-organization of the naval system, either in regard to the number of officers or in regard to the extent of the service isself. gard to the extent of the service isself.

I do not think it is a wise thing for the committee, nor will it be I do not think it is a wise thing for the committee, nor will it be beneficial to the country, to throw the onus and disadvantages of this reduction upon the class of officers who are employed in this branch of the public service. For that reason I would very gladly vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE;] or I would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] who has this appropriation bill in charge, that he make this item at least what it has been heretofore, $6,500,000, instead of $6,250,000 as proposed in

Now the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] in addressing the committee at length upon this bill, made a remark to which I wish to call his attention and the attention of the commitwhich I wish to call his attention and the attention of the commit-tee. He seemed to assume it as a conceded fact that this Govern-ment had been subject to insults from the government of Spain, be-cause of its incapacity to defend itself. Now I certainly do not un-derstand that to be the case. I do not understand that the Government has recognized or acknowledged that it has received anything that could be considered in the estimation of any nation as a direct or intentional insult. I know there has been a difference of opinion in the minds of our people in regard to the policy of this Government with reference to Spain and the Spanish possessions in the Gulf of Mexico, but I have never yet conceived it to have been admitted that our Government had submitted to insult ou account of the inefficiency of its naval preparations.

Why, sir, I call the attention of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that we have ourselves kept in repair and kept affoat the naval vessels in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico. But for our naval establishments, the mechanics in our navy-yards, our materials and supplies, those ships of war could not have been kept affoat there. This has been the case constantly for the last five years, and will be for the next five years if we continue the same policy. How is it possible then that the Government can understand that it has been offended in any degree by the conduct of the government of Spain toward our Government in this regard?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANKS. I wish the committee would give me five minutes

Mr. LUTTRELL obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BANKS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir. I want the gentleman from Georgia to understand that I am not complaining of the committee. I only want to state some general views.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that. My purpose was simply to ask that the committee now rise, in order that the House may take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. BANKS. After I have concluded what I have to say, I will vote

Mr. BANKS. After I have concluded what I have to say, I will vote for that proposition.

Mr. Chairman, for this Government to submit to offensive treatment at the hands of another nation would not be justified by the fact that we had no Navy. I do not think this committee or this House of Representatives would be content with any such defense. If our Government or our citizens are not treated properly by other governments, though we had not a ship afloat and our flag was not upon the waters of the world, I think it would still be not only the purpose and determination but within the capacity of the people of this country to defend themselves. I do not think that any consideration of that kind can justify the proposed reduction in expenses or the criticism which was presented in a very just spirit on the part of the gentleman from Tennessee as to the policy of the administration of the Navy Department in past years.

Let the past go. Whether it has been good or ill, we cannot change it. Let us look at what the country demands now. Let us ask ourselves whether the Navy is in a proper condition at the present moment, whether that which is proposed as the supply for this Department is sufficient in amount and application to make our Navy what it should be. Now, of one hundred and forty-six vessels of ours afloat there are one hundred and twenty-three steamers. to appropriate this year $1,500,000 for the repair of these vessels, to keep them in proper condition and proper order.

If this appropriation be not sufficient one or more or all of these vessels will suffer by deterioration infinitely more than will be saved by the Government in the diminution of the appropriation; and another Congress this year or next year or the year after will be obliged to appropriate millions of dollars to make good the damage which these one hundred and twenty-three steamers and twenty-three sailing-vessels will suffer for the want of means to keep them in repair.

"A stitch in time" is a good thing; and if neglected it brings to wreck everything that suffers for the want of it. This consideration applies to the steamers, the sailing-vessels, the machinery, and all the other appurtenances just as it does in all the ordinary affairs of life. To withhold the appropriations necessary for such purposes is not economy. Gentlemen here, if they continue in the direction of affairs in this House, will have to make good the injury resulting to the Navy of the country from insufficient appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether he has taken pains to look in detail to see what is necessary as a "stitch in time" to keep in repair our Navy?

Mr. BANKS. I confess I have not done so, because I have not had the means. To look at this matter in detail is to examine the condition of every ship and ascertain what is necessary to make good that when the means its condition what it should be for the present year. ship, to make its condition what it should be for the present year. I have not done this; but I take it to be the fact that for the repairs of one hundred and twenty-three steamers and twenty-three sailing-vessels a million and a half of dollars is not what the Government under former administrations, democratic or republican, has appropriated and will not suffice now any better than heretofore. The fact must present itself to every member here that with so insufficient an appropriation these vessels and steamers will suffer for want of repairs, and future Congresses will be required to make good the injury.

I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise. I desire to move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock to-night for the sole purpose of considering the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mills reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had come to no reso-lution thereon.

PRINTING DEFICIENCY.

Mr. WALDRON. I rise to a privileged question and submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the printing deficiency bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of Senate S. No. 1232, an act to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of the said amendment after the word "for," in line 2 of said amendment, and substitute therefor the following: "Compensation than fifty cents per thousand ems and forty cents per hour for time-work to printers and bookbinders."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Mr. WALDRON. There being no discussion desired in regard to this matter, I will demand the previous question.

Mr. BANKS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the regular reduction of wages proposed by this conference report? Mr. WALDRON. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the maximum prices under this conference report are a reduction of about 20 per cent. on the existing prices; and that prices here fixed are as high as those paid in any city in the Union, and higher than are paid in many. I the existing prices; and that prices here fixed are as high as those paid in any city in the Union, and higher than are paid in many. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. BANKS. I hope not, as I wish to say a word.

Mr. WALDRON. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, the printers in this city are paid less than the large majority of skilled mechanics elsewhere in the country. It may be that they get more pay at the present time than the printers of the same capacity in other cities; but gentlemen must remember their situation here is very different, as they work but a part of the year and are not allowed a regular stipulated period of employment each day, that they are required to work according to the necessities of the Government, sometimes for eight hours, at other times twelve, and sometimes even twenty in the twenty-four.

Mr. RUSK. And sometimes only one.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir; and sometimes only one; and all these disadvantages diminish their pay while their expenses are quite as high if not higher by reason of this irregularity of employment.

I do not think the gentlemen of the conference committee ought to insist in placing these skilled mechanics of the Government at the same rate of wages paid in other cities where employment is regular from the beginning to the end of each year. I have a table which I should be very glad to have published with my remarks.

Mr. ATKINS. This amendment provides where they work by the hour they shall get forty cents an hour, so if they work twenty hours they will get twenty times forty cents.

I will state further, that the prices in New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore are less than they are here. There is but one city on the continent where they get fifty cents a thousand ems, and that is the city of San Francisco, California.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman from Tennessee will see that if a printer is employed for one day for one or two hours, and another day is required to work ten, fifteen, or twenty hours, the service is much harder, and ought to be better paid than where the printer works in another city from the beginning to the end of the year a certain number of hours each day. Some days printers here have but very little work, and other days they are obliged to work all day and long into the night; and under the circumstances I say they are entitled to the pay now provided for them as skilled mechanics.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I should have to correct the gentleman it one or two points.

Mr. BANKS. I should be glad to be corrected.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I wish to correct the gentleman in one or two particulars. The printers employed in the Government Printing Office, as a class, have more and steadier work than those employed in any other office in the country, and they now get a much higher compensation. This bill reduces that compensation somewhat, but it brings it down only to the maximum price paid in one other city in the States, the one to which reference has been made by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] and that is the city of San Francisco, California California.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to ask whether this does not reduce—and I beg the gentleman's pardon for disputing his statement—the price 33½ per cent.?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. It reduces the price per thousand ems from sixty to fifty cents, but gentlemen should remember there are but few men employed in the Government Office by the thousand ems, most of them being employed by the week.

Mr. WALDRON. I demand the previous question on the adoption

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered,

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

I move that the House take a recess until half past Mr. BLOUNT. seven o'clock this evening for the sole purpose of considering the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSTER. No other business to be transacted.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the recess be until ten o'clock to-mor-

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my colleague on the committee will not prevent us from having a meeting this evening to proceed with the consideration of this bill.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the question on the motion for a recess, the Chair desires to submit a request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Bagby] which the Chair thinks will do justice to many deserving recipients under bills now awaiting the action of the House. The Clerk will read the gentleman's request.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw my motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there are no bills which press so urgently and tenderly for the consideration of the House as the pension bills.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the proposition will be extended so as to apply generally to bills of the Private Calendar. If that is not done the work on those bills will have to be gone over again next Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. Mr. RUSK. I ask that all the pension bills on the Speaker's table be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions that they may be able to report them that evening.

Objection was made. Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BL()UNT. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve iteslf into Committee of the Whole on the naval appropria-

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. Mills in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the navel service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] to amend the first paragraph appropriating for the pay of officers and men of the Navy, by striking out "$6,250,000" and inserting "$7,000,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a few words to the committee on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana put himself

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana put himself in order by offering a pro forma amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reduce the sum mentioned in the amendment of the gentleman from Maine $1 pro forma.

Mr. Chairman, I see the gentleman from Maine is not in his seat. If he was I should like to ask him a question or two, and should be very glad indeed to hear his answer. Nor do I see the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] in his seat.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Suppose you pass this section over and go back to it after awhile, when there are more members present.

Mr. HOLMAN. We cannot do that very wall. I see the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMAN. We cannot do that very well. I see the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] now in his seat.

These gentlemen have assumed that the appropriation proposed by this bill of $6,250,000 is an inadequate appropriation for the pay of the officers and men of the Navy, a body of officers and seventy-five hundred men. Indeed it has been intimated that the Government in the poverty of this appropriation is acting unkindly toward the officers of the And yet, sir, it seems to me that in no nation will be found so extraordinary a state of facts as exists in ours in reference to the pay of officers of the Navy in comparison with the aggregate pay of the men of the Navy; and it is the more remarkable when the natural tendency of a Government like ours should have been to reduce the number of high salaried officers rather than increase them beyond the public necessities. In 1872, five years ago, when the Navy was composed of eighty-five hundred men, the estimate was $6,500,000 as the entire pay; but the appropriation was the same sum as proposed by this bill, $6,250,000. In that time the pay of the sailors and seamen at a cost of $300 each was $2,550,000, and that of the officers was $3,700,000, making a total expenditure for pay of $6,250,000, or $1,250,000 more for the salaries of officers than for the entire naval force. In 1877, when the Navy is reduced to seventy-five hundred men, at a cost of $2,250,000 per annum, and officers $4,000,000, still footing up $6,250,000. No reduction of expense!

But the point which induced me to rise was to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] to the fact that in 1862 it was deemed sufficient to appropriate $6,250,000. Now, when the force has been reduced from eighty-five hundred to seventy-five number of high salaried officers rather than increase them beyond the force has been reduced from eighty-five hundred to seventy-five hundred, and we still appropriate $3,250,000, gentlemen complain that we do injustice to the Navy. It seems to me, without doing injustice to the officers of the Navy, that we might greatly reduce this amount.

Mr. DANFORD. On the details I support the amendment offered to the bill by the gentleman from Massachusetts; and I believe there is a wise economy required in the Navy, and I think it economical in the long run to keep as large a number of sea-going vessels afloat as possible. And I believe it would be wise economy to put them in commission, even with a full complement of men, in order to keep them in readiness for active service if we have trouble, for instance, in the Gulf. I hold, further, that there would be economy and saving to the Government in the repair of these vessels in branic at the in the Gulf. I hold, further, that there would be economy and saving to the Government in the repair of these vessels, in keeping them constantly in commission, and under the charge of officers of the Navy. I believe, further, that it should be the policy of this Government to keep as large a number of our cruisers as possible. By the action of the past Congress in cutting down this item of appropriation the Department has been compelled to bring home from foreign service a number of our vessels. It is true, undoubtedly, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that you might largely reduce the pay of the Navy by putting them on shore duty or waiting orders; but it strikes Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that you might largely reduce the pay of the Navy by putting them on shore duty or waiting orders; but it strikes me that the true policy of the Government is to keep our flag flying at the mast-head of as many vessels as we can. The very presence of our flag in distant ports encourages our commerce abroad. Our Navy is not supported, for the reason that we may fear insult to our commerce or to our citizens abroad from the larger powers. It is from the smaller powers that we have to look for these difficulties, and it seems to me that the policy of the Government should be to protect American commerce and intercourse in the East, for instance, and upon the shores of South America. A naval officer, wherever he may go, has a difference between his sea pay and his pay on waiting orders, and that comprises a very large item. The difference between the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] and the statement made by the head of the bureau is a mere matter of calculation of dollars and cents, as to the amount of money required of earthacton of donars and cents, as to the amount of money required to pay their claims.

I was opposed to the bill at the last session, because I am opposed to any measure reducing our Navy which would deprive it of the power of bringing home our seamen from foreign ports.

Mr. BLOUNT. As has been said by my colleague on the commit-service, and a large number of officers are employed in it whose services are not required. We have upon the active list a number of officers equaling almost in cost the British navy.

This seems to be simply an establishment for officers and nothing else, and I therefore think that the complaints made are just and should be heard, and I think that gentlemen in the present condition of the country at this day, when economy is demanded everywhere, can find no place where we could better enforce economy than here. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford] who has just taken his seat gave us no reason for any increase of this appropriation. He says that we are compelled to have all these iron-clads in commission. I have yet to learn for the first time that any yessel withdrawn from

I have yet to learn for the first time that any vessel withdrawn from commission was not withdrawn for some reason. On inquiry at the Bureau of Equipment I am informed that all vessels are kept in commission which are in condition to be so. There are a number of vessels employed upon the Southern Atlantic and upon the Northern Atlantic because we might by some possibility have difficulty or trouble with the governments south of us.

The gentleman said it was a matter of economy to keep these vessels

The gentleman said it was a matter of economy to keep these vessels in commission; that they are better preserved if they are on a cruise than if they are in ordinary. If that is the full statement of it, the gentleman is correct; but when you add to it the fact that these vessels when on cruising duty or when under convoy, for they are utterly unfit for cruising—when they are carried out to sea simply to make a show of vessels in commission, there is to be added the expenses of the rations and pay of the men. There can be no question but what it is a matter of economy to put them in ordinary. Any large sum of money spent upon them is utterly useless, and therefore I think this appropriation is ample.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLYMER. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I think this appropriation is ample. I think it is but right that these vessels, so utterly useless in commission, should be withdrawn, that these officers who are unnecessarily on sea duty should be brought home, and cers who are unnecessarily on sea duty should be brought home, and a large number of them put on waiting orders. I think that there are a large number of officers scattered about in sinecures, in these bureaus where they have nothing to do, in the navy-yards where they have nothing to do; about ninety of them are over here at the Naval Academy. I think they should be put on waiting orders; that to do so would be nothing but fair and right to the country, and nothing but a just administration of the Navy. So far as I am concerned, while I am willing to do whatever is right so far as the officers of the Navy are concerned. I do not propose to demoralize and deof the Navy are concerned, I do not propose to demoralize and degrade the Navy by any such subterfuge as this.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment to the amendment

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.
Mr. CONGER. I renew it. The Committee of the Whole not long ago listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman and his friends when they advocated a reduction of the number of men in the Navy. And gentlemen will remember that the main point of the argument was that the men could be recruited, re-enlisted at any time, upon very short notice, whenever necessary, and the Navy made effective. I submit that that was the main argument, and that the moving power, the executive power of the Navy, the nucleus of the Navy, that is, the officers, should be kept; that was the argument.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman certainly does not claim to quote me as saying that?

Mr. CONGER. I claim to quote the gentleman as acceding to the argument of his friends on the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. O, well; that is pretty broad.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman did not then rise to deny it; I remember that. I think he will not deny the fact now that that was the argument used; the RECORD will show it at any rate.

A reduction in the Navy was made to the extent of one thousand men, much the pretense that the men in the Navy were not then men, upon the pretense that the men in the Navy were not then necessary, but that it was very important to have all the officers, to keep them on active duty, to keep them bright and efficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to inquire who it was that made that

Mr. CONGER.
Mr. HOLMAN.
O, no, no.
Mr. CONGER.
A small part of it.
Mr. HOLMAN.
No part of it, and no member upon this side of the House, no member of the Committee on Appropriations made it, but they made exectly the reverse of it.

Mr. CONGER. I think I can furnish the record of the gentleman's own remarks upon that subject, and I shall be happy to do so if I own remarks upon that subject, and I shall be happy to do so if I find it easily.

Mr. HOLMAN. Refer to the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman's memory fails him sometimes, unless it is in regard to a reduction; on that point it never fails him. That was the argument then, a reduction of the number of men in the Navy, while there was no attempt to reduce the number of officers. It was rather claimed that with the officers, with the nucleus the Navy, while there was no attempt to reduce the number of officers. It was rather claimed that with the officers, with the nucleus of the Navy, a full complement of men could be obtained and organized at any moment. That was very good reasoning if it was adhered to. But what result followed? Gentlemen now use the argument that the effective force of the Navy was reduced a thousand men, and therefore, contrary to what they said a year ago or two years ago, they claim, at least some of them do, that the number of officers should be reduced in proportion.

But what does the gentleman in charge of this bill say? Not that these officers should be reduced in number, not that there are too many of them, but that they should be withdrawn by the strong hand of power from any active, efficient service in the position in which they have been placed, and be planted as ornamental images of a dead Navy, on waiting-orders, on furlough. What for? To save the difference of expense between waiting-orders pay and seaduty pay.

The gentleman says we can save so much by putting the officers of the Navy on waiting orders. That is a grand discovery. Go on with your economy in the same spirit, and I admit that it will be with equal reason, and first put all the officers of the Navy upon waiting orders, and then put them all upon furlough.

And, by the time that is done, gentlemen will come in and tell this committee that in order to economize we have only to remove the officers entirely and that thus we can save still more money to the people. One argument is as logical as the other. Followed out, this mode of argumentation means no Navy at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish we had more light of the right kind on this subject. I would not hesitate to yote for three times the amount that is asked in this bill, if a comprehensive effort was being made, such as is made by some other governments, to assist the business interests of this country, the merchants, the manufacturers, the traders of the country, to send their wares to all parts of the known world. It used to be an adage that if a pound of British merchandise was in danger in any part of the world, a British cruiser would heave in sight immediately.

Our people are now on the eve of extending their commerce. It is a necessity. Of the six hundred million dollars' worth of products that we export every year, nearly everything is from the farm; very little comparatively comes from the manufactory. But our manufacturers are ready. They are sending calicoes to England; they are sending glass there. They are sending manufactured articles to Northern Russia. They are looking in every direction to extend our com-

Whether the American trader can go all over the world without protection, I do not know. I think there should be power on the part of our Government to protect our citizens abroad. But it is well part of our Government to protect our citizens abroad. But it is well known to every man who reads that any one of the powers of Europe has a single vessel that could destroy our whole Navy. Italy has such a vessel; so has Turkey, to say nothing of such a power as Great Britain. In fact, Armstrong is making guns for all the powers of Europe; Krupp is engaged in the same way. Iron-clads are being built on the Clyde. We have nothing to compete with those vessels. What is the use of our Navy, I do not really know. I am not prepared to say, however, that we should abandon the education of naval officers. I do not believe that we should. I think that as a nation we should have a better defined policy. How otherwise can we assist the commerce and enterprise of the American people in competing in the markets of the world, as they have never yet competed? It is a melcommerce and enterprise of the American people in competing in the markets of the world, as they have never yet competed? It is a melancholy fact that, as a general proposition, whatever we do send abroad must first go to England, and be distributed from there. We do not trade with the West India Islands; we do not trade with South America; yet we ought to have that trade exclusively. We have scarcely a line of American ocean-going steamers from the United States except on the Pacific coast, and I believe one from the Delaware.

As I have already said I would not hesitate a moment to vote three times the amount here proposed if the luniness interests of the countimes the amount here proposed if the luniness interests of the countimes the amount here proposed if the luniness interests of the countimes the amount here proposed if the luniness interests of the countimes the amount here proposed if the luniness interests of the countimes the countimes and the countimes are considered in the luniness interests of the countimes and the land of the luniness interests of the countimes are considered in the luniness in the lu times the amount here proposed if the business interests of the country were to be assisted in putting our wares into the commercial markets of the world. But it appears that anything of that kind must be done by American enterprise without Government protection, because we have not vessels enough all told to afford protection anything. where to our commerce. It is perhaps a fact that Americans can trade all over the world without protection better than any other nation; I presume they can. But we have not this matter clearly put before We have not such information as goes to the foundation of this great question; so I suppose we must just drift along; we must strike a balance between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Holman,] and so let the mat-

Mr. BANKS. I listened with great pleasure to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.] I thank them for the information they have given to me and the committee. But they must observe that we have to take this question as it is presented. It is presented in an appropriation bill. They state that while the appropriation is the same that it has been heretofore and is as much as or more than it was when our Navy consisted of a and is as inuch as or more than it was when our Navy consisted of a thousand more men than we employ now, yet at the same time we have no naval service at all; and as the gentleman from Indiana has said, if we may take the representations of gentlemen charged with inquiry into the naval affairs of the country, we are without any defense.

Now the difficulty is (and it is this to which I am calling attention) that this question is presented on an appropriation bill in which we are to vote more or less without any possible means of making that re-organization which is necessary to correct the evils described by these gentlemen. If the condition of the Navy is as it is represented, then there should be a thorough revision and re-organization of the laws upon which our naval establishment is based.

How is it that we come here and admit that officers have a claim upon the Government for a certain salary in consideration of certain services that they render to the Government, and yet refuse to approservices that they render to the Government, and yet reruse to appropriate money to pay those salaries, and because we have not money for that purpose put them upon waiting orders and let them float about the country rendering no service to the Government at all? Now I ask the nonorable and intelligent gentlemen who have charge of this matter whether this is a wise course for the Government to of this matter whether this is a wise course for the Government to pursue. I ask gentlemen whether they call this wise administration. Is it economy? Is it a system of legislation that they would recommend to be pursued indefinitely? What would be the result if we should continue it? We would bankrupt the country, so far as the naval service is concerned, and at the same time make it impossible for the officers we employ to perform any duty at all.

What is the result, taking the statement of these gentlemen? The officers are not paid, they render no service, and the navy-yards are idle. The navy-yard at Boston, costing the Government $12,000,000, having the best machinery for the construction and repair of ships, is idle. Men who have been trained there to the necessities of the Government.

idle. Men who have been trained there to the necessities of the Governndle. Men who have been trained there to the necessities of the Government, with their families, are suddenly thrown upon the community without employment, and this night and this hour are without bed or bread for themselves, wives, and children. The Government is offensively treated by other nations here in our own waters, because we have no defense as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthere with the seas of the earth on the seas of the earth.

Now, at this moment, when there are more than eight millions of armed men moving from different points in Europe, preparatory to the great conflict which shall not only shake the foundations of na-tions, but possibly change the course of civilization, we, the country most interested in intercourse with other nations, are without protection or any means of maintaining or extending that intercourse.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Wilson] who has just taken his seat says he does not see how the Navy is to assist our intercourse.

He has only to look at Japan and China to see an illustration of the means by which the naval vessels actually open a market to our merchants and to our manufacturers.

merchants and to our manufacturers.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am free to say in the outset that I do not know whether the sum named in the bill is too little or too much. I am drawn into the debate by the reflections indulged by my friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] as well as by the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.] I have no apprehension of insult to the American flag at this time in foreign waters or in our own. There is trouble enough in the east. They do not want to involve themselves with this country. I believe our best protections. to involve themselves with this country. I believe our best protection for the future is in the development of our own power and the bringing to us of the choice spirits of foreign lands as immigrants. I mean the choice spirits from humbler classes as well as from the prouder ones

How did England make her commercial and naval supremacy

How did England make her commercial and naval supremacy? Not by her navy, but by the establishment of her mail service with every country approachable by sea-going vessels. But how did she maintain that? Why, by subsidizing lines of steamers.

I dislike to add to the patronage of the Government and therefore would not encourage the establishment of a Government workshop where it could be avoided, either in the form of a navy-yard or of an arsenal. England, with her great naval stations and great naval power, relies upon private ship-yards and private engineering establishments for her ships and their armament. Her flag shadows every water over which commerce floats and her commercial marine furnishes a body of men always ready to man her navy when that navy nishes a body of men always ready to man her navy when that navy needs expansion for active duty.

Let us revive our commerce. It will take care of the Navy; it will create a Navy. When we wanted thousands of ships to blockade two thousand miles of coast and carry munitions of war and transport troops, we found them, and we found the men and officers to man and to work them through the destruction of our commercial marine. I have favored giving subsidies to steam lines to carry the mails to China and Japan and to the various islands of the sea along the southern coast, to make us neighbors to those people who do not manufacture, who need what we do produce, and who can furnish the raw material from tropical and semi-tropical countries which we cannot produce. The amount of money which you will expend in making your Navy and maintaining naval stations would if granted in such subsidies give you a world-wide commerce and a body of sailors and officers who would go forth to meet the combined navies of the world. We have no need of a Navy to protect our commerce, for we have no foreign commerce except the export of our raw staples. We are beginning to make one. The recent exhibition, which was called a "Philadelphia job," and to which through the grace of my friend from Illinois [Mr. Springer] we contributed one million and a half dollars without reclamation, has shown the world they can buy better goods more cheaply in the markets of protective America than they can in those of any other country in the world. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BANKS withdrew the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the amendment.
Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been kind enough on two occasions to allude to me as responsible for an appropriation of one million and a half of dollars to the Centennial exhibition by reason of an amendment which I offered in the House pending the debate on the Centennial bill. The gentleman assumes extraordinary intelligence on this subject.

Mr. KELLEY. No; only superior gratitude. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. He assumes the most extraordinary intelligence also. The gratitude which he feigns is evidently insincere. If he will recall to his mind the time when that amendment was offered, he will find that he opposed it because he thought it would accomplish the very object which it was intended by me it would accomplish. He understood the amendment then as I understood it and as every member of the House understood it, and as the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the Senate understood it and so declared at the time the Centennial bill was pending in that body. The gentleman from Pennsylvania voted against that amendment and I voted for it, bewe both understood it alike at that time.

Mr. KELLEY. I beg leave to ask the gentleman whether I did not assure him and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that I had no opinion about it that was worth a cent; because I am but a poor layman, having been out of practice for fifteen or sixteen years. I said if I had a suit about a dog the first thing I did in the case was to pay my lawyer's fee.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman did not say that at the time. He made up that joke some days afterward.

Mr. KELLEY. It was at least a good joke when it came.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will, as a layman which he now claims to be, examine the decision of the court in the Centennial case recently pronounced in Philadelphia, he will find that the court decided that case upon the law of 1872, which was not before this House at the time and which was only referred to by In that act, according to the decision of the court, it was provided that the stockholders were first to receive all their stock provided that the stockholders were first to receive all their stock subscriptions back before there was to be any division of assets. The effect of my amendment, then, according to the decision, was simply to give the whole of the profits, whatever they might be, to the United States, after the stockholders should get back their stock as provided in the law of 1872. Hence the amendment which I proposed had nothing to do with the fact that the United States were deprived of the $1,500,000; but it was the latent act of 1872, which was only referred to by its title in the Centennial bill, that was the turning point in that decision

But I only desire to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania of the fact that this case is not yet finally decided, but that the Attorney-General has ordered it to be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it will be time enough for the gentleman to pronounce his judgment, as he is a layman only, when the Supreme Court of the United States has finally adjudged that case. I will abide that time and wi'l be perfectly content with the decision when it is made.

and will be perfectly content with the decision when it is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. You can do so with entire safety.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; I can do so with entire safely.

Mr. KELLEY. I only meant to impress upon the House that the "Philadelphia job" had served the whole nation by opening up worldwide markets. As my friend from Illinois doubts the sincerity of my gratitude I shall not further give any expression to it; yet I cannot but help feeling kindly to him, though he has persuaded me that he clinched the thing on the other side after the spike had been driven through by previous legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his kindness. If he gets his $1,500,000 I shall not regret it, in so far as it has contributed to the success of the exhibition. But few members expected that we should ever be so fortunate as to get a dollar of it back when the bill was passed. But now that the exhibition has proven a success, I insist that the Government should have its appropriation back, according to the letter and spirit of the law, and appropriation back, according to the letter and spirit of the law, and believe the Supreme Court will so decide.

Mr. KELLEY. You ought to be satisfied, considering the good that it has done to your State.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Michigan, in consequence of not having paid attention to the debate during the last session, has been striking in the wrong direction. He has fancied a contract that was not at all in existence and addressed himself to it. As I have nothing to do with those pledges in the Committee on Appropria-tions, nor this side of the House to which the gentleman was reply-tions, nor this side of the House to which the gentleman was replying, I shall not pay my respects to him any further on those pledges. But the gentleman says that I want to put all the officers on waiting orders. Mr. Chairman, Congress has seen fit to establish various grades of pay for various kinds of service: sea pay, shore pay, waiting-orders pay, and furlough pay. I simply insisted that there should be no more officers employed on sea pay than the public service requires, and no more on shore pay than the interests of the country demand; and that the country having been served as to those purposes the balance of them should be on waiting orders. So far as the amount of money required by this paragraph is concerned, the matter of pay of the Navy, it is a most singular thing that we are without light as gentlemen see fit to state it—that we are without light. out light as gentlemen see fit to state it—that we are without light from the Secretary of the Navy himself; that he does not furnish detailed information as to the number of vessels in commission, the number required to be in commission, the number of officers neces number required to be in commission, the number of officers necessary to perform the duty, and the number of officers required and absolutely required on shore duty.

Now, sir, there are abuses here recognized by naval officers that have been recognized for years, and it was simply with reference to this that the Committee on Appropriations have been addressing themselves to reduction. There has been no estimate that would tally with the facts. It has been impossible for us to make an estimate, because we could not say whether our own views as to the number of officers in the service would accord with those of the Secretary, and we cannot say, unless he will conform to what we think economical administration of the Navy, what he will spend. But we can say what he ought to spend. We have done it.

This will not necessarily increase the commerce of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I presume the gentleman offering this amendment will withdraw it.

Mr. STENGER. I withdraw the amendment.
Mr. HOLMAN. I renew it, and do so to say but a single word.
Not a word has been said in defense of the sufficiency of our Navy at this period of peace, and yet a word in favor of it would be very well. In this time of profound peace, and situated as we are with well. In this time of profound peace, and situated as we are with reference to the great maritime powers and not likely to be involved in their conflicts, a great Navy kept up at enormous expense to the people could not be justified. The gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks wisely when he says that our commerce at this period of time requires no extended Navy. Once in the course of a generation, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Banks,] we may send our Navy to half-civilized nations to open the gates of commerce, but these are but episodes in the history of our time. We need no considerable Navy. It would be but an expensive ornament without power for real good.

We have at this time about eighty vessels in commission, and I think the Secretary of the Navy has stated fairly and justly, so far as I have been able to examine the subject, that our Navy is now, in the character and condition of its ships, far superior to our Navy of 1869, although it then consisted of two hundred and three ships. "Indeed," to quote the words of the Secretary's report, "our Navy is far more powerful for warlike purposes than it has ever been before in a time of peace." I think the Secretary of the Navy justifiable in the statement he has made in his last report as to the state of our Navy.

A nation situated as ours is in reference to the great commercial powers, considering the fact that the nations of the globe are being brought every year closer together in commercial intercourse, our Navy is large enough. We have not the motive now that urged us in times gone by to jealously watch and assert our powers, and we are not compelled to keep an armed force in every ocean to maintain our rights, as in former years. Our position among the nations is recognized. We have a large body of educated men, educated at our recognized. We have a large body of educated men, educated at our naval school, whose services are valuable and who are unemployed, hundreds of them are on furlough and leave of absence, and yet they are drawing salaries from the Treasury and swelling by millions this appropriation bill. I think their services can be made available and ought to be. We could utilize their attainments in the revenue-marine service. They would make good custom-house officers. They rine service. They would make good custom-house officers. They would be valuable as consuls in connection with the commerce of our country and ministers at foreign courts, if such employés of the Government were necessary. Why not make this great body of men, swelling to several hundred, unemployed and with high salaries, who are educated and adapted to such pursuits, and graduates of our Naval Academy at Annapolis, valuable to the Republic in time of peace as well as war. At present that large body of officers are drawing minimal times from the net invol Transmire and are yet memplored. You peace as well as war. At present that large body of officers are drawing millions from the national Treasury and are yet unemployed. You cannot employ them in your naval service, and you do not deem it proper to compel them to abandon the profession for which you have educated them. Thus your naval establishment has become enormously expensive. In my judgment we have for all practical purposes a sufficient Navy, but I am satisfied that in its officers and in all of its details it is excessive in its expenditures, and that even the appropriations made by the bill ought to be heavily reduced. It is framed upon the exigencies of this period, and not upon the base of a real upon the exigencies of this period, and not upon the base of a real economy, although it is a reduction of millions from former years.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I was somewhat surprised at the defense of the present administration of the Navy by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Holman.] He is not warranted in his conclusions by the facts. There were more vessels in commission in 1869 then there are

Mr. HOLMAN. There were two hundred and three in commission

Mr. WHITTHORNE. There were more vessels in commission in the year 1869 than there are now. Mr. HOLMAN. I said so.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I understood the gentleman to say that there were more now than then.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no; there were two hundred and three then and but eighty now. I spoke of the capacity and efficiency of the vessels.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. That shows that the gentleman from Indiana does not know what he is talking about, [laughter] because there were not two hundred and three vessels in commission in 1869; that was the number of vessels borne upon the naval register. My friend from Indiana is just as widely mistaken in all of his facts as he is in that. If he will look at the number of vessels now alleged to be in commission he will find somewhere in the neighborhood of twenty or commission he will had somewhere in the heighborhood of twenty of twenty-five that are tug-boats, little fancy things that run from offi-cers' quarters out to the navy-yards and thereabouts. And yet my friend from Indiana, the bull-dog of the Treasury, is here making a defense of the present administration of the Navy. I said "bull-dog;" perhaps I should have said "watch-dog." He is sometimes a bull-dog and sometimes a watch-dog; it depends upon whether his friends are interested or not.

Mr. CONGER. I certainly think that word had better be taken down. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have withdrawn it. I agree that the in-Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have withdrawn it. I agree that the interest and honor of our country and of our commerce demand a Navy. We should have a Navy, and when we have officers in the service they should be well paid. But it became my duty last session to look into this matter of officers who were performing sea duty so called, and officers who were performing shore duty, and officers who were upon waiting-orders pay, and officers who were upon furlough pay. There were but one or two or three upon furlough pay; but according to the distribution of the officers in the service, there were more upon sea pay than there ought to have been more upon shore nay than there ought. that there ought to have been, more upon shore pay than there ought to have been, and the actual amount of pay required is in the neighborhood of that reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT, Does not the gentleman find the statement he has just made to be in accord with what is stated by some of the best officers of the Navy?

Mr. WHITTHOONE, The last of the committee on the best officers of the Navy?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It is in accord with what is stated to be nec-

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It is in accord with what is stated to be necessary and only necessary by some of the most thoughtful and prudent officers of the Navy, who would guard the honor of the Navy as they would guard their own honor and the virtue of their families. This is no attack upon the Navy.

Now while I am up, a word further. My friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has struck the key-note of the difficulties which now environ the Navy. In the matter of modern improvements which have been made, the naval powers of the world have so far surpassed the United States that to-day the United States is not ranked as a naval power at all. It is not owing to the number of your vessels for you power at all. It is not owing to the number of your vessels, for you power at all. It is not owing to the number of your vessels, for you may have eighty in commission. It is not owing to the number of officers, for you have them. It is not owing to any want of power to recruit seamen and fill your naval vessels. But in naval science and naval armament the United States has stood still while other nations have made progress have made progress.

Right here again I would call the attention of this committee to the fact that England discarded the navy she owned in 1860; she discarded the navy she owned in 1860. And she has so far progressed now that she is building what my friend from Michigan [Mr. Conger] ridiculed to-day as commerce destroyers, what is termed a steel fleet, which promises to give a rate of speed of twenty knots an hour. Heretofore in the history of the naval powers, the United States has given to her maritime service a vessel of the highest rate of speed, the Wampanoag; no other government, up to this good hour, has ever put afloat a vessel her equal in speed. It shows what we can do if we will but do our duty

e will but do our duty. [Here the hammer fell.] Mr. WHITTHORNE. One word further; I trust some gentleman

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman for one word more, and only one

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. LUTTRELL. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] will withdraw his amendment to the amendment I will renew it, and yield my time to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I will do so.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I renew the amendment and yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I was going to say that the English government, with a view to the protection of her commerce and of her honor, is creating what is termed a steel fleet, a fleet not made of iron or wood, but of steel, which promises to give a rate of speed of twenty knots an hour. If they are able to build one or two or three vessels of that rate of speed, and arm them with the guns which modern science has produced, the commerce of the world will be at the mercy of those vessels, and they will be free cruisers over every sea.

In replying to what I stated to-day as to the exploits of the Alabama during our recent civil war, my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] cast—I do not know whether to call it a slur or a sneer. But I will tell him that the commander of that vessel simply imitated But I will tell him that the commander of that vessel simply imitated our fathers who had gone before us in 1812. He carried his letters of marque and reprisal. He was practicing a lesson learned from our ancestors. Neither they nor the naval heroes of England considered it dishonorable. But be it honorable or dishonorable, it was a fact, and it is a fact that may occur again in the history of our country; and we should provide against it.

Mr. Chairman, if we will do our duty to the commercial marine, if we will do our duty to its commercial interests of the country, if we will do our duty to its honor we will leave the ruts in which we have our Navy

Mr. CONGER. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to correct a mistake in which either the gentleman from Tennessee or myself fell? Mr. CONGER.

I will allow the gentleman a solitary word; the same courtesy which he extended.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee undestood me to say that there were two hundred and three vessels in commission in 1869, I presume he misunderstood me; for I had the report of the Secretary of the Navy before me at the time. If I said so it was a mistake. I simply intended to say that in 1869 there were two hundred and three vessels belonging to the Navy, while at the present time there are eighty vessels in commission, still more efficient than the body of those we had in 1869.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee has had for two years the absolute control and direction of all legislation in this than the second to the Navy and I received the second to the sec had for two years the absolute control and direction of all legislation in this House in regard to the Navy; and I venture to say that every man who has heard him speak to-night of its downward progress during his two years' administration (for he says that it is growing worse and worse continually) will wonder why he could not, in two years, in a proper bill revising the laws and devising a new plan, have procured something—however indefinite, however unimportant I might almost say—that would look in the direction of legislation to build up this continually sinking Navy, and not in the last hours of this second session, after all his two years' labor, to be compelled to confess here that he has made no effort whatever to change the laws, no effort whatever to remodel the system, no effort whatever to induce the Appropriations Committee to make provision for building different classes of vessels. But he comes here to tell us that two means may be adopted to make our Navy the most glorious in the world. One is the appointment of a commission—a proposition not introduced in this House in due time, but like a parasite to be fastened upon a simple appropriation bill—a commission to tell the House and the country in some way how our Navy can be redeemed. The other great discovery which the gentleman has made he reiterates here, after the whole world has decided that the sending out of fleet, armed ships under letters of marque and reprisal, to destroy unarmed vessels engaged in the commerce of the world, is not the most manly mode of warfare that could be imagined. Under new views of naval policy, this matter has been matter of treaty stipulations and the subject of protest. The gentleman says that England is fitting out these steel runners that can go twenty knots an hour. Shall such vessels go out to fight unarmed vessels of commerce, to destroy the property of the innocent? Is this England's old navy of which the gentleman spoke?

Sir, if that be the theory, that we are only to protect ourselves and save our commerce by secretly and silently destroying the commerce of our enemy, I can tell the gentleman that he can do it more cheaply by sending men to be shipped on board of merchantmen of other nations, with instructions to rise at a proper time in mutiny, at sea or in harbor, and capture and destroy the vessels in which they are shipped. There are a thousand other ways, less expensive, but not more mean, than this mode of the destruction of the commerce of the world, in which our nation may engage.

I like to hear the gentleman's views. I am glad that the leader of his party, the exponent of the democracy of the presentday, holds up to the world this modern system of grand national warfare upon the ocean by sending upon unarmed vessels fleet messengers of destruction. In another session he may devise other means: the sending out of incendiaries to go aboard commercial vessels and who shall be paid large wages, perhaps, for the risk they run, but who will be less expensive than the building of these steel runners. You can send out such men and say to them in the language of another, "Go steal

Mr. HOLMAN. It is certainly time that debate on this paragraph should cease

Mr. KELLEY. I do not care what paragraph I speak upon; I only want to reply to the gentleman from Teanessee.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HALE, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the civil establishments of the several navy-yards, $85,000.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend by striking out "$85,000" and inserting "$90,000."

inserting "$90,000."

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to my friend, the chairman of the Naval Committee, [Mr. Whitthorne,] that I have not much apprehension of those twenty-knot steamers they talk about. They propose to make twenty knots. We built the Wampanoag and had the reputation of having the fastest steamer which ever left port, but there is a slight tail to that story as it was found she could not carry coal enough to take her to the nearest coaling station, and the load which was put on board of her so strained her she never attempted to go out again depending on coal. And it will be so with these to go out again depending on coal. And it will be so with these twenty-mile steel steamers of Great Britain.

There is one limitation to the power of Great Britain, indeed there are many of them, but they may be named in a single phrase, the laws of nature. Salt water is the enemy of fast iron vessels. No iron vessel can make great speed that has to strike the Gulf Stream or tropical salt water. Barnacles accumulate upon every inch of the iron surface, and though one of these steamers may start out on a two years' cruise at twenty miles an hour on leaving the home stream, she will come back at less than ten. And England has no means within her own waters of removing the barnacles which thus impede the speed of her vessels.

As salt water is the enemy of iron shipping, fresh water is its friend Salt water imparts the disease, and while no mechanical power has been ascertained by which the bottom of iron or steel vessels can be cleared; while Chatham with its hundreds of millions of dollars, the great English station, and Cherbourg, built out in the sea, costing more money than Chatham, are almost useless for an iron navy, we of the United States have abundant means of taking care of all such vessels we have and of curing the disease whenever they come to home ports. I have heard from Russiau, French, and English officers the assertion that ten times the cost of Chatham or Cherbourg would be given for such fresh-water naval stations as we have in this coun-

And the gentleman, although he may have had the naval experience ascribed to him this afternoon by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Hale,] could convince nobody and would not believe himself that England will ever be able to make a great iron or steel war vessel which for the destruction of commerce of nations would equal the little vessels that used to come in in spite of our blockade of south-

The wars of the future will be wars of commerce, either restrictive of commerce or destructive of it, as was the policy of England during our late war; and small, fleet vessels, easily run into fresh water to relieve them in three days of barnacles, will after all be the war to reheve them in three days of barnacies, will after all be the war vessels of all future naval wars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANKS. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the debate I think is quite likely to lead to good results in regard to other matters, as well as that of the Navy. I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and other gentlemen who have talked of commerce, that there is no commerce without a navy. Great Britain and her government depend upon commerce. If her commerce were swept from the seas, her manufactories would be idle and her people made to suffer. It is her navy which protects her commerce; that keeps her alive; and she could not live without it. It is the old story, sir, that everything is necessary, one thing to one man or nation, and another thing to another man or to another one man or nation, and another thing to another man or to another nation. We want a navy, and my point is that I do not believe the Appropriation Committee can make a navy.

In regard to the people I represent, and the people represented by my colleague who sits in front of me, [Mr. Harris,] they are greatly interested in the restoration of commerce, because for their surplus manufactures they need markets in the world. There is one way to establish commerce in every country, for us as well as others, and that is to begin at the beginning. Our fishing establishments must be protected and supported. They are the nurseries of our seamen, as they were in the beginning those of England, of France, of Iceland, and all Scandinavian countries. We want protection for them, and I am delighted to see gentlemen of the South and gentlemen representing the West looking to this matter, and seeking the means of entering upon this prosperous commercial progress in the future. That is one of the steps they have to take to which they have been opposed so long. We have to do what every commercial country, every navigating people have done before us, make our commerce depend upon a successful coasting trade.

It is the coasting trade that lies at the foundation of every commercial and navigating power. Our coasting trade has been very nearly destroyed. Gentlemen that I have met upon this floor within the last six or eight years have told me that it was with apprehension and in danger that any little craft crept out of our own ports on the southern seas or the Gulf of Mexico. Yet with this coast line greater than that of any other country every port can maintain a small trade, educate its sailors, and increase the trade of the country. From this coasting trade we come to the trade with foreign nations.

Now, we have to maintain these lines from the beginning as other nations have maintained them—by favor of the Government. No man can maintain a line to Brazil, to China, or to Japan, and compete with other lines to those countries without the favor of the Government. Are gentlemen willing to give that favor? We want other things. The gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] knows that the great and powerful and patriotic State which he represents has one heavy foot on the trade of the country. They want heavier duties one heavy foot on the trade of the country. They want heavier duties than I think are necessary.

Mr. KELLEY. They are not asking for that now.

Mr. BANKS. No; because they can scarcely carry what they have got. But that is one difficulty. And it is a heavy weight, also, on the system of commerce or reciprocal treaties which are the basis of this trade of which the gentleman speaks. How are we to make a trade with these South American countries, or with Japan, or with European governments, or with any new country with which we have not a trade unless we first have commercial agreements with those countries? John Adams, as I remarked before, with the experience he had as a representative of this country to three or four of the large commercial countries of the world, said he would never make or sign any treaty except treaties of peace and reciprocal treaties.

Here the hammer fell.

Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. KELLEY. I shall make no plea in behalf of Pennsylvania now. I will utter a few words of exultation. She maintains the only line of steamers in the foreign trade that float the American flag from any of our ports. She built them with the capital of her citizens, and while they were built for commercial purposes, they serve for the training of officers and sailors to be useful to our Navy when readed. One of them has made the quickest trip on record to Great needed. One of them has made the quickest trip on record to Great Britain from this country. And why? For the reason that I assigned when on the floor before. A gentleman whom I do not see in his place says that Philadelphia is a little village on the muddy creek called the Delaware. But, though the water be muddy, it is fresh, and whenever the iron vessels come into that port they are clean and sail as they did when first launched or fitted for the sea; while vessail as they did when first launched or litted for the sea; while vessels trading between Liverpool and continental ports and ourgreat commercial cities upon the salt water, gather barnacles and their speed diminishes with time unless they make a visit to the Delaware or some other fresh-water stream.

This discussion to-night is useful, I think. It is not exactly pertinent to the question, how much money shall be appropriated to buying books, lamps, &c., for the sailors? But I rejoice with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] that the gentlemen from the South and West are taking an interest in this question. That gentleman has lugged in the tariff. I beg to invite his attention to the fact that protective America is underselling England in Manchester and Sheffield in iron, steel, and other metal goods. I beg to invite his attention to the fact that protected cottons of Wamsutta are being exposed in the windows of the leading dry-goods stores of England. I beg to invite his attention to the fact that nothing but a prohibition ordained in 1793 against our cottons, and which has never been revoked or modified, prevents us from sending our protected cotton goods into France for embellishment by French skill, genius, and taste. Protection has in this case done, as it has ever done, developed home comtection has in this case done, as it has ever done, developed home competition, cheapened production, and reduced the cost of manufactured oods to consumers

That is a little apart from the Navy, but I did not, I wish you to remember, throw the first stone on that question. I reiterate that the navy of the future is to be one that can protect or destroy commerce, one that can run readily into port, one that can cross the great lines of travel with rapidity, and that the great iron ships of England are supplanting her wooden bulwarks, so often sung by Dibdin and other poets of England.

Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on Mr. Kelley's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows: For wages of one instrument-maker, one messenger, three watchmen, and one porter; for keeping grounds in order and repairs to buildings; for fuel, light, and office furniture, and for stationery, purchase of books for library, chemicals for batteries, and freight, and all other contingent expenses, $10,000.

Mr. SEELYE. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after the last line of the paragraph just read, the following:
For the reduction of the late observations upon the transit of Venus, $5,000.
Four years ago the governments of Russia, Germany, France, Great Britain, and the United States fitted out costly expeditions to observe the transit of Venus, our own Government sending out eight separate corps of observers, five to the southern hemisphere and three to the northern hemisphere, who made very successful observations at an expense of $175,000 incurred by the Government at the time. This expense and these observations are of course useless until the observations shall be reduced. Though the observations are done in a few seconds the reduction of the observations is an exceedingly arduous and protracted duty. The reduction of the observations takes myriads of figures, and no government has yet succeeded in completing this reduction, our own Government being as far in advance and this reduction, our own Government being as far in advance and probably further advanced than any other. It will require the labor of three competent men for a year, possibly a year and a half, to complete these reductions. My amendment allows $1,500 each for the payment of three assistants, and $500 for stationery and an instrument for reading the photographical observations and for shelves and cases to preserve the calculations, and it is a very moderate sum.

It is obvious to us all that after we expended so much money for observations beautofore it would be a realess avenditure if the obobservations heretofore it would be a useless expenditure if the observations are not reduced. It is not only an important but an in-dispensable work. I hope there will be no objection to my amend-

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, we think there is no necessity for Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, we think there is no necessity for this appropriation. The sum appropriated was certainly ample to accomplish all that was originally designed with regard to the transit of Venus. I think the gentleman puts the sum at a very low figure when he puts it at $175,000. With all the elements of expenditure considered I think this computation will not cost less than a quarter of a million, and I think that having gone to the expense we have, this reduction of the expense for the purpose of making the material available is useless, for it is not very important to us at this time and it will require a large number of nen, and I think it would time and it will require a large number of men, and I think it would be well, instead of employing, as the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests, experts, we take from the service graduates of our naval schools, and certainly there ought to be one or two among this number who are capable of making this computation. These men cost the Government a large expenditure of money and should be re-employed for this work. There is no necessity for expending large sums of money to secure the services of competent men for the performance of such service when we can utilize our officers. The gentleman from Massachusetts thinks very poorly of the graduates of the academy at Annapolis if he thinks those young men not competent to perform this duty. I therefore move to amend his amendment by substi-Annapolis It he thinks the state of the Navy shall detail the necessary number of officers from the Navy, not otherwise employed, to perform the service for the reduction of the observations of the transit of Venus. I will say in addition that this is a service which is in perfect harmony it the service of these gentlemen.

with the service of these gentlemen.

Mr. SEELYE. The suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] is simply preposterous, and so preposterous that it seems idle to discuss it. If these reductions are to be made of any value they will have to be made by the most skillful and competent men, as the slightest mistake will vitiate the whole result that this country has reached as compared with the results of other countries and try has reached as compared with the results of other countries, and for one I am not willing to have it intrusted to incompetent hands. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] might be detailed to a very different position from the one he now occupies and that he would fill it very efficiently; but I might say without disparagement to him that he would not be so valuable as his objections to some of the necessary expenditures of the Govern-his objections to some of the necessary expenditures of the Government make him here.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from Indiana could be as successful in reducing a calculation as he is in reducing expenses he would be just the man for this service. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEELYE. Exactly. [Continued laughter.] The necessity for the appropriation of this sum must certainly be apparent to every member of the committee. It will need this much; the work caunot be done by less than three accomplished accountants working hard every day for a year and possibly for a year and a half. That not be done by less than three accomplished accountants working hard every day for a year and possibly for a year and a half. That will be requisite. It is confidently expected that the reductions of these calculations will show the results of these observations to be worth as much as at the outset the most sanguine expected. Indeed it is confidently expected that the reduction of the solar parallax will be within less than 0".02 and perhaps within 0".01. This will make the calculation of the distance of the sun from the earth within a hundred thousand miles. When we recognize the fact that this distance of the sun from the earth is the line upon which all our celestial distances and magnitudes are measured, the importance of the calculation must be apparent to every one.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. CLYMER. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gen-

Mr. SEELYE. I thank the gentleman. The necessity of having this work done at once is clear from the desirableness of having it done at all. And the impossibility of having it done for a less figure than I have named must be apparent to every one; that is, $1,500 each for three assistants and $500 for the necessary contingencies.

That, I am sure, is a very moderate sum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word. My proposition was that the Secretary of the Navy should be directed to detail the proper number of officers of the Navy not otherwise employed for the reduction of the observations made upon the transit of Venus. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Seelye,] with that positiveness that is admirable and which grows out of—

Mr. SEELYE. Clear convictions.

Mr. HOLMAN. A positive knowledge of the subject, and is always good feature to behold, speaks of the absolute absurdity of my proposition. He says that three skilled gentlemen, perfectly competent in figures—I believe that is all there is about it—are to make this reduction of the calculations made by our officers. Now the gentleman certainly pays a very high compliment to some other institution of learning in this country which can produce such talent, but he pays a very poor compliment to our national institutions of learning which we have all felt a great deal of pride in, which were established a great many years ago, and where the officers of our Navy are educated. We have believed that their education, certainly in the high fields of mathematics, was equal to the education to be obtained in any other university in this or in any other country. Yet we are told that out of four or five hundred unemployed scholarly gentlemen of our Navy, educated at the public expense, there cannot be found three or four to perform this duty.

The gentleman from Massachusetts certainly astonishes me. He proposes to employ three gentlemen with handsome salaries for this purpose. I am led, in this everlasting attempt to increase the number of employés in this Government, to quote words that I heard fall the other evening from rollicking lips: What is this Government for if it cannot give employment? Now, if we have four hundred unemployed scholars educated at the expense of the Government, with every facility and opportunity for education that this nation can furnish, and we still must increase the number whenever the most trivial comportunity is presented, what can we expect to be the result? It is opportunity is presented, what can we expect to be the result? It is the bane, the evil genius of this Government of ours, this everlasting seizing upon every opportunity that presents itself to increase the number of our employés.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I am not willing to consume much time over a question like this, I will withdraw my proposition as soon as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] has been heard.

Mr. SEELYE. If the gentleman withdraws his amendment I do not care about speaking further.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall vote against the gentleman's proposition, however.

Mr. CLYMER. For the information of the committee I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Seelye] if he doubts the capacity of the officers of the Navy in charge of the national observatory to make those computations?

Mr. KELLEY. Before the gentleman answers that question, allow me to ask him whether the fitness for this duty is not the result of me to ask him whether the throos of this day, it is special experience obtained by special application?

Mr. SEELYE. I was going to make the remark that no person could make these calculations who has not made the subject a special application. cialty. These calculations are not made a specialty at the Naval Academy at Annapolis or at the Military Academy at West Point. They are not made a specialty except by a very select class of students in any of our institutions. It is simply preposterous to say anything upon such a proposition, and I cannot consent to take up the time of the committee with arguing a question of that sort. It simply amounts to this: we have expended this large sum, $175,000; and it is thrown away unless we make the reductions which shall render the expenditure available. We are now called upon to make this further appropriation of $5,000 to complete the work. That is the whole case. The committee are able to judge it properly, I am

Mr. CLYMER. Does the gentleman know whether these reduc-

Mr. CLYMER. Does the gentleman know whether these reductions are now being made by the other governments of the world which joined with us in the expedition?

Mr. SEELYE. They undoubtedly are. Those other governments expended probably as large a sum, taking it all together, as ourselves. Their expeditions were very costly. It is understood that our observers (being favored with clearer weather and some of their instruments being especially excessful) and some advantages which our observers (being favored with clearer weather and some of their instruments being especially successful) had some advantages which are likely to make the results of our observations superior to those of some of the other governments. But all of the governments are of course engaged in reducing these observations, for there was no object in making them except to get the actual reduction.

Mr. CLYMER. For the sake of information on this subject I desire to ask the gentleman a question, because I know he is thoroughly informed upon this matter, which is of interest not only to us as individuals but to our constituents and the world generally. I would like him to state what is the real practical value of the observations. I know the object is to ascertain a distance which has always been in doubt; but what practical results are to flow from the exact ascermiles. So it is confidently expected.

Mr. CLYMER. That I understand.

Mr. SEELYE. This distance of the earth from the sun is the line which we take as the basis of all calculations in astronomy for all celestial distances and magnitudes. The relation of these calculations to navigation and everything else dependent upon the knowledge of the heavenly bodies is very apparent. All our calculations in astronomy and navigation will be influenced and corrected by these observaMr. BLOUNT. I desire to say that at this naval observatory quite a number of computers are already employed. The only reason why this appropriation is asked is because there is a competition between this observatory and others as to which will have these computations That I think is a matter of no practical importance. first made.

We are already paying computers. I hope this additional appropriation will not be allowed.

Mr. SEELYE. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will assuredly not misapprehend me. Our only object in the computation in which all these governments are engaged is to have as large a variety of ob-all these governments are engaged is to have as large a variety of observatories as possible, to bring to bear upon the question as many calculations as may be and thus by comparison of them all to reach a result by the accuracy of which all nations may profit.

Mr. BLOUNT. What I said had no reference to the remarks of the gentleman himself, but to the officer who is seeking the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish the gentleman from Massachusetts would state to the House how many computers are now employed at the Natural Control of the second val Observatory, and without increasing the force what length of time will be employed in making these computations? Mr SEELYE. So far as I understand all the employés at the Naval Observatory are engaged upon work which takes their whole time.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many are employed there?

Mr. SEELYE. Exactly the number, I suppose, that we have made provision for in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman say that the men engaged there as computers are not competent to do this work?

Mr. SEELYE. Undoubtedly they are; yet if they do this work they cannot do the other work. This in a very simple question, it seems to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are not some of these the same persons who made the observations? Are they not still in the employ of the Government?

Mr. SEELYE. They are not. Many of these persons who made the observations volunteered from our different educational and scientific institutions, and are not in the employ of the Government. The Government simply bore their expenses while making the observations.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SEELYE, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING.

For equipment of vessels: For coal for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation; storage, labor, hemp, wire, and other materials for the manufacture of rope; hides, cordage, canvas, leather; iron for manufacture of cables, anchors, and galleys; condensing and boat-detaching apparatus; cables, anchors, furniture, hose, bake-ovens, and cooking-stoves; life-rafts for monitors; heating-apparatus for receiving-ships; and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels, and manufacture of articles in the several navy-yards, $700,000.

Mr. DANFORD. I move to amend by striking out "$700,000" and inserting "$1,000,000." I desire to inquire what the estimate of the head of the bureau was for this item.

Mr. BLOUNT. One million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. DANFORD. I shall not detain the committee by any extended remarks; but it does seem to me that we ought not to give this bureau less for this item than the sum I have named in the amendment. If we deny to this bureau at the very lowest the sum of a million of money we are not providing a sufficient amount for its proper conduct for the next fiscal year. Cutting the estimates down from $1,250,000 to $700,ooo is certainly making a serious reduction in the appropriation absolutely necessary to the maintenance of a bureau so important to the Navy. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Charman, the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, as the gentleman from Ohio has just stated, is an important one, but I think the reduction proposed is within reasonable limits. Although the bureau estimates $1,250,000, it was not pretended they could not get along with what has been given them in this appropriation. The head of the bureau so states, and there has been no complaint it is too little.

I desire to call the attention of the committee, and especially of the gentleman from Ohio, to certain facts in relation to this bureau. The principal items of expense are coal and hemp, as the gentleman well knows. In the report for 1869 and 1870 of the present Secretary of the Navy, in urging upon Congress the necessity for full rigging for all our vessels, he stated by so doing there would be a saving of $2,000,000 in the item of coal alone. This of course was an extravagant statement, as there never had beeen that amount of coal used in the Navy, but the fact that our vessels were full-rigged was a justification for reduction in the matter of coal. In 1868 and 1869 we purchased only 40,000 tons of coal, and we never did, until the last fiscal year, in the whole history of the Navy, except perhaps during the war, reach 59,000 tons of coal. During the last year it ran up to 60,000

It is a matter of fact that notwithstanding the full-rigging of our ressels they have been using more coal ever since than they had been using in any prior year. It is said by naval officers the only way of restraining naval officers in regard to the use of coal is by cutting off the supply and compelling them to resort to sails.

This appropriation allows the usual amount for hemp, and will furnish quite an ample supply in the way of coal, so that I think we are safe. All that will grow out of it will be to compel the use of sails instead of steam-power. I have been informed by several officers that it was a great abuse and should be stopped.

Mr. Danford's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Cierk read as 10110Ws:

For contingent expenses of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, namely:
For expenses of recruiting and fitting up receiving ships, freight and transportation of stores, transportation of collisted men, printing, advertising, telegraphing, books and models, stationery, express charges, internal alterations, fluxures, and appliances in equipment, buildings at navy-yards, foreign postage, car-tickets, ferriage, and ice, apprehension of d-serters, assistance to vessels in distress, continuous-service certificates and good-conduct badges for enlisted men, including purchase of school-books for training-ships, $40,000.

Mr. DANFORD. I move to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty," so it will read $60,000; and I wish to say in this connection that from this contingent fund the bureau is compelled to transport our seamen from foreign stations when their time has expired. For instance, the time of a crew expires at the Asiatic, European, or any of our foreign stations, and it is this contingent fund, now proposed to be reduced to $40,000, which furnishes the means of their transportation home. to $40,000, which furnishes the means of their transportation home. It has been found cheaper to transport the crews of vessels from the Asiatic and other stations by merchant and passenger vessels rathar than to coal a vessel and bring her home with a crew, and then send her back again. This contingent fund is drawn upon for the purpose of taking out and bringing home the crews of vessels on foreign stations. I submit to the committee it is a small figure to fix it at $60,000 when drawn upon for such uses as I have stated. The chief of this bureau, according to my recollection, asked for $70,000.

Mr. BI OUNT. I signify design to say to the gentleman that there has

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply desire to say to the gentleman that there has not been half this sum used within the last six months. The amount was reduced much lower, but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] thought it was entirely too low, and we came to the conclusion to grant this amount of $40,000.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the amendment will prevail, and my reason for it is this: During the last year I have made several applications to the Navy Department for transportation for sailors from the Pacific coast, where they had been employed for years, to their homes, and in every instance I have been notified there was no fund out of which it could be done.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me say that during this fiscal year $75,000 was appropriated for this contingent fund, and only $19,000 have been used. This information I had from the chief of the bureau himself.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

For general maintenance of yards and docks, namely: For freight and transportation of materials and stores; printing, stationery, and advertising, including the commandants' office; books, models, maps, and drawing; purchase and repair of fire-engines, machinery, and patent-rights to use the same; repairs on steam engines, and attendance on the same; purchase and maintenance of oxen and horses, and driving teams, carts, and timber-wheels for use in the navy-yards, and tools and repairs of the same; postage and telegrams; furniture for Government houses and offices in the navy-yards; coal and other fuel; candles, oil, and gas; cleaning and clearing up yards, and care of public buildings; attendance on fires; lights; fire-engines and apparatus; incidental labor at navy-yards; water-tax, and for toll and ferriages; pay of the watchmen in the navy-yards; and for awnings and packing-boxes, $440,000.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I offer the following amendment:

After "$440.000," insert the following: "For construction and completion of dry dock at Mare Island, $200,000."

I wish to know what the estimate is for the completion of the dry-dock at Mare Island.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not think there was any estimate at all for

Mr. LUTTRELL. We have expended a large amount of money in the construction of this dry-dock, and it would require a large sum to complete it. Unless an appropriation is made, the large sum we have appropriated will be lost to the Government. Undoubtedly that would be the case and I wish to ascertain how much was recommended by the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nothing at all for this bill. It does not come under this bill.

Mr. LUTTRELL. All right. I only desired to get the informa-

The question being taken upon Mr. LUTTRELL's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

For preservation of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; preservation of materials; purchase of tools; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat, and for general care and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses, namely, advertising and foreign postages, $1,500,000.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend by adding the proviso which I send to the desk, to come in after the words "$1,500,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no proposal for materials to be furnished under this or any section of this act shall discriminate against or in favor of the productions of any State or section of the Union.

Mr. KELLEY. I submit that proviso, Mr. Chairman, because I am informed and believe that in California there is an inspector by the name of Hillman and a chief inspector by the name of Beamis, and that in advertising for iron for the yard for this bureau they issue proposals to the whole world for the purchase of Hillman's Tennessee

Mr. WHITTHORNE. That is the best iron in the world. [Laugh-

Mr. KELLEY. That may be. Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to that amendment on the part of the committee.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman will not discriminate against Tennessee iron.

The question being taken upon Mr. Kelley's amendment, it was

Mr. BANKS. I move further to amend the paragraph by striking out "$1,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,000,000."
Mr. HALE. Say $2,500,000.

Mr. HALE. Say $2,500,000.

Mr. CLYMER. Why not say $3,000,000?

Mr. BANKS. The enumeration of the purposes for which this appropriation that is recommended by the committee is intended will show very clearly of itself that if anything is to be done in that regard the amount reported is not sufficient:

For preservation of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; preservation of materials; purchase of tools; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat, and for general care and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses, namely, advertising and foreign postages, $1,500,000.

Last year, as I understand, the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whitthorne,] in his remarks this afternoon, so stated the amount appropriated for this purpose was $1,750,000. Now, sir, it is known to appropriated for this purpose was $1,70,000. Now, sir, it is known to everybody, of course, that even with that appropriation no work has been done and no work can be done. A little has been done at New York and in some other navy-yards; but as a general thing the work has been suspended. Nothing has been done in the way of repair; not very much in protecting the property—the vessels, the steamers, and sailing-vessels that we have. And I think the committee ought to be willing to increase the appropriation at least to the amount that we appropriated last year. I think it ought to be more, and I have ventured to propose the amendment that it be made $2,000,000. ventured to propose the amendment that it be made $2,000,000.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to. Mr. BANKS. I now move to amend by making the amount the same as last year, $1,750,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I offer the following amendment, to come in after "$1,500,000" and before the proviso adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley:]

Add the following: "of which $500,000 may, in the discretion of the President, be used during the present fiscal year."

I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that there would be no objection to this amendment. I cannot see that there can be any objection to its being left to the discretion of the President to use it or not. Unfortunately for the service the fiscal year of this Government divides the working year midway. That is so in regard to very many of the appropriations, and the work done under them. It is so especially in regard to the repairs and buildings in the navy-yards.

I understand from inquiry that it is very essential that work commenced under what is left of the present year's appropriation should have this amount added to it that work may be commenced this spring. The appropriation will be no more for the two years but may be used much more economically by the Government, as I am informed and believe. I cannot think that there can be any objection to leaving it to the discretion of the proper officer, the President of the United States, to use a portion of this during the season of work. If there be I should like to hear gentlemen explain it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say one word in reference to this appropriation. It is made up largely of labor and material. It is a notorious fact that we have a large amount of material on hand for many years to come; and even now the question is raised as to a change in the kind of vessels we are to have in the Navy, so that I think the appropriation is ample.

Mr. CONGER. I do not ask an increase of the appropriation.
Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has asked an appropriation of $500,000 to be taken from the coming fiscal year to be added to the appropriation for this year. The proposition is wrong. There is always, as gentlemen will find, a pressing fiscal year to be added to the appropriation for this year. The proposition is wrong. There is always, as gentlemen will find, a pressing reason from the Departments for matters in their own favor, and we will soon, perhaps, have a change of administration and a new Secretary at the head of the Department, who will repudiate all the ideas of the present incumbent, no matter what his political opinions may be. I think we have appropriated enough money under the circumstances and I see no reason why we should add millions of dollars to an appropriation of this sort on the statements of gentlemen upon the other side.

Mr. CLYMER. I wish to say in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that it should not be adopted by the committee. Last year we appropriated large sums for construction and repairs, at the urgent request of members on the other side of the House, which were expended; yet in defiance of the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, and without authority of law, certain parties, shipbuilders and others, went on with the construction of vessels and making repairs. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would place $500,000 in the hands of the President, to be appropriated in reality for the payment of work heretofore done by those parties in defiance of orders and of law. I believe, sir, that the law-making power has a right to determine whether we want new constructions and repairs in the Navy or not. We do not propose to put it into the power of contractors to determine in defiance of orders and law what shall be the policy of the Government in these regards. If we adopt the amendment, it will be paid to those who have defied the law, and in effect will be a deficiency to that amount for this year, caused by the obstinacy and pertinacity of those who have contracts. I do not propose to offer a premium for conduct of this kind; on the contrary, I would teach them a lesson of obedience to law, and therefore I hope the committee will reject the amendment.

Mr. HALE. How are these contractors ever going to get paid?

Mr. CLYMER. They have acted without regular orders.

Mr. HALE. But when does the gentleman from Pennsylvania propose to pay them? Unless something is done they can never be paid.

Mr. CLYMER. I propose to answer that question when it arises on the claim of these gentlemen.

Mr. HALE. Where will the money be found to pay them for the work actually done?

Mr. CLYMER. We propose to teach them a lesson—a lesson that the contractors of the Government cannot control its affairs.

Mr. HALE. These contractors are now out of money and are in need of what is due them.

need of what is due them.

Mr. CLYMER. Well, we will teach them this lesson and hereafter they will not transgress the law.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word. The object which I had in view was not to pay any old contractors. I know nothing about them. I do know, however, that one of our ships on a foreign squadron on the shores of China and Japan was found to be so unseaworthy that its officers and men dared not make the voyage home in it. They communicated with the Department and the Department sent an inspector who devoted some time to a careful examination and reported to the Department that although the vessel would not be seaworthy as a cruiser, yet he thought that it could be would not be seaworthy as a cruiser, yet he thought that it could be brought home. That vessel is now on its way home from its place in the squadron. It is perhaps the only vessel of that fleet that is not fit to be used in those seas. There is an absolute necessity for the appropriation set forth in my amendment. It makes no difference in our appropriation for the Navy whether it be by law or under the authority of law. I desire to say that any amount of money appropriated will only take affect on the lat of July very and the share to be performed at a certain season of the year, the summer season. The work has to be performed at that season of the year, and there is no possible reason why you should attempt in this case to divide the year when you do not do it in other cases. You appropriate millions for these works and allow them to be distributed between two fiscal years. Why not do it in this case? Gentlemen say that this appropriation is made without law, and these appropriations have been used prior to this time without law. It may be so; and if it be so I would give the sanction of law to the necessary use of these appropriations, and thus prevent the illegal use of them. Unless some gentleman here will say that these appropriations cannot be more economically expended by commencing the work for which the appropriation is made in April or in May, why should we not leave it to the President of the United States to order the use of so much of this appropriation as may be necessary before the 1st day of July?

The gentleman says there is to be a change of administration.

Very well; neither he nor I know into whose hands this money will go, nor what President would have the discretionary use of it. he or I certainly can trust whoever is President of the United States to order this money to be expended as may be best. There is no possi-bility of this bill passing so that the appropriation can be used before the 4th day of March.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. Con-GER; and upon a division there were—ayes 14, noes 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The "noes" have it.
Mr. CONGER. No. Mr. Chairman, not yet. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will allow a vote on this amendment in the House I will not call for a further count.
Mr. CURRIEN I call for a further count.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for a further count. Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on a further

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his call for a

Mr. O'BRIEN. Not unless the amendment may be considered agreed to, so as to have a vote upon it in the House.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I insist upon a further count.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is manifest that there is no quorum present. Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Bright having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Mills reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4615) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House now take a recess until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it understood that we will go on with business at ten o'clock?

Mr. CLYMER. Certainly.
Mr. BLOUNT. We will go on with this bill.
The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at ten o'clock a.m., Thursday, February 15.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that the House take a recess till eleven o'clock

Mr. CLYMER. O, no. Mr. HALE. Let us go on. Mr. JOHN REILLY. I ho I hope that the motion for a recess will not prevail. I do not see why we should not go on with business. This is the regular hour of meeting.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. WHITTHORNE; and it was declared not agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Was there a quorum voting?

The SPEAKER. There was not. The Chair is of opinion that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. HALE. It does not require the presence of a quorum upon this

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Under the rules of the House the Speaker is obliged to observe the fact that a quorum is not present.

Mr. CLYMER. Then let us have a call of the House.

The question being again taken on the motion for a recess, there ere—ayes 3, noes 7.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The Speaker is obliged under the rules to observe the fact that there is not a quorum.

Mr. HALE. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that less than fifteen members cannot order a call of the House. Only ten voted upon the last vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There are at least fifteen present.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Hale for a call of the House, there were—ayes 4, noes 3.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that with so small an attendance of members the House had better take a recess. It would seem to be trifling to proceed with business under these circumstances.

Mr. HALE. There is one thing that seems unfair. Some of us come up here every morning at ten o'clock, and, as the Speaker is aware, certain committees which ought to be at work cannot have morning meetings because we do come here.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker is always here.

Mr. HALE. Of course I am making no reflection on the Speaker.

But in this way we are put in a condition in which we can do neither committee work nor business in the House. I suggest that if this is to be the course of proceeding in the morning hereafter, we should, when the recess is taken at the close of the day or evening, have an agreement that when we meet at ten o'clock in the morning there shall be a further recess until twelve o'clock, so that committees that need to do work may go on with their business. As it is now the Committee on Appropriations are very much embarrassed in getting through their work.

Mr. CLYMER. I beg to state that last night when we took a re cess until this morning it was asked whether unanimous consent would be given that a further recess without doing business should be taken from ten to eleven o'clock this morning. That request was refused; and thus notice was given to every one that we would go on with business this morning. But it appears to have resulted in nothing. Thus we are wasting morning after morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that not many members were present when that notice was given.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It ought to be stated as a matter of justice that we meet here at ten o'clock simply under and by virtue of a law, and that the great body of members have been and are now under the impression that no business is to be done before twelve o'clock. Hence they are not here; and I believe they are attending to their duties at the Departments and in other regards.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that any members of the House who are absent at this first meeting are not in the least degree reprehensible. Mr. HALE.

Mr. HALE. What shall we do then, Mr. Speaker?
Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House take a further recess till

The motion was agreed to; and at ten o'clock and six minutes a. m. a recess was taken accordingly.

At eleven o'clock a. m. the House resumed its session.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Mills in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriation. priations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the following amendment offered by Mr. CONGER:

In the paragraph relating to Bureau of Construction and Repair add after "$1,500,000" the following: "Of which $500,000 may in the discretion of the President be used during the present fiscal year."

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I trust the committee will not adopt this

Mr. CONGER. Debate was exhausted and the committee was dividing when the motion was made to rise.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I insisted upon a vote by a quorum, and I now withdraw that demand.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were-ayes 11, noes 18

The CHAIRMAN declared the amendment not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. The Chairman may have forgotten that we insisted on a quorum last night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] withdraws that demand.

Mr. CONGER. I renew it. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to consent that we shall have a vote on this amendment in the House. If that is not consented to, we must pursue the ordinary Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CONGER and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed.

no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, it will be the duty of the Chair to order the roll to be called.

Mr. DURHAM. I move that the committee now rise.
Mr. CONGER. If we can be allowed a vote in the House on this amendment I would like to go on with the bill now, and will not make any further objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair when no quorum has voted to direct that the roll be called.

Mr. CONGER. I believe it is understood that the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. BLOUNT] will allow us to have a vote on this amendment in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have a quorum.
Mr. CLYMER. I object to a vote in the House.
Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum present, and perhaps some other business might be transacted in the House. I therefore move that the committee now rise.

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw my call for a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The call for a further count having been withdrawn, the amendment is not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following: BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

For repairs and preservation of boilers and machinery on naval vessels: For fitting, repairs, and preservation of machinery and tools in the several navy-yards; for labor in navy-yards and stations not included above, and incidental expenses, and for purchase and preservation of oils, coals, metals, and all materials and stores, $800.000.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$700,000." I make that motion with a view of calling the attention of the Committee of the Whole to what I understand to be the practice now prevailing in the Navy to what I understand to be the practice now prevailing in the Navy Department. Within the last month the Navy Department has disposed of, privately and secretly, at the city of Charlestown, material belonging to the Navy Department. That has been done with a view of paying debts incurred by the different bureaus of that Department. That is a violation of existing law, and so long as the practice continues Congress ought not to provide the Department with money, or with material for the Department to thus dispose of. I wish the distinguished Representative from Massachusetts [Mr. Abbort] was present in order to state this matter with which he is perfectly familiar. tinguished Representative from Massachusetts [Mr. Abbott] was present in order to state this matter, with which he is perfectly familiar, and what he in his capacity as a Representative brought my attention to as an outrage upon the public service. So long, Mr. Chairman, as this is permitted to be done, Congress should be careful of the appropriations made to these different bureaus. Among the things so disposed of were two if not three engines costing the Government a large sum of money. They were cut up and made into old material, and as junk or old iron disposed of for the purpose of paying these debts incurred by two of the bureaus of the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have not the proceeds of the sale gone into the Treasury?

At eleven o'clock a. m. the House resumed its session.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, re Treasury?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I think the proceeds of the sale ought to have gone into the Treasury, but let me tell my friend from Indiana that they have not gone into the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. For what were those debts incurred which were paid? Mr. WHITTHORNE. If I am correctly informed, they were for repairs done on the Puritan and Miantanomoh and other vessels.

Mr. HALE. That is for work done in the Navy Department, not for ontside matters

Mr. WHITTHORNE. This mode of proceeding is in violation of

One other remark. The gentleman from Maine on yesterday—
Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman before he proceeds to other matters identify the engines, boilers, &c.?
Mr. WHITTHORNE. I do not know them by name.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I do not know them by name.
Mr. CONGER. Where were they situated?
Mr. WHITTHORNE. At the Charlestown navy-yard.
Mr. CONGER. What were they?
Mr. WHITTHORNE. Engines and boilers.
Mr. CLYMER. At the Charlestown navy-yard, Massachusetts.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir; at the Charlestown navy-yard, Massachusetts. sachusetts.

Now let me make one other remark. On yesterday the gentleman Now let me make one other remark. On yesterday the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] did me the honor to state that during the last session I sought to impeach the Secretary of the Navy but the Judiciary Committee of this House had made a report acquitting or justifying the Secretary of the Navy. I respectfully state to that gentleman I have no information that such a report has been made to the House. It has not been made, and when it is made, if I am correctly advised and informed, the gentleman from Maine will not derive as much comfort from it as he seems now to take. While I have carefully avoided in the discussion of matters in connection with this fully avoided in the discussion of matters in connection with this bill making any reference to the personal administration of the Navy Department, I trust when that report is made I shall have a full opportunity to be heard by the House; and when I do, I have to say to my friend from Maine:

And when he next doth ride abroad, May I be there to see.

[Laughter.] I now withdraw my amendment.
Mr. CONGER. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a word or two to my friend here who makes amendments to throw off, on the testimony of a single gentleman or on suppositions, his increased and increasing condemnation of the Department which he has had the control of for two years. I am so surprised—and I am not given much to surprise—indeed so much surprised at this the end of given much to surprise—indeed so much surprised at this the end of the session that my friend should so publicly and frequently confess his inefficiency during two years in bringing the Navy Department to anything like a proper system, as he has had the sole control of it, that I have hardly words to express my own view of the subject. The world knows the gentleman is the prime mover, the Cæsar of the Navy Department, and all the people of the United States have coupled him with that Department as the great regulator and reformer of it. There never is any allusion made to it but my friend fills this House with his songroup voice in condemning all its proformer of it. There never is any allusion made to it but my friend fills this House with his sonorous voice in condemning all its proceedings, or in approval of his own remedies. Has it come to this, that the gentleman is forced finally to condemn the Navy Department on the mere private statement of an individual, with no other proof, and that not very positively stated? That is one point; and has it come to this, that the gentleman admits he has no knowledge of any report of a committee justifying him in his conduct toward a gentleman whom he has followed like a sleuth-hound for the last two years? Is it for the gentleman from Tennessee alone, of all other men in this House, not to have known of the oninjons of the commitmen in this House, not to have known of the opinions of the committee investigating that distinguished Secretary of the Navy? And may I modestly and humbly inquire of the gentleman if his ignorance in this respect and his lack of study and information in regard to the action of the committee is at all a guide to his action in seeking information in regard to the Department or knowing its actual condition?

Now, I would think that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs on such a bill as this would be able to tell this House from his Affairs on such a bill as this would be able to tell this House from his own examination and his own information whether the appropriations ordered and required by law and reported by this committee are necessary; and if not, that he would long before this have brought in a bill, as was his duty, cutting off these appropriations and the occasion for them. I say it in all kindness to my friend. [Laughter.] A perfectly genial gentleman is the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs; he is like the Bengal tiger, perfectly peaceable except when irritated. I ask him why these bills making reforms in the service, which he says to-day are so much needed, have not been prepared and offered to this House that we might rush forward and vote for them and reform the abuses of which he complains? Perhaps when the next motion to amend is made the gentleman will inform the committee on some of those more serious subjects. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. the pro forma amendment.

Mr. TARBOX. I renew it.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to put upon record a piece of testimony touching the frugality of the management of the Navy Department in some of its branches. A few days subsequent to the election in 1874, the Boston Journal, the leading and most loyal organ of the republican party in New England, said this in an editorial under the caption of "The Navy-Yard Blunder:"

Yesterday several hundred men were discharged from the Charlestown navy-yard because there was no work for them to do, and if there had been, not one in twenty of those recently appointed were capable of performing it. These men were appointed for the purpose of swelling the vote of certain members of Congress. It is a trick the democratic party introduced. A republican administration ought promptly to have put its foot upon any such movement. In addition to this it was an open, bare-faced violation of the laws of Massachusetts.

The employment was gizen instead of being promised, but it was nevertheless a violation of the spirit, if not of the very letter of the law. Men were sent there who had no knowledge of any labor that they were supposed to be capable of executing. There is to be another discharge of this uscless material. As a bit of political policy it has done more harm than good. Those who became acquainted with this corruption were influenced against the party, and even the men employed, we are told, did not vote as they were expected to do. We trust it is the last time that the administrators of the Government at Washington will ever sanction any such waste of the people's money. We shall soon hear that the appropriation for the Charlestown navy-yard is expended, and then in order to make amends for this great wrong there will come orders for retrenhment. Skilled workmen who are honestly employed will be discharged, and the inevitable result must be that honest mechanics will suffer because these political Ublans wanted a few days' employment. Do not let us hear that the civil-service reform is to be attended to, while the Administration makes it possible for the public service to be thus corrupted and debauched.

I would add, Mr. Chairman, that that statement of fact is true. and I would add, Mr. Chairman, that that statement of fact is true, and the prophecy was true also. It was about this time that the chief of the Bureau of Construction informed the commandant of the Charlestown navy-yard that the Adminstration desired the election of Messrs. Gooch and Frost to Congress.

I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I renew the pro forma amendment, simply for the purpose of enabling me to say to my friend from Michigan [Mr. Conger] that I am not surprised that he should enter this debate at the present time; but I am surprised that he enters it so blindly. He usually does not enter a discussion in that way. If my friend had paid attention to the suggestion or the remarks I was making, he would have seen that I was complaining of the violation making, he would have seen that I was complaining of the violation of existing laws. If the existing laws for the government of the naval service had been observed, and its administration had been honest and faithful, no reformatory legislation would be needed. The work of reform that is demanded is a change in the administrators. I have done my duty, sir, in every tribunal where I have had the honor to appear in endeavoring to make this change in the administrators of our Government, and while I confess to-day, in view of the action of that other body that meets midway between the two Houses, I have fears that that change will not take place, yet I trust an over-ruling Providence will lead and guide to that change ruling Providence will lead and guide to that change.

Mr. FORT. Amen. [Laughter.]
Mr. CONGER. I am glad my friend from Tennessee will submit both to the commission and to Providence. It is more than I expected.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill. Mr. WHITTHORNE. I offer the following amendment:

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I offer the following amendment:

Add to the bill, as an independent section, the following:
That a commission of nine members be created, in the manner hereinafter provided, whose duty it shall be to examine and inquire into the present condition of the Navy of the United States, as to its personnel and materiel, and into the laws and usages now governing the naval service; to consider the relation of the commercial to the national marine; what active floating naval force, including the type and class of vessels, their armament and equipment, should be maintained in time of peace, and what should be kept in readiness for actual service in event of sudden war; what number and kind of vessels should be constructed annually to make up for decay, destruction, and casualty; what changes are required in naval architecture, in ordnance, in armor, and in the instruments of defensive warfare by the advance of naval science; how the Government can obtain the best designs and models of the same; and especially to consider what measures are necessary to protect and extend our rapidly growing commerce on the Pacific Ocean and in Asiatic waters; and to report to Congress, through the President, during the months of December, 1877, or January, 1878, the results of their investigation, recommending such legislation as they may deem requisite to bring the Navy up to the highest standard of effectiveness consistent with wise economy.

That the said commission shall consist of the Admiral, the General of the Army, two Senators, to be designated by the President of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, and two officers of the Navy, to be designated by the President, one of whom shall also act as the secretary of the commission.

That said commission shall have power to send for records, books, and papers, and to summon and examine witnesses; and the Secretary of the commission with all facilities within his control for the convenient prosecution of their labors.

Mr. CONGER. I gave notice that I would make a point of order on that amendment. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, not germane to the pending bill, and that it makes appropriations evidently providing for an expenditure of money for a collateral object not in the interest of economy.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If my friend had listened to the reading of the amendment he would have seen that the last section of the printed bill which he holds in his hand is omitted. There is no appropriation in the amendment as I have offered it.

printed bill which he holds in his hand is omitted. There is no appropriation in the amendment as I have offered it.

Mr. CONGER. Was the last section not read?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Michigan on the point of order which he makes.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that this is new legislation, and that it necessarily involves expenditure. The third section provides for the performance of duties which must require expenditure: and it authorizes the use of the property of the Government of the Government of the covernment of the Government penditure; and it authorizes the use of the property of the Government of the United States and authorizes its vessels to be placed at the disposal of this commission. But it is a sufficient point for my purpose that it is new legislation, and not proper on an appropriation

The CHAIRMAN. What rule does the gentleman refer to ?
Mr. CLYMER. The rule on which the point of order is made is Rule 120.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I make the further point that the amendment is not in conformity with existing law.
The CHAIRMAN. Rule 120 is as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—September 14, 1837—unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures—March 13, 1838, and January 17, 1876.

Does the gentleman from Michigan raise the point of order that the nendment changes existing law?
Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman then point to the law which this amendment would change?

Mr. CONGER. It changes the law in regard to the work of the Departments and as to the disposal of this property. It deliberately and clearly changes the law in regard to what is the duty of the Secretary of the Navy with reference to the disposal of this property, and I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and the gentleman who offered this amendment to that fact. This amendment does not retrench expenses. There is no pretense that it does. It certainly retrenches no expenses upon its face now, and is not germane to the bill.

Mr. HALE. Will the Chairman hear me a moment on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. A similar amendment offered yesterday was ruled out

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman proceeds I ask, on his account as well as my own, that that portion of the amendment now before the committee shall be reported. I understand that all that as read was not intended to be submitted as an amendment to this

Mr. HALE. O, no! the Clerk read only the amendment as pending. After striking out the appropriation it seems to me that the broad fact remains that the commission enters into new duties, duties broad fact remains that the commission enters into hew duties, duties which no commission has to-day, and that therefore it constitutes a body unknown to the law. It is within the knowledge of the Chair and within the knowledge of every member of the House that no commission can go on and perform its duties under a new law without involving the expenditure of public money. Here is a proposition to create a new commission, and certainly such an amendment is not in the line of economy under the rule adopted last winter. An amendment of this kind, unless it appears upon its face that it is in the interest of economy, is out of order.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I do not think it worth while to consume the time of the House in a discussion of the question whether this proposition should, as an amendment to the pending bill, be before the House, but the only suggestion that the House, but the only suggestion that may have any force is, whether by a change or modification of the existing law there is economy. The officers appointed under the commission are all officers economy. The office of the Government.

Would not their traveling expenses, for instance, have Mr. HALE.

to be paid?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. We do not propose to go outside of officers of the Government in the appointment of this commission.

Mr. HALE. But if you do go outside you will have to pay the travaling expenses of these officers, anyhow.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. That is possible and is a power that may be exercised by the tribunal, but the face of the law does not contemplate that, and therefore looking to the face of the proposition the Chair must decide that it is not in order, and therefore I submit that the objection of the gentleman should not be sustained.

The chiect of this amendment is to retrench expenditures in the

The object of this amendment is to retrench expenditures in the Navy Department hereafter, so as to make a saving in the expendi-tures of that Department—a great change from the experience of the last ten years—and to put it upon an economical basis and to have it so organized that the country may know what is being done in that Department. Mr. HALE. Mr. HALE. I have only one further observation to make. The point is this: Should not the mover of the amendment point to the law which requires the appointment of this commission to decide upon questions in relation to the Navy which Congress has been unable to decide?

Now the mover of the amendment should be asked to put his finger on that provision of the statutes that authorizes this amendment. We should not be asked to ransack the statutes to show what provision it subverts

The CHAIRMAN. The rule of logic is that he who asserts the affirmative of a proposition should prove it. The gentleman asserts that this amendment will change existing law, and the Chair calls upon him to show what provision of existing law this amendment

Mr. HALE. Is not the objector to an amendment the one who asserts the negative, and is not the propounder of the amendment the one who asserts the affirmative? The objector is defending the law as it is, and says that there is no law that justifies the amendment. I would be glad to have anybody show any provision of law embodied in our statutes which justifies or authorizes this new commission. If that cannot be done, then I hold it is new legislation and clearly sub-that cannot be done, then I hold it is new legislation and clearly subject to the point of order.

For instance, new matter may be new legislation and perhaps not in violation of any specific provision of the statutes. Suppose the amendment had provided that there should be a new ship built. It would be difficult to find any law that in terms forbids the building of a new ship; but the mover of the amendment would be obliged to show the law that authorizes the building of a new ship. Just as in the case of a new public building. Some one moves an amendment to a bill providing for a new public building in Galveston. The point of order is made upon the amendment that it is new legislation. The objector could not put his finger upon any provision in the statutes objector could not put his finger upon any provision in the statutes that forbids a new building being built in Galveston. But the mover of the amendment must show the statute that authorizes the building of a new building. So here, the mover of this amendment must put his finger upon the law that authorizes this new commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] direct the attention of the Chair to any rule that forbids the introduction of a bill in Congress that is not authorized by some prior act of Congress

Mr. HALE. That is not the point. It is the familiar practice under the rules that new legislation cannot be incorporated in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine, the Chair would suggest, confuses the language of the rule. The rule does not prohibit new legislation, but it says that no appropriation shall be made in an appropriation bill that is not authorized by pre-existing law. That is confined to appropriations, and, as the Chair understands the amendment as now offered, the portion which provided for an appropriation is stricken out.

Mr. HALE. Will the Chair hold that any new legislation is in order on an appropriation bill, if it does not in terms change existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. Unquestionably, if it is germane to the original proposition, and does not provide for expending money.
Mr. HALE. If it changes existing law?
The CHAIRMAN. That is another point.
Mr. HALE. A new law must change existing law.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman's argument to be that there was no law in existence authorizing the appointment of this commission. That is a very different proposition from the one that there is an existing law which this amendment proposes to change.

proposes to change.

Mr. HALE. Is it not changing the body of existing law to add a new law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants to know what provision of existing law this amendment will change; there may be no law upon the subject

Mr. HALE. That is my point; that there is no law authorizing the appointment of this commission.

The CHAIRMAN. That, however, is not the rule.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Allow me to suggest that by a provision in the last Navy appropriation bill a new commission was authorized.

Mr. HALE. Then there could have been no objection to it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. And there was also a commission authorized by the last Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. That must have been by unanimous consent or in some other way that did not bring it within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The points of order made on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] are first that the legislation proposed is not germane to the original bill now before the Committee of the Whole. The Chair thinks that point of order is not well taken. We are now legislating for the Navy, and anything that is calculated to promote efficiency or economy in the Navy is germane to this bill. The Chair would refer gentlemen to a provision contained in the first section of this bill.

For contingent expenses of the Navy Department, namely: For rent and furniture of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, boards of investigation, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs, &c.

The Chair supposes this is the language ordinarily used in these bills. It is one of the specifications set out in each appropriation bill. It is a part of the ordinary administration of the Navy Department to have boards of investigation, as it is for the War Department to have courts-martial and courts of inquiry. Hence the Chair cannot see that there is any inappropriateness to the original bill in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whittenerment.] Therefore the Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise for the purpose of moving an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled upon all the points of order that have been raised upon this amendment. The other point of order is that the amendment, to be in order, must come under Rule The Chair supposes this is the language ordinarily used in these order is that the amendment, to be in order, must come under Rule 190

Rule 120 provides that-

No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

Then comes the exception-unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The Chair cannot consider what may be the results of this amendment after it is adopted. This rule is like the rule of damages which courts construe: they cannot look to the consequential damages that may result from a transaction, but they must look to the immediate results. The Chair cannot consider whether Congress may not at some subsequent session authorize the payment of the expenses of this commission. The Chair can only look to the provisions of the amendment, which upon its face contemplates no expenditure of money whatever. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. CONGER. In order to test the sense of the House upon a very important decision, which may be taken as a precedent, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" there were—ayes 53, noes 25.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for a further count.
Mr. DAVY. It is twelve o'clock. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mills reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House take a recess till twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and a recess was accordingly taken.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 15, 1877-10 a.m.

The Senate resumed its session.
On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate took a further recess until twelve o'clock.

The Senate re-assembled at twelve o'clock.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, February 14, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the ap-propriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, and for other purpose

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4654) to remove the political disabilities of John T. Mason, of Maryland; and A bill (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, the post-office, and internalrevenue officers at Austin, Texas.

ADMIRAL CHARLES WILKES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes.

The amendments of the House were in line 3, after the word "credit," to insert the words "the late;" in line 3, after the word "Wilkes," to strike out the words "now on the retired list of the Navy;" and to amend the title by inserting after the word "of" the words "the late;" so as to make the bill read:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to credit the late Admiral Charles Wilkes with the sum of $350, being the amount paid by Paymaster Hosford to Paymaster Tolfree on account of mess-bill, and which was repaid to Paymaster Hosford but not taken up in his account.

The amendments were concurred in.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MAXEY presented an ordinance of the mayor and board of aldermen of the city of Jefferson, State of Texas, offering to convey to the United States on condition a certain dredge-boat belonging to said city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present the memorial of Isaac Taylor & Co., of Boston, Massachusetts, praying Congress for aid to wrest the com-Hoston, Massachusetts, praying Congress for aid to wrest the commerce between this country and South Africa from the control of the British government. These petitioners, who have been engaged in that trade for the last thirty years, call attention in their memorial to some very striking statistics which show the wonderful growth of population and of all character of business in South Africa, and the great increase of commerce consequent thereon. They also show that it is a market wonderfully attractive to all of the industries and productions of this country, and they call attention to the fact that the policy of the English government has been such as to take entirely from us all the benefits, both commercial and internal, of that trade and of that market. They therefore pray that Congress may refer their memorial to the Committee on Commerce, and invoke its careful consideration of this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, and as the matters referred to in these resolutions are brief and concern the commercial interests of my State, I ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read if there

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Milwaukee, February 7, 1877.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Milwoukee, February 7, 1877.

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwoukee, held this day, the following preamble and resolutions, offered and supported by William P. McLaren, esq., were unanimously adopted under a suspension of the rules:
Whereas the experience of the last several years has served to deepen the conviction in the minds of the business men of this country that important concessions might be made by both the United States and the Dominion of Canada which would serve to materially increase the trade between them and relieve it from many vexations restrictions to which it is now subjected;
And whereas the treaty of 1854 between Great Britain and the United States was abrogated by a notice from the United States in 1865, it would be courteous and desirable that the first steps toward negotiating a new treaty should be taken by the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That this chamber of commerce most heartily approves and urges upon Congress the early adoption of the following joint resolution, which was introduced into the House of Representatives on December 15, 1875, to wit:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint three commissioners, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer with other commissioners duly authorized by the government of Great Britain, or whenever it shall appear to be the wish of that government of appoint such commissioners, to investigate and ascertain on what basis a treaty of reciprocal trade for the mutual benefit of the people of the United States and the Dominion of Canada can be negotiated.

Very respectfully,

N. VANKIRK,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MERRIMON presented the petition of James Taylor, Robert Tramper, and others, commissioners of the eastern band of Cherokee Indians of North Carolina, praying the repeal of the law authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to receive land in payment of judgments to the eastern ban l of Cherokee Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of Rev. C. A. Rittenhouse, of Payment in praying for a pension; which was referred to the of Pennsylvania, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KERNAN presented the memorial of Ward L. E. Gurley and others, of Troy, New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of John A. Lynch, of Washington, District of Columbia, accompanied by a bill, proposing a survey of the Territory of Alaska. Somebody has suggested that this petition and bill should go to the Committee on Commerce. seems to me it belongs more appropriately to the Committee on Territories. If that be the opinion of the Chair, I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Territories if there be no objection.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition of citizens of New York, numerously signed, praying an amendment of the pension laws so as to allow arrears of pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WADLEIGH presented the petition of Mrs. Ellen Truesdale, of

New Hampshire, praying for a pension on account of the death of her husband, Samuel Truesdale, late of the Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania which was referred to the Committee on Pensions. Volunteers:

Mr. COCKRELL presented additional papers in the case of Mrs. Blair, widow of the late General F. P. Blair, praying to be allowed a pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

LANDS OF BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD.

Mr. CRAGIN. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 7) to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New York, to the city of Brooklyn, to report it without amendment with the recommendation that it pass. I submit a written report from the committee to accompany the bill, and if there is no objection I ask that the bill may be considered at the present

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CRAGIN. I ask the Clerk to read the report in writing which is submitted with the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CRA-

GIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

GIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred House bill No. 7, having considered the same, submit the following report: That, after considering the provisions of said bill and the various petitions accompanying the same, together with a memorial from the mayor, aldermen, commonalty, and other officers of the city of Brooklyn, representing the different departments of that minicipal government and all political parties, have decided to recommend its passage on the conditions hereinafter stated. The bill provides for the appointment of three commissioners by the President, to take into consideration the terms and conditions on which certain property shall be sold to the city of Brooklyn or exchanged for certain other property, and to report their conclusions to the Secretary of the Navy, and by him to be submitted to Congress at the beginning of the next session. Before such sale or exchange can take place, the recommendation of the commissioners must be ratified by Congress, and the question as to the propriety of disposing of any part of the premises can then be considered in connection with their report.

The tract of land consists of about twenty-seven acres, and is distinctly defined as to boundaries in the bill. It is low, marshy ground, and, it is claimed, breeds pestilence and disease in the most densely populated part of the city.

The committee express no opinion as to the sale of this land, and unless the amount to be realized is its full value, and can be appropriated to the improvement of the remaining part of the yard, it would not be considered for the best interests of the naval branch of the service to part with it.

The cob-dock, so called, is an important part of the Brooklyn yard and is in great need of repairs. It is an artificial island in Wallabout Bay, and contains about thirty-five acres, twelve of which in the center are already partially dredged and well calculated for a wet basin. It is entirely surrounded by navigable waters and on the East River front has twenty-one feet of water at low tide. Ships can be moored on the East River front out of the tide and free from the risk of ice, and out of the way of the navigation of the river. On the Wallabout channel there is also a large water front entirely out of the tide. This front will need dredging to any required depth. The present piers, wharfs, &c., around this island are in a rotten condition, entirely unit for use and discreditable to the Government. With the money expended upon it which would arise from the proposed sale to the city of Brooklyn, if Congress should hereafter authorize the same, it could be made the most valuable part of the navy-yard, having large water front and wet basin capable of containing at one time from twelve to twenty ships in a perfectly secure position.

The importance of improving the cob-dock is so great that the committee are willing to recommend the sale of land mentioned in this bill, provided the purchasemoney can be wholly applied to said improvement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 989) for the relief of John G. Tod, of Texas, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 891) for the relief of Robert Small, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 228) to authorize the payment of prize-money to the captors of the steamboat New Era No. 5 and cargo, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Carpenter, pay inspector United States Navy, pray-ing to be allowed a credit in the settlement of his accounts for certain moneys alleged to have been embezzled from him by his clerks, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition. The petitioner desires an order that he may be allowed to withdraw the papers, and I suggest that such order be entered on leaving copies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Anthony in the chair.) If there be no objection, that order will be made. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. CRAGIN. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1229) for the relief of Donald McKay, the bill (S. No. 645) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles W. Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 723) for the relief of Nannie Hall, instruct me to report it back and recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill. I desire to say that this bill was recommitted in December last, bill. I desire to say that this bill was recommitted in December last, after it had received a very careful and thorough consideration by the committee. It has again received that consideration, having been pressed upon our attention by counsel, and we have been led to consider additional evidence. With every disposition to grant the relief prayed for in this case, we do not see how we can do so under the rules which we have established and under the law. I understand the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE,] who is not now in his place, desired that if the bill should be reported with a recommendation for indefinite nost propagate it should go to the Calendar. ### SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I submit the following resolution, under the direction of the members of the silver commission, as it is called, and ask its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the monetary commission created by the joint resolution of August 15, 1876, be allowed until the 24th of February, 1877, to submit their report.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to extending the time; but I wish to give notice now that I shall call up the bill remonetizing the silver dollar and recoining it, now on the table of the Senate, at the first opportunity. I hope the postponement of this report will not interfere with the consideration of that bill.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HAMLIN. I submit the following resolution, and ask the action of the Senate on it the present time:

Resolved. That the electoral commission have leave to occupy the Senate Chamber for its sittings in the evening after the Senate shall have taken a recess for the day.

I wish to say, what is probably known to all Senators, that there are no gas-fittings in the room which the electoral commission now occupy, and they are obliged when they do hold evening sessions to resort to candles and lamps, and they become an affliction in the room. I have offered the resolution at the request of one member of the commission. I hope it will be adopted.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOGY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF MEXICAN AWARDS.

Mr. CONKLING. Yesterday morning the Senate considered awhile the bill (H. R. No. 4629) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America made under the convention between the United States of America and the republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868. A Senator not now here remarked that he had a telegram from a constituent making an objection to the bill. I am told by another Senator who is present that there is no wish to insist upon that objection. My information is since that the allegation referred to rests upon evidence which was submitted to the umpire of the commission upon a motion for a rehearing of the claims which the allegation touched; and it has been considered. Although very reluctantly disposed to pass over even an allegation of fraud, I think it is true that at this stage of the proceeding the Senate could hardly even with time undertake to investigate again a question of that sort, which seems to have been passed upon. I am informed there will be no further objection. The bill was read at length yesterday, and is on the table; it is a House bill; and if it be the pleasure of the Senate I ask that it may be taken up for action now.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall have to interpose an objection. I have received information from a gentleman of high character in the South, who tells me that he has proof in a bank here of the absolute fraud of this case, and he does not think it has ever been considered. I do not know anything about the matter; but when a gentleman, comnot know anything about the matter; but when a gentleman, commended for his respectability and character, comes and tells me he has in a bank of this city absolute proof that this is a fraud and that the testimony by which the award was supported is subornation of perjury, I am obliged to believe it. This gentleman told me that not twenty minutes ago; and I think we ought at least wait long enough to see whether this claim is fraudulent or not. I wish to premise that I know nothing about the gentleman who told me except that he was introduced to me as a gentleman from Mobile of high character; and I believe him to be a man of unimpeachable veracity. He tells me that he knows of his positive knowledge that this award

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the fraud? I ask the Senator to specify. There are some two or three hundred awards made by the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will tell the Senator what it is. This gentleman says that the testimony by which a claim of $400,000 was allowed is false; that it has no existence and is a fraud in law and in fact. I hope the Senator is answered.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky what day in his judgment would enable him and the Senate to receive adequate information to act upon the bill?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have nothing to do with it except to call to the attention of the Senate the statement of a responsible gentleman that the Government is going to be defrauded. If the Senate choose to pass the bill after this statement, I have not a word to say.

discharged my duty.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask my friend to hear me a minute. He entirely misunderstands the spirit of my inquiry. I will say to him that after hearing such an allegation made and made by him, I am not going to press the passage of this bill. Indeed I will go further and say to the Senator that I think he is quite justified in the remarks he has made, although my impression is it will turn out that there is an answer to what has been said. That does not signify. I agree with the Senator that whenever the Senate has information, apparent, reasonable, that an allegation of fraud is made which affects an act of legislation, the Senate should pause and should know as well as it can know that that allegation is groundless, before it Therefore I am not going to press the passage of this bill; but I ask the Senator from Kentucky, who seems to have had personal conference with the gentleman to whom he refers, to indicate if he can how much postponement he thinks would be desirable.

Mr. STEVENSON. As I came into the Senate this morning a Senator in this body asked permission to introduce me to one of his constituents from Mobile who he stated was a gentleman of character and credit. I yielded to that request, and he introduced me to him. This gentleman then said that he desired to see me a moment. All of this took place between that and the other door. He said yesterday a bill providing for the payment of the awards made by the Mexican commission had been pressed; that he had in his possession now, in a bank, proof that one of those claims amounting to some $400,00J in a bank, proof that one of those claims amounting to some $400,000 was an absolute fraud; and that he had proof so conclusive of the fact that no human man could doubt it on looking at the testimony, which he could produce. I think he said the testimony was perhaps in one of the banks of this city. I said I knew nothing about the bill, but if he desired I would make the statement public to the Senate as he detailed it to me. He intimated to me that the fraud could be shown either to-day or to-morrow, and that the proofs were ample. I have discharged that duty. I know nothing more about the case. I felt it my duty to make the statement and I have discharged that duty to the best of my ability.

charged that duty to the best of my ability.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope the Senator from New York will withdraw his application for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I have already virtually done that.
Mr. WITHERS. I beg the Senator's pardon.
Mr. CONKLING. And now I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky, to be good enough to inform the person he has referred to, and whom I have not the pleasure of knowing, that so far as I am concerned the bill may stand for a day or two, affording him ample op-portunity to give any information he wishes to give, and then I think some action should be taken. If it seems that there is reason to suppose any wrong is involved in the bill it should be recommitted to the committee for re-examination. If, on the other hand, it turns out that this is a mistake, it doubtless will be the judgment of the Senate that action should be had very soon.

Mr. STEVENSON. It would give me great pleasure to introduce this gentleman to the Senator from New York. He is now I think in the lobby, and the Senator would be able to know at once what is the observer and are divisited.

the character and credibility of the testimony which this individual claims to be sufficient to sustain the allegation.

Mr. CONKLING. I mean to be very accommodating to everybody about this matter, but if I can say it in good nature I wish to say that I do not intend to go out as a member of this body and hunt for evidence in this case. If this gentleman, as he has been described, has any evidence I propose that he shall present it to the Senate. What I know about it I have heard from the Senator from Kentucky; and therefore, although I might be glad to extend my acquaintance, I shall not go and look up anybody on this subject. I hold it to be the duty of anybody who possesses this evidence to present it to the Senate in some form

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not suppose the Senator was going to hunt up this gentleman. I should certainly not desire the Senator from New York to hunt anybody up. I shall state to this gentleman from Mobile that this bill has been postponed at least for to-day, and he can then present his evidence either to the Senator from New York or to the Senate, if you please, and his credibility can be tested. I know nothing about the character of the testimony or the claim. I only desire to warn the Senator not to proceed hastily until this gentleman may have an opportunity to verify his statement as to the invalidity and fraudulent character of this claim.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the pending bill be first laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was in section 1, line 5, to strike out, after the word "levied," the words "upon all lands outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown held and used solely for agricultural purposes a tax of $1 on each $100 of the assessed value thereof;" so as to read:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, there shall be levied upon all other real and personal property in said District, excepting only the real and personal property of the United States and that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value thereof.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to ask the Senator having charge of the bill a question as to the rate of taxation. Is it intended that the property outside of the city limits is to be taxed the same as that inside city limits?

Mr. SPENCER. The rate of taxation upon property outside of the city limits is to be the same as upon property inside the city limits, upon the valuation.

Mr. DAVIS. Then do I understand the Senator that agricultural and other lands in the District, the owners of which receive hardly any benefit from the improvements in the city, are to be taxed the any benefit from the improvements in the city, are to be taxed the same as property within the city limits?

Mr. SPENCER. Upon their valuation, the same. I will state to the Senator from West Virginia that that is the case now, and it has been the case for several years. This same question was discussed in the two Houses last year, the year and nays called upon it, and the Senate voted by a large majority to tax the lands outside of the city limits the same as the lands inside.

Imits the same as the lands inside.

Mr. DAVIS. It seems to me there is hardly a parallel to this case in the country, agricultural lands lying perhaps five or six miles from a city are taxed at the same rate as property within the city limits, the owners of which receive the numerous benefits from the large amount of expenditure which takes place. It strikes me at once as wrong, and not only wrong but monstrous. It is unusual, in fact I think unjust, and I could not vote for the bill even if there were no other objections to it. I do not know that there are other objections to the bill, for I have not studied it as carefully as the members of

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] the committee. is a member of the committee, and he is more familiar with it than I am; but before the bill can receive my support, it occurs to me that there should be an explanation to show why, as I think, an unjust taxation should be levied upon the agricultural parts of the District. I ask why should the rate of taxation be the same for the country as the city, where the great amount of the debt of the District has been incurred, where the resulting benefit is very great, and where all the improvements are located? Perhaps not a dollar of the debt now upon the District was the result of expenditures outside of the city limits. Those outside portions certainly do not receive the benefit of the same police regulations prevailing in the city, and there are many benefits of which they are deprived. More costly school-houses are built in the city and all other things are more costly. I believe in every city all over the country taxation is greater in the city than it is in the country districts. That there should be an exception made here, and that that part of the District that is to receive no benefit whatever from the vast expenditures of money should be taxed the same as is that portion within the city limits, where the money raised by taxation is expended, to me is strange; and I should like to hear an explanation of the amendment of the committee striking the clause from

Mr. SPENCER. This is an old question. This question was argued at length before the Senate a year ago; the yeas and nays were taken upon it; and the Senate by a large majority voted to sustain the proposition which the committee have reported at this time. The question is very ably stated in a letter from the District commissioners to myself as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which I shall read. I would like to have attention of the Senator from West Virginia to this communication. They state the question, I think, as ably and plainly as it can be stated. The commissioners Mr. SPENCER. This is an old question. This question was argued

There are also two important changes made by the House of Representatives to which we think your attention should be invited. These are found in section 1, lines 5 to 9 and lines 13 to 15. The first in order provides that a tax of $1 on each $100 of the assessed value shall be levied upon lands outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown "used solely for agricultural purposes," while all other property shall be taxed at the rate of $1.50 on each $100 value thereof. We fail to perceive the justice of this discrimination. The theory on which this tax law is founded is that property, real and personal, shall be taxed upon its ea-h value.

The as essment of all things possessed and taxable is to be the value thereof in lawful money; hence all property is to be reduced to a common basis or unit expressed in dollars and cents, including farming-lands in common with city and villa lots, houses, furniture, money, stocks, bonds, notes, &c. When this unit of measure has been reached, however, farming-lands, excepted from the rule otherwise universally applied, are to be taxed one-third less than any other property.

A dollar's worth of property is just as much the equivalent of a dollar in the county as it is in the city. Some lands in the county are assessed at $50 per acre. Within this city there is land assessed at the rate of $200,000 per acre; the latter, because of its high assessment, contributes to the treasury four thousand times more than the former; the great value arising, in part, from the advantages of the city improvements which it supports by this four-thousand-times greater burden of tax.

The valuation of property begins at some central point of greatest value and takes.

city improvements which it supports by this four-thousand-times greater burden of tax.

The valuation of property begins at some central point of greatest value, and thence diminishes with more or less regularity in all directions toward the county bounds. Where shall the line of discrimination, if such there is to be, be drawn? It is believed that nowhere within the District is a valuation reached based upon intrinsic worth for agricultural purposes, values being everywhere, within so limited a territory about the cities, dependent upon proximity to them and upon speculative advantages and influences. Moreover, to place farmers on an equality, inter se, their lands should be assessed at the same value per acre; whereas farmlands used now solely as such are assessed at various rates, from $50 to $400 per acre, the one of less assessed value being often as desirable as the other for farming purposes. Yet the one would pay, acre for acre, six times more tax than the other.

There are hundreds of acres of land within the limits of this city quite as unproductive in income as are any lands in the county, while yet paying fax upon an assessed value of thousands of dollars per acre. Like the lands of the county, they have a prospective value arising from and dependent upon their proximity to the growth and spread of improvements of the more central portions of the city. This value is contingent upon the advantages derived from the increase of the cities in wealth, population, and all that belongs to luxury and civilization. Should they not contribute to that on which their worth depends, in direct ratio to their cash value?

Other property might claim a discrimination on account of immediate returns given with as much propriety as farming-lands.

The commissioners here state the whole thing as plainly and as ably as it can be stated. I think the difference in valuation covers the objection made by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DORSEY. Every time the District tax bill has been reported from the committee this question has been raised, not only in the committee, but on the floor of the Senate. The committee investigated the matter very thoroughly. While it is true probably in some instances that the farming lands of the country do not pay as large an income in proportion to the valuation as city property, it is not true as a general thing. The fact is that the taxes received by the District commissioners from the farming-lands in the country of Washington commissioners from the farming-lands in the county of Washington commissioners from the farming-lands in the county of Washington outside of the city are very largely less than the amount expended by the District commissioners upon roads, bridges, &c., in the county. That is, the county does not pay its way; the county does not furnish taxes enough to pay the expenses of the county; and I am sure they have hardly a right to complain when compelled to pay the same rate of taxation that is paid in the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

Mr. MERRIMON. I cannot give the sanction of my judgment to the first proposed amendment in section 1 of the bill under consideration. I believe that it is founded upon a principle that is unjust and unwise, and if the attention of the Senate could be drawn to it in such a way as to discuss it and understand it fully, I do not believe the amendment of the committee would receive the sanction of the judgment of the Senate.

ment of the Senate.

The bill, as it came from the House, provided that the property according to its value, real and personal, inside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, should be taxed at the rate of a dollar and a half per hundred dollars' worth of property; and that the like property outside of the city limits should be taxed at the rate of $1. I believe that the provision of the bill as it came from the House is about fair. I believe there ought to be a distinction, and for the reason that there are many improvements and advantages to property in the cities of Washington and Georgetown which do not appertain at all to property situated outside of these cities. In these cities we have a numerous police which costs a great deal of money, we have the advantage of paved streets, excellent sewerage, public lights; we have a health department; an advantage in the matter of schools and churches; and many other advantages that I cannot now think of to enumerate, which do not appertain to the property outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; and yet it is deliberately proposed that those persons who do not enjoy any of these advantages, or who enjoy them very slightly, shall pay as much for their support and maintenance as those who enjoy them absolutely. It seems to me that a mere statement of the proposition is sufficient to I believe there ought to be a distinction, and for the reaeems to me that a mere statement of the proposition is sufficient to show that it is unjust and unfair.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? Mr. MERRIMON. Of course I shall allow my colleague on the

Mr. MERRIMON. Of course I shall allow my colleague on the committee to interrupt me.

Mr. DORSEY. The fact is that the tax raised in the county on the property lying in the county outside of the city of Washington is insufficient to pay the expenses of the county outside of the city. Therefore what the Senator says, that we ought not to levy taxes in the county to pay for gas, water, and police, has no application at all. More than that, we have in the county a mounted police which protects all the roads leading out of the city and which is maintained at a very considerable expense.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am not aware of any account that has been taken in order to ascertain whether the statement made by my colleague on the committee is correct or incorrect. I suppose that his statement is mere speculation. I apprehend that if the account should be taken it would appear that the amount of taxes paid by the propoet taken it would appear that the amount of takes paid by the property-owners outside of the city is a great deal more than pays the cost of administering the government to them.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator certainly ought not to suggest that what I say is mere speculation. I have the same authority for presenting the statement which I make that a Senator has for making any statement in relation to the executive department of this Government. I have the authority of the commissioners of one sitting near any statement in relation to the executive department of this Government. I have the authority of the commissioners, of one sitting near me, and I have their written report to show that the amount of tax raised outside of the city is wholly inadequate to meet the expenses of building county roads, constructing bridges, and the various expenses incident to protecting the county outside of the city of Washington. I have no doubt that that is true, for I certainly do not think ington. I have no doubt that that is true, for I certainly do not think that the commissioners would make an assertion of that kind in writing and verbally to the committee unless it were true.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am not aware of any paper in which the commissioners say they have taken the account in order to estimate how that is. Very intelligent citizens of the District of Columbia outside of the two cities tell me otherwise. But the point I mean to make to the Senate is that the principle is in itself essentially wrong, for the suggestion that the people outside of the city pay according to the value of their property is more specious than solid. It does not go to the bottom of the argument at all. The point I make is that the people of the District pay taxes for the protection and the privileges which they receive frem the Government, and that there are certain advantages in the cities which do not appertain to the property outadvantages in the cities which do not appertain to the property outside of the cities at all. For example, there is no police in the country, or a very small police. I believe there is a mounted police of six or eight men who ride around over the District outside of the two cities. They have no advantage from public lights, they have no advantage They have no advantage from public lights, they have no advantage from sewerage, they have no advantage from schools, they have no advantage from the paved streets, and no interest in keeping this up any more than anybody who lives in any of the States who comes to the city of Washington. These advantages pertain particularly and specially to the property inside of the cities and not to property outside of the cities; and because the people inside of the cities receive this additional protection, this additional advantage, this additional convenience, they ought to pay for it and not enjoy it at the expense of those who do not get such benefits at all. Take the county of Wake in my own State, in which the city of Raleigh is located. You might as well say that the people in the county of Wake ontside of the city of Raleigh should pay taxes to support the government of the city of Raleigh should pay taxes to support the government of the city of Raleigh, or that the people outside of the city of Baltimore in the county in which it is located should pay the same rate of taxation that the people who live in the city pay.

It is suggested that the people of this District are all under the same government. They are to some extent, but the laws which apply to the two cities are not the same in all respects which apply to the county outside of the two cities. There are certain laws and ordinances and regulations which govern the cities and which do not govern the people outside of the cities.

But apart from that consideration, it is manifest, it seems to me, But apart from that consideration, it is manifest, it seems to me, to every just mind that there are certain advantages to property inside the cities which do not appertain to the property outside the cities, and surely property outside ought not to be taxed to pay for an advantage which the property-owners do not realize any benefit from at all, or if they do, one which is very slight.

As to the suggestion that the property outside of the cities does not pay enough to support the government that is administered to those outside of the cities, I am not prepared to state to the Senate how it is. As I said a moment ago, no account has been taken, and I understand from respectable property owners that the property outside stand from respectable property-owners that the property outside does pay for administering the government to them and much more. If it does not, I am very free to say that they ought to pay enough to defray the cost of administering the government, or their proportion of it, and that the city should not be bound to pay a part of that expense.

These are the points in the case. I have felt it my duty to dissent from the proposed amendment in committee and to bring the subject to the attention of the Senate, and I believe the subject ought to receive serious attention, because it becomes a matter of very grave moment. There is nothing the people are more anxious about than the matter of taxes. While they ought to pay their tax cheerfully, because it is to defray the expense of the government that protects them, still they are sensitive about it and do not like to be taxed unjustly. There is are sensitive about it and do not like to be taxed unjustly. There is nothing they complain about more bitterly.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, civilization is an expensive luxury; whether it is worth all that it costs is perhaps an open question. But in any event it must be paid for, and the only method that the ingenuity of man has devised by which the expenses of civilization can be met is by taxation. The theory of course is that each individual and all kinds of property in every community shall bear a proportionate share of the expenses of the maintenance of civil society. It has been the problem that has vexed the minds of legislators ever since government began how to distribute the burden of tors ever since government began how to distribute the burden of taxation so that it shall bear equally upon all persons and upon all classes of property. The complaint that is made by the Senator from North Carolina is as ancient as civil institutions, and it will undoubtedly continue to be made so long as those institutions endure; for no method has yet been discovered, no system can be contrived, that will distribute these burdens with absolute uniformity upon every individual who is called upon to contribute to the expenses of civili-

The Senator from North Carolina contends that it is unjust and inequitable that agricultural or farming lands outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, should bear the same percentage of taxation as property within the limits of those corporations. It is not wholly without foundation; there does seem to be an apparent injustice, upon casual reflection, in taxing farming lands outside of the city the same percentage that is borne farming lands outside of the city the same percentage that is borne by land inside of the corporation. The Senator says there is no sewerage outside of the city, that there is no police, that there are no sanitary regulations, that the roads are not lighted, and consequently it is unfair to subject property that is outside of the city to a share of the taxation that is imposed for the purpose of maintaining the expenses of these benefits. But if the Senator would reflect a moment he would perceive that if this theory is to prevail as a principle of taxation it would be impossible to devise a scheme which will not be open to precisely the same objection, whether inside of the corporate that it is the corporate th open to precisely the same objection, whether inside of the corporation or outside; for it is evident that real estate on Pennsylvania avenue is worth vastly more, either by the foot or by the acre, than lands which lie immediately adjacent the periphery or circumference of the city. The value of that land is immensely greater; conseence of the city. The value of that tand is immensely greater; consequently it should bear a greater proportion of taxation than real estate which is near the outside limits of the city, if the views of the Senator from North Carolina were to prevail.

The Senator might urge with equal force that there should be a different distribution of the burden of taxation inside of the city, because the expenses of the police force on Pennsylvania avenue are greater than they are in the streets near the extreme limits of the city. It costs more to light the Avenue than the other streets. The personal property that is there protected is of greater value. Therefore, to carry out the Senator's theory, property in this location ought to bear a larger proportion of the expenses paid to the police force; so that if we are to reduce this question to complete accuracy, to distribute the bard of textures that it is the bard of textures the texture of textures the textures the textures the texture of textures the textures the textures the texture of textures the texture of textures the textures tribute the burden of taxation so that it will bear with absolute uniformity upon everybody, you have got to make a specific rate for every individual in community. Now the Senator sees this is en-tirely impossible. It is beyond human ingenuity to devise a scheme which will permit a uniform rate of taxation upon every individual in community, and yet to insure absolute justice that must be done, because every man in society is benefited in a degree greater or less because every man in society is benefited in a degree greater or less than any of his fellows. The man who owns a million dollars of real estate in this city is benefited more than the day-laborer. The man who owns a similar amount of personal property is benefited more than the man who is worth nothing. Therefore, if you are to devise a scheme that will distribute this burden equally upon everybody, you must make a specific rate for every individual.

Mr. CLAYTON. Let me suggest another idea. Take Seventh street, which extends through the whole District, the citizens living outside of the city limits on that street have greater advantages.

outside of the city limits on that street have greater advantages than those living in more distant portions, who have no roads and no

Mr. INGALLS. That is undoubtedly true. The Senator from North Carolina is incorrect in saying that the people outside of the city receive no benefits from the improvements which are maintained within the corporation. Real estate which is immediately adjacent to the city is more valuable on account of the street-lamps, pavements, police, and sanitary regulations which are maintained in the city. That is one of the specific reasons which gives an increment of value to property adjoining the city limits; it is because of the greater value of property within the city limits, which depends upon the advantages derived from the improvements that are paid for by the taxation which is imposed upon exterior and interior property alike.

Again, if this idea were to be adopted as a principle of legislation, it would be impossible to impose a tax for State purposes or for any other general fund upon real estate. The Senator knows that within his own State of North Carolina there is a specific tax levied for State purposes upon all the real estate within the limits of that State. Certainly the Senator knows that real estate in the immediate vicinity of the city of Raleigh is of greater value than real estate in the remote rural districts, and yet it would be impossible to adopt a sys-tem of State taxation that should adapt itself to the varying values tem of State taxation that should adapt itself to the varying values of real estate in the different portions of the State dependent upon their proximity to commercial and manufacturing centers.

The only practical plan that legistors have been able to devise is that each community for the purposes of taxation shall be considered as an integer, as a unit, and that the inequalities which are complained of shall be equalized as far as possible by differences in the assessment and valuation. So in regard to the property here in the District the Senator knows that agricultural lands immediately adiciping the sity are of greater value for purposes of sale than property. District the Schator knows that agricultural lands immediately adjoining the city are of greater value for purposes of sale than property of the same description at the extreme boundaries of the District. It therefore bears a different proportion of the burden of taxation, while the percentage remains the same. By imposing a tax of $1.50 on the hundred dollars upon all the real estate in the District there is an equation produced by diminishing the assessed value of the real estate proportioned to its distance from the center of valuation in the city. Therefore, I conclude that it is entirely proper that this clause of the bill should be stricken out and that all real estate in the Dis-of the bill should be stricken out and that all real estate in the District should bear this burden equally, and that the equation should be obtained by differences in the valuation of the property.

Mr. MERRIMON. The argument made by the Senator from Kansas, I must say with all respect to him, is more specious than solid. I have not pretended that it was possible for the Legislature to pass any revenue law that would operate exactly fair upon every person who must pay taxes for the support of the government; but what I said is, and it seems to me that it embodies the very idea and principle of justice, that it is the duty of the Legislature to make the burden of taxation rest as equally upon those who receive protection from the hands of the Government as it is possible for the Legislature to do. That is exactly the principle which I desire to see applied in the District of Columbia. I said, and I adhere to the statement, that the people inside the cities of Washington and Georgetown receive a trict of Columbia. I said, and I adhere to the Statement, that the people inside the cities of Washington and Georgetown receive a larger measure of protection, a greater number of advantages, than the people of the District outside of those cities do or can do, and it is not just that the people outside of the cities should pay for those advantages which they do not realize, and which the Government does not extend to them. The persons and the property of the citizens inside the city of Washington receive a higher degree of protection, and one that costs more, than the persons or property of the people who live outside of the city. Therefore it is not fair that those who receive the less protection, the less advantage, should pay for the advantage and protection of those who receive it in a higher degree.

The illustration which the Senator makes of the property-owner upon Pennsylvania avenue is not sound. It is true, indeed, that property situated immediately upon the Avenue is of much more value than property situated upon F street or G street or M street; but the Senator leaves out of view the fact that the property-owner upon Pennsylvania avenue pays much more tax upon a like piece of property than the man who owns property upon M street.

Mr. INGALLS. He pays the same percentage.

Mr. MERRIMON. He pays more tax because his property is assessed for more money.

sed for more money.

Mr. INGALLS. The percentage is the same.

Mr. NGRILS. The percentage is the same.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is very true, and that is fair and just. The percentage is properly applied to every property-owner inside of the city, and why do I say so? I say so because every person who lives inside the city gets the same measure of protection according to the value of his property from the laws which govern the city and its administration. He has the same advantage of paved streets; he has the same advantage of public lights; he has the same advantage of sewerage and sanitary provisions: and therefore he ought. the same advantage of public lights; he has the same advantage of schools, of sewerage, and sanitary provisions; and therefore he ought to pay according to the value of his property, according to the measure of protection which he receives; but these extraordinary advantages which apply in the city do not apply outside of the city.

Mr. DORSEY. I think my friend from North Carolina is proceeding entirely upon a mistaken theory. This city and this District are under the same government. Every protection, every right, every privilege which any citizen of the city of Washington has every citizen of this county has. The fire department is just as much required and can respond just as quickly to the distant portions of this county as it can respond to a fire on Pennsylvania avenue. They have a mounted police which goes on all the streets and roads and protects them just as the police on our avenues and streets in the city protect people and property. So far as I know and believe, the citizens of the county have the same protection, the same benefit of the money arising from taxation, that the citizens of the city of Washington have.

zens of the county have the same protection, the same berefit of the money arising from taxation, that the citizens of the city of Washington have.

Mr. MERRIMON. The Senator, I think, is manifestly mistaken in what he says. They do not have the number of schools there; they do not have the proportion of schools among them.

Mr. DORSEY. Last year there were over $43,000 paid for public schools alone outside of the city, which, as I understand, is considerably more in proportion than the amount applied in the city; and the tax of the county is only about $100,000, nearly one-half of which was applied for the support of public schools in the county.

Mr. MERRIMON. They do not have the advantage of lights in the country; they do not have the advantage of sewerage; they do not have the sanitary advantages; they do not have the advantage of paved streets and conveniences of that sort. They do not have many advantages which I am not able to enumerate which do not attach to the property outside of the city. Why should they pay the same tax? Why should a principle be applied in the District of Columbia which does not apply in the case of other towns and cities? I learn that in the city of Philadelphia, which covers as large an extent I believe as the District of Columbia, they have three rates of taxation; that they have a rate which applies to the city property, a rate which applies to the suburban portion of the city where it is thinly built up, and another rate which applies to the agricultural lands. That seems to me to proceed upon a just idea of taxation. It proceeds upon the principle which I think ought to apply to the District of Columbia as well as anywhere else in the Union. If it turns out, as has been suggested, that the portion of the District outside of the city does not pay enough taxes to administer the government there, it ought to be increased in that proportion; but I apprehend when the account is suggested, that the portion of the District outside of the city does not pay enough taxes to administer the government there, it ought to be increased in that proportion; but I apprehend when the account is taken it will be found that such is not the fact.

I will mention a further fact in reply to the Senator from Kansas. If the property which is situated near the boundary of the city is of more value on account of its nearness to the city, it is assessed at a larger value and pays more tax on account of the valuation; but the Senator loses sight of the point I make that there are certain advantages and conveniences which apply to the property on one side of the line which do not apply to it on the other side, and although we cannot make the rule of taxation absolutely fair and equal to everybody, we ought to make the rule as fair and equal as we can. seems to me that it is manifest to the plainest mind that to tax people for a measure of protection which they do not receive, and to make them pay for the measure of protection received by others, is plainly and manifestly unjust and wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) *The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the words.

Upon all lands outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown held and used solely for agricultural purposes a tax of $1 on each $100 the assessed value thereof and.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 19; as follows:

29, nays 19; as foliows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bailey, Bluine, Booth, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christianey, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Ingalls, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Spencer, Teller, Waddielgh, West, Windom, and Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Bruce, Cockrell, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, and Withers—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Cooper, Dennis, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Hereford, Howe, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Logan, Maxey, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, and Whyte—27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is in line 9 of the first section, to strike out the word "other," which follows, I believe, as a necessary consequence.

Mr. SPENCER. I think there is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was in section 1, line 13, after the word "thereof," to strike out the Thirty cents on every 100 valuation of real and personal property as a special tax for the support of schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 25, after the word "paid," to strike out the words "out of the general fund" and insert: "By a charge of twenty cents for each lot or piece of property advertised;"

The expenses of said advertising and the printing of said pamphlet shall be paid by a charge of twenty cents for each lot or piece of property advertised.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 52, after the word "Columbia," to insert the words "but the property so bid off shall not be exempted from assessment and taxation, but shall be assessed and taxed as other property;" so as to read:

Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bids not sufficient to meet the amounts of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalty, and costs thereon, said property shall thereupon be bid off by the said commissioners, or their successors in office, in the name of the District of Columbia; but the property so bid off shall not be exempted from assessment and taxation, but shall be assessed and taxed as other property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 57, after the word "sale," to insert: "And that may have accrued after that date;" so as to

And if within two years thereafter such property is not redeemed by the owner or owners thereof, by the payment of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time of the offer of the sale, and that may have accrued after that date, and 10 per cent. per annum thereon, or if any property two years after having been so bid off at any sale whatever in the name of said District, under this or any other law, is not or has not been so redeemed as aforesaid, then the commissioners of the District or their successors in office shall, in the name and on behalf of the District of Columbia, apply to the supreme court of said District, sitting in equity, for the purpose of enforcing the lien acquired as aforesaid by said District on the property aforesaid.

The appropriate was accread to

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 8, line 4, after the word "buildings," to strike out "churches" and insert "church buildings for public worship;" so as to read:

That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following, and no other, namely: First, the Corcoran Art Building, free public library buildings, church buildings used for public worship, the Soldiers' Home, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 12, line 40, after the word "business," to insert the following:

But when any person shall bring a stock of goods of any character whatever into the District for sale by auction, a tax of 1½ per cent shall be paid to the collector of the District; and it shall be the duty of the auctioneer making such sales to deduct the said tax from the gross proceeds of each and every sale so made by him, and pay the same to said collector; and when goods are so brought into the District to be otherwise disposed of than at auction, and in a place of business temporarily occupied for their sale, then, before it shall be lawful to make any sales whatever, the owner of said goods shall notify the board of assessors, who shall assess the entire stock to be sold at its fair cash value, and the owner thereof shall pay to the collector of the District a tax of 1½ per cent on such assessed value, and shall receive a receipt therefor, which receipt shall be his permit to proceed with the sale of the goods; and any auctioneer or owner of goods who shall violate the provisions of this section, or any part thereof, shall be fined in the police court of said District, on information filed therein in the name of the District of Columbia, in the manner used for breach of municipal ordinances and laws, not less than $100 and not more than $1,000;

So as to read:

Where a person coming into the District subsequent to June 30, 1877, engages in trade of a permunent character, he shall pay a tax proportioned to the fraction of the tax year ending June 30, 1878, during which he conducts said trade, and the assessment in suid case shall have reference to the average stock in trade for sixty days from the date of commencing business; but when any person shall bring a stock of goods of any character whatever into the District for sale by auction, a tax of 1½ per cent, shall be paid to the collector of the district, &c.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill what is the effect of the words in lines 43, 44, and 45:

And it shall be the duty of the auctioneer making such sales to deduct the said tax from the gross proceeds of each and every sale so made by him, and pay the same to said collector.

The auctioneer auctioning off the goods, according to that language, as soon as he knocks down one article would have to stop and pay the

Mr. SPENCER. O, no; the bill does not intend anything of that kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then make it so that it will mean something else, for that is what it says. I suggest a modification of the amendment, so as to make it clear.

Mr. SPENCER. We will accept any modification; but it does not mean anything of the kind that the Senator suggests. It means that the auctioneer shall report at the end of every month, or a specified time, the amount of sales and pay such tax. The object of it is to

mr. COCKRELL. For that reason I suggest in line 45 to insert the words "at the close of each day's sales;" so as to read:

To deduct the said tax from the gross proceeds of each and every sales o made by him at the close of each day's sales and pay the same to said collector.

Mr. SPENCER. I will accept that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section 16: "And they are hereby required to use the surplus revenues to repair the avenues, streets, and alleys in said District;" so as to read:

avenues, streets, and alleys in said District;" so as to read:

That hereafter no two lots or subdivisions of original or other lots in any square of ground in the District of Columbia shall be designated by the same number or by the same letter of the alphabet, and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, shall cause the numbers and letters designating lots in all the squares of ground in said District to be revised and changed to conform to this requirement; and they shall make such further changes in the existing numbers or letters designating lots in any of the squares in the cities and villages in said District as may, in their opinion, facilitate and simplify the labor of assessing real estate therein. And they are hereby required to use the surplus revenues to repair the avenues, streets, and alleys in said District.

Mr. SALLISBURY — I should like to know the object of that amend-

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to know the object of that amendment. It seems to me very unusual to give this commission the power to appropriate money to improve streets by a general clause in a bill without a specific appropriation for the improvement of the streets and avenues. I think that it is a very loose way of legislating to take money which may be in their hands, collected by taxes from the people, and apply it at their discretion for the improvement of avenues, streets, and alleys in this District. I apprehend we ought to make no such appropriation. There ought to be a special appropriation for avenues and streets, and it is usually done in that way; but this amendment gives the commissioners a general power at their discretion. this amendment gives the commissioners a general power at their discretion to take the surplus fund in their hands and apply it to that purpose. I think it is a very unwise provision, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

These commissioners are by this amendment authorized to take any surplus revenue in their hands collected from the people by taxes and apply it where they please to the improvement of streets, alleys, and avenues in this city. I am opposed to appropriately apply it where they please to the improvement of streets, aneys, and avenues in this city. I am opposed to any such unlimited power and discretion being vested in the commissioners. Whenever we want to make an improvement upon Pennsylvania avenue, for instance, we generally know what it is about; but this amendment seems to confer on the commissioners a discretion which I am not willing to trust to on the commissioners a discretion which I am not willing to trust to them. If the surplus revenues are in the Treasury, let the money remain to the credit of the District, and if the alleys and lanes and avenues of the city need improvement, let us have some specific legislation on that subject.

Mr. SPENCER. In answer to the Senator from Delaware, I desire to state that there is this year a surplus of $36,000. The object of the amendment is to enable the commissioners to use that surplus. The Bendelly year types will be an equal amount of surplus. The the amendment is to enable the commissioners to use that surplus. Probably next year there will be an equal amount of surplus. The avenues and streets of this city are in a very bad condition. There is no power now to do anything with them. Such an amendment is absolutely necessary. The sum is very small indeed, being $36,000 this year, and the probability is that it will be no greater next year.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think, if any proceeds come into the hands of the commissioners under this bill, if there is going to be any surplus whatever, we had better reduce the rate of taxation. It is well known that the people in this District have suffered immensely from the

that the people in this District have suffered immensely from the that the people in this District have suffered immensely from the enormous taxes to which they have been subjected, and if there is now in the Treasury a surplus, and if it is probable that there will arise under the tax imposed by this bill a surplus to be placed in the Treasury, we had better, in the interest of the tax-payers in the District, reduce the rate of taxation. I am very glad the Senator from Alabama has informed us that there will probably be a surplus. Bejorg to I say let it remain in the Treasury and let us reduce next year. Alabama has informed us that there will probably be a surplus. Being so, I say let it remain in the Treasury and let us reduce next year the taxes on the people of this District who have been excessively burdened for the last several years by taxes on their property. The fact is the rate of taxation now proposed by this bill, a dollar and a half per hundred dollars to be levied on the tax-payers of this District is an enormous tax. It is three times and more than three times the tax which the people of my State pay for city and county purposes. Our rate of taxation, both for State purposes and for county purposes, does not exceed forty-five cents in the hundred dollars; yet we have an enormous debt for our small State, a debt of about a million and a quarter dollars. We pay the interest on that debt and we pay all our State expenses, all our local county expenses, and accumulate annually a surplus in the treasury to be applied to the liquidation of the debt. Yet a rate of taxation is proposed in this bill more than three times that of my State. I say, reduce the rate of taxation rather than grant an unlimited discretion to these commissioners, and if we are going to levy a tax which is to accumulate a surplus in the Treasury instead of expending that surplus according to their own will and discretion, we should reduce the taxation.

Mr. MERRIMON. This surplus is apparent rather than real.

Mr. MERRIMON. The taxes collected from the people are devoted to special purposes which are enumerated, and those taxes being devoted to those special purposes the result is to leave a surplus of about $35,000. There is no appropriation for the repair or improvement of the streets at all. There will have to be money raised from some source to improve the streets. As to allowing the commissioners to determine what improvements are absolutely necessary or what are more necessary than others, it is utterly impossible for us to get along with the District government unless we repose a very large discretion in the commissioners. I what particular appropriation ought to be made and to make all the repairs necessary. The commissioners or their subordinates must determine what particular repairs must be made and at what particular time they must be done. They are better qualified to do it and we are obliged to repose confidence in them. I believe there is no we are obliged to repose confidence in them. I believe there is no complaint against their integrity; I have heard none made. It is practically impossible for us to have commissioners or any other body to administer the government of the District of Columbia without reposing a very large measure of confidence in them, confidence in their integrity, confidence in their judgment. They are obliged to be charged with the expenditure of money in the prosecution of works of this sort. Congress may determine that a great street like Pennsylvania avenue shall be paved and provide how it shall be paved and make all the provision necessary for it; but when you come to make slight repairs and sometimes extensive repairs upon remote streets and by-streets and by-ways it is impossible for Congress to look into the matter. That must be reposed in the discretion of the commissioners, and this provision is simply to allow the commissioners to use this surplus fund in the repair of the streets, the repair of those places that most need it.

Mr. KERNAN. The amendment reads:

And they are hereby required to use the surplus revenues to repair the avenues, reets, and alleys in said District.

Which would imply that they have got to look out a place to spend the money on.

Mr. MERRIMON. They will have no difficulty in finding a place; and there are a great many places that they cannot repair because they will not have the money to do it.

Mr. KERNAN. The word "authorized" would be quite broad enough.

Mr. MERRIMON. That might be; but as the matter now stands, there is no danger of their spending money where it ought not to be spent or where the streets do not need repair. I know from my personal observation in passing over some of the streets that vast sums can be expended in bettering their condition. Some of the streets are in a very ruinous condition, I venture to say in a dangerous condition. We are obliged to repose in the judgment of the commissioners the application of the funds necessary to repair the streets. I think the provision is wise and proper.

provision is wise and proper.

Mr. EATON. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina that the principle is a proper one, but I do not like the wording of the amendment:

And they are hereby required to use the surplus revenues to repair the avenues, streets, and alleys in said District.

Suppose there was a very large amount of surplus revenue. I apprehend there will not be; I have no idea there will be; but suppose there should be; under this bill the commissioners might feel authorized to expend the entire amount upon the streets of the city. It would be better to change the phraseology of the amendment so as to read:

And in the repair of the avenues, streets, and alleys surplus revenues only shall

Mr. DORSEY. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut would meet the views of the Committee on the District of Columbia. We may accept the amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. EATON. I should prefer to have it read in that way.

Mr. SPENCER. Let the Senator reduce it to writing.
Mr. EATON. I will then move to strike out the words proposed to be added by the committee, and in lieu of them insert:

And in the repair of the avenues, streets, and alleys surplus revenues only shall

Mr. MERRIMON. Let me make a suggestion. I repeat what I said a while ago that some of these streets and avenues are in a most ruinous condition and some of them are dangerous. It might turn out in the course of the year that the surplus revenue would be very trifling compared to the amount to be expended. The commissioners might be obliged to make a repair upon the streets and they would have no money to do it, because by the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut they could not exercise any discretion at all in the application of the funds which they might use for that purpose. If the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Connecticut should be adopted they would be confined in making repairs to the surplus fund, which might be trifling.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from North Carolina inform me how much revenue will be derived under this bill?

Mr. MERRIMON. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia can state the amount more accurately than I can.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not understand the Senator from Delaware, Mr. SAULSBURY. I made the inquiry of the chairman of the committee or of the Senator from North Carolina as to the amount of revenue that would be derived under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SPENCER. About $1,900,000. all in the application of the funds which they might use for that pur-

Mr. SPENCER. About $1,900,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I will answer the question of the Senator from Delaware more correctly now. The commissioners inform me that the amount of revenue to be collected under this bill is about $1,800,000. stated it too high.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What was the amount collected last year?
Mr. SPENCER. About $1,700,000.
Mr. SAULSBURY. And it is to be $1,800,000 this year?
Mr. SPENCER. That is the estimate.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.
The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 17. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to advance to said commissioners between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of November, 1877, such sums as may be from time to time required for the payment of interest on the old funded debt, and for the current expenses of the District government, the aggregate sum so advanced not to exceed $500,000; and the commissioners shall re-imburse the Treasury the amount so advanced out of the revenues of the District on or before the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to offer an amendment to the proposed section. The section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to the commissioners moneys and that the commisshall advance to the commissioners moneys and that the commissioners shall re-imburse the Treasury the amount advanced. The Secretary of the Treasury is to advance such sums as may be required between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of November, 1877, and he is to be re-imbursed on or before the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878. There is therefore a period of time when the public Treasury will have been out of the money advanced. My amendment is to add after the word "advanced" in line 10 the words "with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.;" so as to read:

And the commissioners shall re-imburse the Treasury the amount so advanced, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., out of the revenues of the District on or before the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that that amendment will not be adopted.

I do not see any good reason why the District of Columbia should pay interest to the Government. The District government is very poor interest to the Government. The District government is very poor anyway, and the money is lying idle in the Treasury. I do not see any propriety for the payment of interest. The necessity for the amendment of the committee is because the taxes are not payable until the 1st day of November and there will be no money from July to November to pay the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is very apparent, if the amendment reported from the committee is agreed to, that the Secretary of the Treasury will be convenied to the Treasury.

from the committee is agreed to, that the Secretary of the Treasury will be compelled to advance the whole amount named in the bill, which is half a million dollars, and the Treasury will be out of the receipt of that money for at least six months in the year. It is not designed by this bill to make any appropriation of money whatever out of the public Treasury; but it is simply to enable the commissioners to go on with the government of the District, and it is proposed that the Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to them the money. They ought to refund this money with interest upon it to the Treasury, just the same as if it had been loaned by an individual. My amendment is simply to indemnify the Treasury. The Government has to pay interest upon its debts. The Government could take this money and appropriate it to the payment of claims against the Government; but if the section is passed without the amendment which I have offered, then the Treasury will be making an appropriation of at least the amount of the interest on the $500,000 proposed in the bill. I simply want to secure to the Treasury not only the amount of money which is advanced to the commissioners, but interest upon it, and I think that is perfectly fair.

of money which is advanced to the commissioners, but interest upon it, and I think that is perfectly fair.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. DORSEY. We may as well have the yeas and nays. A division will show that there is not a quorum present.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. Ordinarily I should be in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware; but in the case before the Senate now I think that it probably would be unwise to adopt his amendment. This advance is required because of the practical impossibility to collect the taxes in time to meet the absolute wants of the District government, which must be supplied before the taxes can be collected. The Government is very largely interested in the government of the District of Columbia, and in its wise and wholesome administration. The property which the Government owns here is of vast value. The Government is more largely interested than anybody else in the administration of the affairs of the District; and it does seem to me that in extending this aid we ought not to be very stingy about the use of a few thousand dollars the District; and it does seem to me that in extending this aid we ought not to be very stingy about the use of a few thousand dollars for a brief while. The interest would be about $15,000, I understand. If that sum is taken from the aggregate amount to be raised it will be very seriously felt. It may turn out that the money will be out of the Treasury but a brief while. As soon as the money goes into the treasury of the District it can be replaced, and the commissioners will replace it. It may be out about six months, in which case the interest would be $15,000; or it may be out only three months; in which case the interest would be only half that amount; but, as I said before, I do not think that Congress ought to be very stingy in a matter of this sort.

Mr. DORSEY. The only reason why the Secretary of the Treasury is to be called upon to advance this money is because Congress has not within the last two or three years seen fit to pass the District tax bill in time for the District commissioners to assess and collect the tax by the 1st of July, that is, at the beginning of the fiscal year. After the tax is paid in, which will be in November or December, I believe, the entire amount lies in the Treasury of the United States, lieve, the entire amount lies in the Treasury of the United States, except as it is used along from day to day, up to the next July; so that, if the District is to pay interest to the Government, certainly the Government ought to pay interest to the District, and the balance would be largely in favor of the District. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not received.

the amendment will not prevail.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS-Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Norwood, Saulsbury, Wadleigh, and Wallace-15.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia, it was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. SPENCER. In line 66, on page 6, after the word "aforesaid," I move to insert:

And until such judicial proceedings shall be had the property so as aforesaid sold for taxes, and bid off in the name of the District, either at any sale hereafore made or at any sale hereafter to be made, may be redeemed by the owner thereof by the payment of the taxes and all legal penalties and costs thereon.

by the payment of the taxes and all legal penalties and costs thereon.

The object of the amendment is to enable a man to get back his property if he pays his taxes.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to make one inquiry in this connection. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Alabama whether there is anything in the bill which contemplates that judicial proceedings shall be instituted touching any sales which have heretofore been made, or whether the sales heretofore made stand upon the law as it stood heretofore, without any authority by the statute of the part of the commissioners to institute proceedings? I ask the question for the reason that this amendment simply implies that such judicial proceedings are necessary or are contemplated. If such authority is not provided in the bill, but rests upon the mere implication to be found in this amendment, it will undoubtedly fail.

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment which I present was prepared by the attorney for the commissioners, and the commissioners say it is absolutely necessary.

absolutely necessary.

Mr. WRIGHT. I can understand the necessity of the amendment, but the Senator from Alabama perhaps does not understand my inquiry. Is it true that as the law stands now it is not necessary that judicial proceedings should be instituted touching sales heretofore If that is true, then I can understand this amendment, and it is but reasonable enough and explains itself; but if that is not the case, and it rests upon the mere implication contained in the amendment, then it puts the commissioners in a difficulty, for parties might say there is no other way of foreclosing your equity than going into court, because this amendment contemplates that you shall go into court; and yet if there is no law heretofore or now in force to provide that you shall go into court, you rest the amendment upon a mere implication.

Mr. SPENCER. It does apply to all prior cases, I understand.

Mr. WRIGHT. I know what the amendment proposes to apply to, but I ask whether there is a law in force now which requires it. That but I ask whether there is a law in force now which requires it. That is the question.

Mr. SPENCER. I am told there is no law.

Mr. WRIGHT. Suppose it to be true that you have had sales heretofore, is there any way of foreclosing the equity against the person who owns the property, as the property has been sold?

Mr. SPENCER. There is none.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I understand by this amendment the Senator contemplates that the equity would be foreclosed as to all prior sales by going into court, as well as to all subsequent sales?

Mr. SPENCER. Exactly.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then ought you not to provide that expressly for it, instead of leaving it to mere implication, as you do by this amendment?

Mr. SPENCER. Perhaps that would be well; but the understanding is that the amendment does exactly what the Senator from Iowa

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the amendment be read again.
The Chief Clerk read the amendment.
Mr. ALCORN. I have not heard a response to the interrogatory propounded by the Senator from Iowa. I ask the Clerk to read the section which provides for the judicial tribunal, if there be such a

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bids not sufficient to meet the amounts of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalty, and costs thereon, said property shall thereupon be bid off by the said commissioners, or their successors in office, in the name of the District of Columbia; but the property so bid off shall not be exempted from assessment and taxation, but shall be assessed and taxed as other property; and if within two years thereafter such property is not redeemed by the owner or owners thereof, by the payment of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time of the offer of the sale, and that may have accrued after that date, and 10 per cent. per annum thereon, or if any property two years after having been so bid off at any sale whatever in the name of said District, under this or any other law, is not or has not been so redeemed as aforesaid, then the commissioners of the District or their successors in office shall, in the name and on behalf of the District of Columbia, apply to the supreme court of said District, sitting in equity, for the purpose of enforcing the lien acquired as aforesaid by said District on the property aforesaid.

Mr. ALCORN. That is all I desire.

Mr. ALCORN. That is all I desire. Mr. DORSEY. The object of the amendment is to permit the District to receive money from delinquent tax-payers who have failed heretofore to pay their taxes and who may fail hereafter to pay their taxes where the land is sold and bought in by the District. The District government has now, I understand, about nine hundred thousand dollars' worth of real estate in the District which it has bought in for which it would not be able to receive the money if the owner of the property offered to liquidate the debt. For example, if a man's house has been sold for taxes and the District has become the purchaser, it is now unable to permit the man to pay his taxes after it chaser, it is now unable to permit the man to pay his taxes after it has become such purchaser.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before voting upon this question I should like to ask whether there is any provision by act of Congress requiring the District authorities to go into the supreme court or any other judicial tribunal of the District of Columbia and foreclose in cases where sales for taxes have already transpired? Is there any such law on the statute-book? And, if there is none, this provision does not provide that remedy, as I understand it, and the mere implication from this amendment would not be sufficient to authorize that right. As it seems to me, with what reflection I have been able to give his bill, it leaves the matter imperfect, and it ought to be plain and dis-

As it seems to me, with what reflection I have been able to give this bill, it leaves the matter imperfect, and it ought to be plain and distinct before final action is taken in regard to it.

Mr. DORSEY. In answer to my friend from Minnesota I will state that at present there is no law by which the District authorities can go into the Supreme Court and forcelose their right to the property. As I said, the District has now upward of nine hundred thousand dollars' worth of property which they have bought off at tax sales for deliverent taxes.

lars' worth of property which they have bought on at tax sales for delinquent taxes.

Mr. DAWES. Cannot the owners redeem their property?

Mr. DORSEY. They not only cannot redeem it, but the District authorities cannot receive the taxes if they are offered. The amendment, I understand, is intended to correct that difficulty; and if it does not cover the ground, I hope the Senator, who is a good lawyer, will suggest an amendment which will accomplish the object.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the amendment be reported again.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after the word "aforesaid," in line 66, the words:

And until such judicial proceedings shall be had the property so as aforesaid sold for taxes and bid off in the name of the District, either at any sale hereafter to be made or at any sale hereafter to be made, may be redeemed by the owner thereof by the payment of the taxes and all legal penalties and costs thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. In section 8, lines 18 and 19, I move to strike out the words "other than for the government of the District of Co-lumbia:" so as to read:

Thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by laws of the United States.

I am informed that as the law now exists two literary institutions, in-Tam informed that as the law now exists two literary institutions, incorporated colleges and academies, are exempt from taxation. Those institutions which exist here are not money-making institutions. They are literary institutions to give education at a cheap rate; and, as I have been informed, subjecting them to taxation would be a serious burden to them, while it would not add very much to the amount of taxes received. I understand that these institutions heretofore have been free from taxation.

I hope the amendment will meet with favor and that the Senate will strike out those words, leaving those institutions, as they are now by existing law, exempt from taxation. Some of the officers of these institutions have told me that it would be a very serious burden and that they are not able to bear it.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that I am opposed to this amendment but helps writing for it I have the Senate from New York.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that I am opposed to this amendment, but before voting for it I beg the Senator from New York to specify distinctly to what corporations he alludes.

Mr. KERNAN. I will state two institutions with which I am somewhat familiar. I have been spoken to in reference to Columbia College and Georgetown College. Under the present law they are relieved from taxation, and if the words are left in the bill which I have moved to strike out, they will be subject to taxation like residences, stores, or any other property in the District.

Mr. INGALLS. Are those institutions now exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States?

Mr. KERNAN. Yes, sir; I understand they are.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator point to the statute that exempts them?

them?

Mr. KERNAN. No, I cannot. I am not very familiar with the subject and did not know that this matter was coming up, but a gentleman who is very familiar with it called my attention to it and explained it to me. He said that that was the present condition and that the law was only changed by this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I think it very important that we should be specifically advised on that point.

Mr. KERNAN. I suppose that other Senators are more familiar with the subject. I spoke to Mr. Sumner often upon the importance of the matter. It was explained that they were now and had been up to this time free from taxation; and they desire, therefore, to be left just as they are. I hope that those institutions in the District now exempt by law from taxation will be left so exempt.

Mr. INGALLS. If those institutions to which the Senator refers are conducted for the purposes of public charity, without charge to the inwates and without profit or income, they are exempt under the provisions of this section.

provisions of this section.

Mr. KERNAN. These institutions are what might be called under the act charitable institutions. They are institutions which have existed a long time. They educate boys for a moderate compensation, but they are not richly endowed and they barely run their institutions with what they derive from their schools, desiring to make the cost of instruction, as I know as to some of them, as low as they can so as to barely support the institution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.]

Mr. WITHERS. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHERK It is proposed in lines 18 and 19, on page 11.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in lines 18 and 19, on page 11, section 8, to strike out the words "other than those for the government of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the clause read:

Thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by laws of the United

Mr. DORSEY. I understand if this amendment is adopted and the Mr. DOKSEY. I caderstand if this amendment is adopted and the words are stricken out, the effect will be to relieve a very large number of institutions in this District from taxation, among them, I think, two or three institutions in Georgetown. The Committee on the District of Columbia have carefully considered the question of exemption from taxation, and I think it was the unanimous opinion of that committee that none but buildings actually used for public worship should be exempt, and not institutions for educational purposes or property used by church societies of whatever denomination. They ought to pay taxes. If churches can afford to hold large amounts of property used by church societies of whatever denomination. They ought to pay taxes. If churches can afford to hold large amounts of property in this District, large lots of land for an increase of price, free of taxes, it is a very great injustice to the citizens. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not think there are a very large number of them. It will only affect whatever educational institutions there are. It is true they are not public institutions in a literal sense, such as the national museum, the art gallery, and others of that kind. They are educational institutions. They are institutions, as I think all who know anything about them know, which do not carry on schools to know anything about them know, which do not carry on schools to make money, but they seek to give a good education at as cheap a rate as they can and barely sustain the institutions. They are incorporated by the Federal Government, and, it seems to me, that in looking for objects of taxation we ought not to tax these educational institutions.

In my own State and I think in other States educational institutions are exempt, and with very great approbation, because they are carrying on that education which we all think should be encouraged carrying on that education which we all think should be encouraged and not discouraged. If such institutions in the city of New York were subjected to a heavy taxation for city purposes, which are all proper, it would cripple them or else they would have to increase the charge on education, which I am not in favor of taxing where other subjects of taxation exist. That is the policy generally adopted in the States, as far as I know; it is in my own State, where all incorporated colleges and literary institutions are excepted expressly; and I hope we shall not say that we are opposed to that policy by now changing the law and subjecting these institutions to taxation which have not heretofore been subjected to it, and as to which there has been no complaint so far as I have heard.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from New York seems to be either doubtful or not informed with regard to the effect of his to be either doubtful or not informed with regard to the effect of his own amendment. I should be unwilling to impose any burdens upon educational institutions that are not shared in common by the other institutions of society. The Senator is not able to inform us what institutions of society. The Senator is not able to inform us what these institutions are nor what the laws are under which they would be exempt from taxation, if at all. Certainly we have provided in this bill that there shall be a very liberal exemption of all public charities and houses of worship that are used exclusively for that purpose. We have imposed a very specific limitation upon the exemption laws as heretofore enforced in this District.

Now I am advised—but this subject has come up so hastily that my information, of course, is very cursory—that if this amendment prevails a very large amount of property that is held by these institutions, and that is not used for the purposes either of charity, religion, or education, will escape its burdens for the support of the government of this District. That certainly is wrong.

It seems to me that, if there is any injustice contemplated by the terms of this bill as reported by the committee, the Senator from New York ought at least to advise us specifically what it is that he wants to accomplish by his amendment or else leave it to be obtained by some subsequent bill for that purpose.

to accomplish by his amendment or else leave it to be obtained by some subsequent bill for that purpose.

Mr. KERNAN. I am not wanting in information, but I am always very particular in the Senate, as I ought to be. I have not examined these statutes myself, but I am informed that they exempt incorporated literary institutions, teaching institutions, colleges, or academies. I did not look the subject up because, as one of the gentlemen has said, the attention of the committee was called to it. I do not think that any of them have any doubt as to exactly what would be left exempt, and yet I did not myself look up the statutes on the subject. I understand that colleges or academies carrying on the business of teaching are exempt from taxation. One of those institutions of which I have knowledge has no property except that which is used for college purposes; it uses its property for no other purposes. I suppose there are no lands owned by these institutions that are used for other purposes, although I have not examined as to that. There has been no complaint of the law as it now stands, and I think we should leave it as it is. I speak of what is my information. I understood that the attention of the Committee on the District of understood that the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia had been called to the subject, and I do not think I misstate the scope of the exemption when I say that it covers incorporated institutions for teaching children.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.]

Mr. ALCORN. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out, in lines 18 and 19, the words "other than those for the government of the District of Columbia;" so that, if amended, the clause will read:

Thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by laws of the United States.

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 16, noes 18;

mr. KERNAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before this vote is taken, I wish to say that I shall esteem it to be my duty to insist upon the regular order in a very few minutes, unless this bill is disposed of. I call the attention of the friends of the bill to the fact that I shall esteem it to be my duty to call for the regular order.

Mr. SPENCER. This bill will really be disposed of when this amendment is voted upon. I think there is no other amendment to be offered. The committee has no other amendments to offer, and I know of no

The committee has no other amendments to offer, and I know of no Senator who has any.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, I regret that the amendment of the Senator from New York is not in a form in which I can with propriety support it. I do not know what property in this District has been exempted by the United States from taxation heretofore, nor do I know that I would be prepared, if I were to see the exemption, to indorse and continue such exemption. It occurs to me that there should be a more specific declaration of the property that is proposed to be exempted here. If the exemption is to be applied to churches and colleges indiscriminately, to all places of public instruction, it should be so stated in the amendment. Then we should understand exactly what we were doing. To say that we will vote here to exempt from taxation the property that has heretofore been exempted by the Government of the United States, is to say that we will do that which we in truth do not understand the full scope and effect of doing; and, hence, not being able to understand the full effect of doing; and, hence, not being able to understand the full import, scope, and effect of the amendment, I shall vote against it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted-yeas 17, nays

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, there was a just criticism, perhaps, made upon the amendment last voted on, that it did not clearly specify the extent of the proposed exemption. With a view of testing the question in a better form and one likely to be more acceptable, I will send to the Chair, as soon as I have read it, an amendment which I have written. I propose to insert at the end of section 8, on page 11, these words:

Sixthly, all property owned and actually occupied and used for the purposes of education by incorporated colleges and academies.

That will show just what it means, that it must be property which

That will show just what it means, that it must be property which is actually used and actually occupied for the purposes of education. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. KERNAN. If one of these institutions owns a farm or property not actually used or occupied as an academy, I am not in favor of exempting it. If it owns bank stock or bonds, I am not in favor of exempting them. But I did mean, and by this provision I certainly cover nothing more than property actually occupied and used for the purposes of education by incorporated colleges and academies. Now, I trust that that will meet the approbation of the Senator.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New

Now, I trust that that will meet the approbation of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New York will prevail. I think that all property so used contributes as largely to bearing the public burdens as does any property that bears it in the form of taxation. It is an encouragement of a kind that ought to be recognized by the laws of the District, and I sincerely hope that it will be adopted.

Mr. DORSEY. Is it recognized by the laws of your State?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Arkansas inquires of me whether it is recognized by the laws of my state. From the foundation of the State it has been so recognized, and every attempt to tax property of that kind in my State has signelly failed, and I hope it always will. Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from New York to strike out the word "property" and insert the word "buildings" Mr. KERNAN. Say "all real estate."

Mr. INGALLS. "All buildings."

Mr. KERNAN. Let them have the play-ground, the yard, the walks, and the gardens.

Mr. INGALLS. I think when we restrict churches and religious institutions to the buildings that are actually occupied for the purposes of the worship of almighty God, that we ought not to extend any greater prerogative to those that are occupied for the purposes of education. Now I am told, if I do not interrupt the Senator from New York

Mr. KERNAN. O, no; I am glad to hear you.
Mr. INGALLS. I am told that the institutions at which I suppose this amendment is specially aimed have very large landed possessions, that they have not only what the Senator calls play-grounds and walks and gardens, but that they have extensive parks and farms that are to a certain extent used or employed for the purposes of the institutions themselves. Now I suggest to the Senator from New York that he use the same language that is applied to church edifices, and limit the exemption to the buildings that are specifically used for these purposes.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not mean to suggest this language as preferable to any other. I drew this amendment hastily and I will accept anything that makes it clearer. It exempts all property owned and actually occupied and used for the purposes of education. Surely that will not cover the case of a farm that they may cultivate. They themselves did not mean that it should. But if you say merely "the buildings," you would not mean to assess them on their philosophical buildings," you would not mean to assess them on their philosophical apparatus that they have for their boys; you would not mean to assess them on the library they keep for their boys. When you exempt all churches, I imagine you would not tax them for the organs that are played there, because they are not a part of the building. I do not want to use any language in the amendment that will leave an opening for abuse. You may put in anything to show that they shall not have any outlying lands that they rent or use for a farm exempted; but no assessor will let them off from the payment of taxes when they are to pay taxes on "all property actually occupied and used for the purposes of education." You may put in the word "necessary," if you do not think the language I have used is sufficiently explicit, but if you merely put in "buildings" you will allow the assessors to pick up these other things, the very yard where they have a hundred boys and where they must play. That is a very necessary part in modern education where they have many boys.

I have made this amendment conform as nearly as I could from memory to the statutes of my own State in the exemption of propnemory to the statutes of my own State in the exemption of property owned by incorporated colleges or academies and which have existed long. I think that the word they use is "occupied;" and I put this stronger; I say "occupied and used" for the purposes of education. I am sure that there will be no abuse. The assessors will cation. I am sure that there will be no abuse. The assessors will guard against that.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The practical result of it, if it is adopted, will be, in my opinion, to relieve a number of millions of dollars' worth of property in this District from taxation, and property, it seems to me, that ought to be taxed.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know what may be the application in this District of this phraseology, nor do I care. I cannot discover any distinction between a building and any other property that is devoted to a charitable purpose or devoted to the education of the youth of this District or of this lend. I hold that any property in what. other to a charitable purpose or devoted to the education of the youth of this District or of this land. I hold that any property, in whatever shape it may be properly and necessarily devoted to that great object, should be exempt from bearing the other burdens that fall upon other property not so employed, but employed for purposes of gain and of profit. That kind of property it is that should bear these burdens; but property set apart by gift, by donation, or in any other way, not for the purposes of gain or of profit, but for a higher and a nobler purpose, that of relieving the community from burdens of taxation that would otherwise fall upon it, deserves such a recognition and such an exemption, and it ought not to be confined to a building. There is nothing in principle that would justify any such distinction. The principle should be all property devoted to that purpose, and the more the better. If there be four or five millions of property in this District devoted properly to the purposes of education, it is what I have not heard of before, and what gives me more hope of the relief of this District from the burdens of taxation than anything else that has been suggested.

has been suggested.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am old-fashioned enough to believe that all sorts of property ought to pay their share of taxation. There is no reason at all, to my mind, because the community have put up most expensive buildings for school-houses or churches or any other purpose of that kind, that they should be relieved from taxation, while the humble shoemaker or tailor who relieved from taxation, while the humble shoemaker of tailor who has a little bit of a house in this town should be compelled to pay taxes upon his humble house. We all pay our taxes for school purposes; we all, I trust, pay our taxes to sustain the church and church buildings and everything else which tends to Christianize and to cultivate our intellects; but that is no reason why these expensive edifices should be untaxed. Why shall the poor man who has a house worth $2,000 be compelled to pay $20 more in the way of taxes upon it because a community having an expensive church that cost half a million of dollars is relieved from taxation? Is that fair? I do not think so at all. Let everybody pay his share of proper taxation of the country.

Indeed, Mr. President, one of the follies of latter years has been to spend too much money in costly school-houses, too much money in building costly and expensive church edifices. Why cannot God be worshiped in a plain house just as well as He can be in one of the magnificent cathedrals which everybody is taxed to sustain; and why cannot the boy and the girl receive their proper tuition in a plain brick school-house, if you like, or, as in the country, in a plain log house, as the children of former years were used to, instead of having one of these expensive buildings that in any township or county now cost $40,000 or $50,000 f Let it be a school-house, not what is called an academy or what is called a college; and even there, there is too much money expended. But it is all wrong that the humble and the poor should be taxed to build up these grand edifices for the benefit, not of the student, not of the pupil who goes to school, but for the benefit of the contractor who builds the school-house and the speculator who gets the material and the man who gets himself speculator who gets the material and the man who gets himself elected councilman that he may have an expensive school-house put up in his ward out of which he or some of his people shall make a speculation.

It is all wrong, Mr. President; and I am glad the subject has come up now, for I have thought a great deal upon it and I am glad of the opportunity of expressing my sentiments at any rate. I never refuse to pay taxes of any kind; I think that the more taxes a man pays the better evidence he gives that he is prosperous; but I am not willing to pay these taxes for the benefit of speculators, theorists, sentimentalists, who talk about saving from taxation edifices built for charitable purposes. There is no sense in that, to my mind. Let every community sustain its own poor: let every community sustain its own poor: munity sustain its own poor; let every community educate its own poor; and, in addition to that, I say not only educate the poor but enable everybody, poor and rich, to go together into the same school-house; and make it so cheap that they can all be educated together, so that there shall be no distinction of class nor of wealth nor of any-that there shall be no distinction of class nor of wealth nor of anything else in our community.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I am sorry to differ, as I do, so widely from the Senator from Pennsylvania. I am opposed to taxing the church in which a man worships, no matter what his creed or his denomination, whether that church be humble in form or one of elegance. I am opposed to it because I do not think this country or any other country will be injured by encouraging men to donate their funds to erect a temple worthy of their God, if they have the means to do it. I am in favor of encouraging the spirit which says to men of wealth that if they feel largely interested in education, and they are willing to give of their earnings donations to build up an institution not as a speculation or for a business purpose, but as a place where men, having building donated and apparatus donated, may utilize these facilities and may give the children not merely of the rich but of the poor cheap education, they shall not be taxed therefor. I do not think there is danger to our country from encouraging the spirit of building up academies and colleges any more than there is danger to our country in saving we will assess any more than there is danger to our country in saying, we will encourage men to build houses of worship by at least saying we will not fill the Treasury by taxing your donations made for purposes of philanthropy, which business men are sometimes willing to make and do make.

The policy of all the States is not to encourage extravagance—

The policy of all the States is not to encourage extravagance—they never do encourage extravagance—by saying to men, "If you choose to found an academy, if you choose to found a college, or if you choose to aid in doing it, you are doing what we recognize as a good work," or at least by going to the extent of saying, "We will not burden it with taxation, but will let the poor and the rich all have the benefit of this good work." I am not for extravagance in schools, where the tax-payers pay. I believe that there, so far as we can, we should look to economy. But, with regard to these institutions such as we have in Massachusetts, in Connecticut, in almost every State, which have been largely built up, by the donations of the State, which have been largely built up by the donations of the friends of education, I think we may wisely and well, in pursuance of a policy which has been encouraged by the Federal Government, I believe from its foundation so far as it has the right to do so, and that believe from its foundation so far as it has the right to do so, and that has been encouraged in all the States, say to the people who give of their funds for the purposes of education, "We will sanction your efforts to the extent of saying we will not tax your bounty or take from the student that which the donor meant to give him when he founded the institution." I hope, sir, that we shall act upon this question in the spirit in which our predecessors have acted, in which men in every State have acted, and that we shall exempt those buildings which are "actually used and occupied" for purposes of education. We are not then exempting speculation, we are not exempting schemes of extravagance. I do not know of any State in this Union where there has been extravagance in founding a college or an academy; and I do not think we ought to tax institutions which were founded largely by donations given that there may be education and that it may be cheap.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator from New York does not seem to comprehend the argument which I tried to use. I am as much in favor of education as he can be, and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school and as much in favor especially of the common school where the most money has been collected from the rich and from the poor to be put into church edifices are the poorest, and that in those countries the poor are ground down more than they are in any other countries. You will find in many countries of Europe most costly church edifices and other church buildings which have consumed all the means of all the country around, made poverty everywhere except within their walls and within their cloisters. I am not in favor of that. There is no reason at all why if men think proper to donate their money when they are about leaving the world to the purpose of putting it into buildings, those buildings should not pay the same taxes which the buildings of the poor and the industrious are compelled to pay. That is my argument. It is not one which the Senator from New York seemed to carry in his remarks. There is no man in this country now who is not in favor of educating the people, and especially the poor; but I have never seen that any but the rich and the idle and the lazy have been benefited by these great church buildings or these great school buildings. I do not mean by that that I am opposed to donations to colleges or schools; but I am unwilling that, if the money which the charitable have given should be wasted in costly buildings, those buildings should be exempt from taxation, to the injury of the laborer and of the laboring communities in which they are located.

to the injury of the laborer and of the laboring communities in which they are located.

Why shall millions of dollars in this town be exempt from taxation when complaints are repeatedly being made of the extravagance and expense of the government of this city? And this city is only a type of the other cities and towns in the country. It has acquired latterly an extravagance in buildings and, as I tried to say before, those buildings are mainly gotten up by persons interested in making money out of them, persons who expect to live there in idleness, not working themselves but depending upon the work of other people and the

of them, persons who expect to live there in idleness, not working themselves but depending upon the work of other people and the charity of the good people who die before them.

Mr. WRIGHT. As I stated that I would do, I deem it to be my duty now to call for the regular order.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that the Senator from Iowa will yield the floor for a few minutes longer. I believe that if he will withhold his motion the Senate will dispose of this bill in about five minutes.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the Pacific Railroad bill

Mr. WRIGHT. I have waited for about two hours and a half and have allowed that time to be given to the consideration of this bill. I think the discussion now entered upon, from the indications we have, is to be without limit. I know very well it will take up this entire day, and how much more I cannot tell. I therefore call for the regular order. the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa insist

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from lowa insist upon the regular order?
Mr. WRIGHT. I do.
Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, this is a House bill and it is important that it should pass at this time, while the bill of the Senator from Iowa is a Senate bill, and I do not see the object in passing it anyway. There is no great necessity for its immediate passage. There is an absolute necessity for this bill. If the Senator will not yield, I propose to make a motion to lay aside the regular order in order to dispose of this bill. I think we can settle it in ten or fifteen minutes. teen minutes

Mr. WEST. No; you cannot.

Mr. SPENCER. Give us fifteen minutes.

Mr. WEST. We have given you two hours and a half.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest to the Senator from Iowa that this is a bill that must, as a matter of course, receive consideration at the present session of Congress, and that it will perhaps take less time to finish the bill now than it would to give it the go-by and have it considered hereafter. I hope that the consideration of the have it considered hereafter. I hope that the consideration of the have it considered hereafter. I hope that the consideration of the bill will be continued.

Mr. WRIGHT. If the vote can be taken on the pending proposition at once, I shall not object. I do not know whether any other amendments are proposed to be offered to this bill or not; but if the vote upon the pending amendment can be taken at once, I will not insist upon my call for the regular order. I do not know, however, that there is to be any end to this debate this evening. I have extended every courtesy to the Senator from Alabama on this bill, and I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. SPENCER. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy and am grateful to him for it.

Mr. SPENCER. Now I move to lay aside the Pacific Railroad bill temporarily for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the District tax bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. There can be no such thing as "laying aside temporarily." That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPENCER. Then I move to postpone that and all prior orders for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the District tax

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate now to the condition of this railroad bill. This bill has been before the Senate for several days; it has been considered; we have voted upon one amendment and we are now prepared to proceed to consider other amendments and dispose of them, and, as I suppose, to dispose of the bill. If the motion of the Senator from Alabama is dispose of the bill. If the motion of the Senator from Alabama is carried, the effect of it, as I conceive, is to defeat all further legislation on this subject at this session. The Senate fully understands the merits and claims on either side. I present the matter so that the Senate may understand what will be the effect of the vote which they propose to take upon the motion to postpone this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to postpone the present and all prior orders.

Mr. WEST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I scarcely think that the action now suggested by the Senator from Alabama is a fair return for the courtesy that has been extended to him and his committee this morning. We have given him two hours and a half. Not satisfied with that, he proposes by this motion to so place the legislation on the railroad bill that it will be impossible to absolutely touch it for the rest of this session. I am free to say that, so far as I am concerned, and I think I can get the co-operation of my friend from Iowa, tomorrow we will give him another hour or an hour and a half, but I do beg the Senate not to encroach upon the courtesy that has been shown, by indefinitely postponing the railroad bill by acceding to this proposition.

Mr. DAWES. The position in which the railroad bill is placed

Mr. DAWES. The position in which the railroad bill is placed arises not so much from the motion of the Senator from Alabama as from the refusal of the Senator from Iowa to permit the motion to be to put it aside temporarily. The Senator from Iowa refuses to have that motion put, which requires nnanimous consent. Therefore the putting the bill in the position in which it will be placed if the motion of the Senator from Alabama should prevail arises rather from the Senator from Iowa than from the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALCORN. I think, Mr. President, the economy of business would suggest the propriety of going forward with the bill that is now under consideration. The Senator from Louisiana says that he is willing to give to-morrow and that the Senator from Iowa assents to the pledge that to-morrow they will yield an hour and a half to the discussion of the District bill. I suggest to him the economy of giving that hour and a half just now.

ing that hour and a half just now.

Mr. SPENCER. And finish the bill.

Mr. ALCORN. Just finish the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. It may be very well for Senators to parcel out the time, but I wish to inform them that the Committee on Appropriations will propose to press its business and antagonize anything that may be in the way at this late hour of the session. I wish that any may be in the way at this late hour of the session. I wish that any understanding between gentlemen may be made with the assurance of the certain determination of that committee to press its work.

Mr. ALCORN. I wish to say, Mr. President, not having yielded the floor, that I am not one of those who undertake to parcel out the time. I was simply saying to the gentlemen who were indulging in what seemed to be a disposition to parcel out the time of others, that, instead of taking an hour and a half to-morrow, we should just take an hour now and thereby save to the country a half hour of time.

Mr. HAMLIN. I take this occasion to say that upon this Pacific Railroad bill I have paired my vote with the Senator from Ohio who sits farthest from me. [Mr. Thurman.] He is necessarily absent from sits farthest from me, [Mr. Thurman.] He is necessarily absent from this body; and I have agreed to pair with him. I shall therefore withhold my vote upon all collateral questions, in justice to that Senator. I have no doubt, if he were here, he would not vote to displace that bill. I therefore shall not vote upon it.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I can perhaps find no better time to make a very brief statement with reference to the condition of the make a very brief statement with reference to the condition of the appropriation bills, as we have entered into a discussion of the general condition of the business of the Senate.

I wish to say to the Senate that they are by no means in a satisfactory condition. The pension bill has passed and become a law, and that is the only bill of the twelve general appropriation bills that is yet a law. The Indian appropriation bill, the fortification bill, and the Military Academy bill are all in conference and can probably be disposed of in a short time. The consular and diplomatic bill has passed both Houses and is now awaiting the action of the House of Representatives upon the Senate amendments, and has been in the House for a considerable time. The post-office bill has been reported from the Committee on Appropriations to the Senate and is now awaiting action by the Senate. The same is true of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. Both of these bills have been reported back to the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations, and neither of them can be acted upon, because there is no money for printing them. The deficiency bill has passed the House and been referred to

of them can be acted upon, because there is no money for printing them. The deficiency bill has passed the House and been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but we are unable to obtain a copy of it as it passed the House because we have no money to print.

The sundry civil bill, the Army bill, and the Navy bill have not been acted upon by the House of Representatives.

Now the Senate will see at a glance that, having but fourteen more working days of this session, this is by no means a flattering showing for the condition of these bills, if we hope to pass them at this session. The canse of the present delay is a disagreement between the two Houses upon an appropriation of $350,000 for a deficiency in the congressional printing. The Senate passed a bill appropriating $350,000 for that purpose several days ago, nearly a week, I think, and it went to the House of Representatives and was amended by inserting legislation reducing the compensation of employés at the Printing Office. That has been disagreed to by the Senate. Two conference committees have been held, and finally the second committee agreed, and the bill is now awaiting the action of the President, but it will probably be two days at least before we can have either the post-office bill, the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, or the deficiency bill ready for action by the Senate. The Public Printer is forbidden by law to anticipate appropriations; he risks penal punishment by imprisonment, I believe, if he does so, and the committees cannot proceed unless some means can be taken to have those bills printed.

prisonment, I believe, if he does so, and the committees cannot proceed unless some means can be taken to have those bills printed. Now, Mr. President, I make this statement for the purpose of saying that, as soon as we can get money enough to go on with the public printing, these bills will doubtless be pressed upon the consideration of the Senate all the time. I believe we might possibly act upon one or two of them if they were printed in the RECORD, and I suggest that my friend from California has a statement which he wishes to make upon that subject.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, Lask leave of the Senate that the

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I ask leave of the Senate that the deficiency bill, as it came to the Senate from the House, be printed in the RECORD. That will enable me to examine it in a subcommittee, as I desire to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none; and the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for former years, and for other purposes, namely:

Passed the House of Representatives February 1, 1877. (Calendar day February 9, 1877.)

GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk,

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, one word more as to the deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing. It was stated by myself, last session on the floor of the Senate that the appropriation for public printing was very deficient, and it was then stated that from five to six or seven hundred thousand dollars would be required. The five to six or seven hundred thousand dollars would be required. The appropriation was not made and that deficiency has not yet been supplied. We did appropriate $125,000 for printing the Agricultural Reports at the last session. We have appropriated by agreement of both Houses (but the bill is not yet signed by the President) $350,000 more for a deficiency in congressional printing, and the general deficiency bill provides $200,000 more for that purpose. So the bill of last year was deficient over $675,000; and for the want of that money to-day the public business is delayed and an extra session of Congress endangered. endangered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 859) for the benefit of Andrew Williams, of Weakley County, Tennessee.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 805) relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California;

A bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850; and A bill (S. No. 1251) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 586) for the relief of Adolph von Haacke;

A bill (H. R. No. 4660) to remove the political disabilities of George W. Citz, of Portsmouth, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4661) to absolve Frederick Hinkle from his alle-giance as a citizen of the United States of America.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

Mr. WRIGHT. In view of all the circumstances I think it would, be an economy of time for me to withdraw my call for the regular order, with the understanding that the tax bill shall be disposed of before adjournment this evening. And I take occasion now to say that I shall to-morrow insist upon the consideration of the regular order until it shall have been disposed of. I therefore withdraw my call.

Mr. SPENCER. Under those circumstances, I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) By unanimous consent, the regular order is laid aside, and the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, continued before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York,

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment on principle and shall vote against it in any shape in which it may be presented; but, with the desire of making it as little objectionable as possible, I shall move to amend by striking out, in the first line, the word "property" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "buildings," and by striking out, in the second line, the words "and used;" so that it will read:

All buildings actually occupied for the purposes of education, &c.

I believe that the principle on which the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is based is entirely wrong, and that society is of as much benefit to churches and schools as they are to society; that these advantages are reciprocal, and that there is no more reason why a church should be exempted from taxation than there is why a manufactory should be exempted; and that there is no more reason why an educational institution should be exempted than there is why the store of a tradesman should be exempted. They are all part of the institutions of society; they all receive a portion of the benefits of society, and they ought therefore to bear their share of the burdens. Churches are exempted from taxation simply because in the Middle Ages, in the barbarous epoch of the world, when all the revenues and wealth of empires were concentrated in monasteries and convents, it was for the interest of those who owned them to have them evade their share of public burdens and to exempt them from taxation. But that reason has long since passed away, and the theory of exempting church property from taxation, in my opinion, is theory of exempting church property from taxation, in my opinion, is totally at war with the theory of free institutions.

So, sir, with regard to educational institutions. The Senator from Massachusetts, with a good deal of energy and with considerable eloquence, enforces his theory that they should not bear any portion of the public burdens. If the Senator from Massachusetts were reduced by the exigencies of his fortune to the necessity of commencing a private school for the tuition of scholars to enable him to gain a livelihood, society would compel him to pay a tax on the building in which he carried on his vocation. What peculiar sanctity there is about a corporation that is carried on for this purpose, from which income and revenue and profit are derived, over and above a private venture that a citizen may carry on for the same purpose, I certainly am unable to understand. To my notion there is nothing more sacred about a book than there is about a shoe, and all these things that share the benefits of society ought certainly to bear their share of the burdens. of the burdens.

The amendment I have offered, if I have not already indicated it, is that the word "property" should be stricken out and the word "buildings" inserted, and that the words "used and" should be omitted.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, there is no more apparent fallacy in the world than that which is put forth in opposition to this amendment that it cripples taxation, that it abridges the aggregate of property subject to taxation. Every church that is built in any community, every permanent establishment for the purposes of education, and every establishment for charitable purposes in any community, instead of abridging and diminishing by exempting it from taxation, is an addition to the aggregate property of that community. Strike down the churches in this District; blot them out, and them take a valuation of the property in this District left subject to taxation, its actual value, and you will know that every church that is established here enhances the value of all the other property in this District. So it is of every permanent institution of education in the District and in the land. The locality in which it is established is so benefited by it that the value of all the property around about it is tenfold enhanced by it; and to take from the benefits to taxable property thus conferred upon it, to tax the very instrumentality itself, is to make these institutions and the property devoted to these purposes pay a double tax. The property itself, the men engaged in Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, there is no more apparent fallacy in the occupation itself, are devoted to the elevation of the material interests, as well as the moral and educational interests of the community round about them—not less the material than the spiritual and the moral and the intellectual interest.

My friend from Kansas says that the community are as essential to the church and the school as the school and the church are to the community. That is true in one sense, but in another the church and the school are not erected in the community as every other establishment. the school are not erected in the community as every other establishment and every other vocation and every other calling is, for purposes of gain and profit to the individual, but they are public institutions in the largest and the broadest sense; and there is just as much sense in taxing the public school, the Franklin school-building, to bear the expenses of this District, as there is in taxing any private permanent establishment for the same purposes. There is nothing that contributes so much to relieve the District of the burdens of taxation as that system of schools and of religious education that leads its inhabitants up to fraugal and industrious ways and keeps them acits inhabitants up to frugal and industrious ways and keeps them accumulating here and around about themselves the material for taxation. I am surprised to hear my friend from Kansas say that the State of Kansas owes nothing to any religious or any educational institution that would induce her citizens or anybody from abroad who stitution that would induce her citizens or anybody from abroad who had a large and benevolent heart and ample means to answer to the response of a philanthropic spirit, to establish an institution at Lawrence, or at some other of the flourishing towns there, making it a desirable place for a residence and for the establishment of intellectual and social society, to draw the wealth there to help pay the burdens of taxation round about.

Mr. NICALLS I said nothing of the kind

Mr. INGALLS. I said nothing of the kind.
Mr. DAWES. Strike out the institution of Harvard College from

Mr. DAWES. Strike out the institution of Harvard College from Cambridge and all those who gather there and bring their substance there for taxation, and you blot out a large and essential part of the taxation of that city. And what is true of that is true of this city and is true of every educational instrumentality here.

It is a policy not of an hour or of a day, but a policy that looks to the future character of the institutions among which we live. And if the Senator from Kansas, with his family, had just as lief take up his abode where there is neither church nor school, there can be no disputing about tastes; but I suggest to him that he will not thereby escane taxation.

escape taxation.

It is not the poor man; it is the rich man who is opposed to this. For the benefit of the poor man it is that these institutions of learning are erected, these instrumentalities for obtaining that which the rich man can obtain by his own means. It is for him that they are built, and they ought to be encouraged. It ought to be the policy not only of the States but of the United States to encourage any and every man to set apart for such purposes as these such of his means as he can, contributing thereby his full share toward relieving the burdens of society, and in this permanent method; and I would not say to him "After you have so contributed you shall come in and bear part of the burdens which would otherwise rest upon us."

part of the burdens which would otherwise rest upon us.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President—

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to say, with the permission of Mr. Alcorn. Mr. Fresident—
Mr. INGALLS. I desire to say, with the permission of the Senator from Mississippi, that if the religion and the education of Massachusetts, under which the Senator was reared, teach him to make such misrepresentations as he has made in regard to my sentiments, I think the less we have of them the better, and that a man had bet-think the less we have of them the better, and that a had better be an ignorant barbarian.

Mr. DAWES. One would think so from the remarks the Senator made a little while ago.

Mr. ALCORN. There is no doubt of the correctness of the principle that property everywhere should bear its equal burdens of taxaple that property everywhere should bear its equal burdens of taxation; but it is certainly correct that there are exceptions to this rule. I rose, however, to meet as well as I can at this time the position assumed not only by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] but by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] who take the ground that all property, without discrimination, should be taxed. It is the policy of the States, it has been attempted to be made the policy of this Government to enforce education among the people. By law the Legislatures of the different States levy taxes for the purposes of common schools. Under the municipalities of the States large sums of money are raised for the purpose of fostering the common schools of the country.

These sums being raised, the money arising therefrom necessarily finds itself invested for the convenience of scholars in the erection of school-houses and grounds added thereto for the occupation, for the amusement, and for the comfort of the children. Shall we be told that when the money is raised by taxation for the erection of com-mon-school houses for the education of the children, and for the purmon-school houses for the education of the children, and for the purchase of property upon which to erect school-houses, this property must be subject to taxation and that there shall be no exemption in its favor? If that rule is enforced, the working results will be that the tax-gatherer will be the only person benefited by the operation. The people will be taxed first to purchase the ground and then to erect the school-house. The assessor comes forward and assesses the value of that property, and the assessor and tax-gatherer are the only persons benefited by the operation. Government is conducted upon principles of economy as well as may be, and this principle of taxing the people for the benefit of the tax-gatherer is one that no sensible the people for the benefit of the tax-gatherer is one that no sensible government would ever for one moment tolerate.

Again, if it is proper to exempt property under the circumstances which I have stated, whence comes the principle upon which private individuals shall by voluntary contribution place their money under an act of incorporation in the form of a valuable edifice for the benefit an act of incorporation in the form of a valuable edifice for the benefit of the children of the country for the purpose of advancing the education of the country? They have come forward voluntarily and have contributed their money for the purpose of education, not for the benefit of speculators, not for the benefit of contractors, but for the benefit of society, for the advancement of civilization, for the promotion of education. Upon what principle would you propose to tax them? In this city there is valuable property which is held for purposes of education. Children who live a thousand miles away from this capital are brought here for the purpose of availing themselves of the advantages for education offered by this city. You propose to tax the college buildings and the college property and thereby you reflect back that taxation upon the children who come from the State of Texas or from the State of Mississippi; for as you tax the property that tax must be repaid in the charge imposed on the education of the children.

Is it not to the advantage of the District of Columbia that educa-

Is it not to the advantage of the District of Columbia that education should be cheapened in this District? I think so. Every child who is brought from abroad to this city for education contributes to who is brought from abroad to this city for education contributes to the interest of every single work of art, to every single mechanic, to every laborer and citizen who may be found in this city. The child who comes from Mississippi first takes an omnibus or a carriage at the depot. He contributes to his tax there. He contributes as he goes forward with his education to your book-stores, to your shoe-stores, to your clothiers, to your jewelers, to every enterprise or industry in fact that belongs to the city. Thus it is that the college pays a tax that repays itself in the prosperity, in the business, and in the increased population of this city.

It is not true that these institutions are fostered without giving back to the people a corresponding benefit for all that is done for them.

The Senator from Kansas says that during the Middle Ages, in times that are past, it was the law in regard to the monasteries that they should be exempt from taxation and that church property was also exempt from taxation, and he thinks it is from this precedent that we derive the idea which we now to-day attempt to enforce. That is not true as a matter of fact. The principles that found a lodgment many centuries ago when the monasteries and churches were exempt from taxation were correct in themselves in this that these institutions. from taxation were correct in themselves in this: that those institu-tions were built by contributions and by taxation among the people, and it was not the logic of the legislation of the countries where they were located to tax those institutions for the benefit of tax-gatherers, for such a tax would have resulted in nothing else. If it were the policy of this Government to possess monasteries, churches, and school-houses, the very same principle that operated in the exemption from taxation in that day would be found to operate to-day. But that is not the policy of this Government. We foster no such institution by law; but we do tax the people for the purpose of building up the institution, and the tax-gatherer should find no place there for profit to him. I hold that this is a correct principle, and that this principle when followed out works no injustice to any person. Therefore the amendment which is offered, as modified by the Senator from Kansas, certainly can work no injury to this country, but will in truth work great good to the city of Washington and to the inhabitants thereof. for such a tax would have resulted in nothing else. If it itants thereof.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, a proposition to appropriate public money, no matter how small the appropriation might be, for the benefit of churches or the private schools of the District of Columbia, if brought in here, would be hooted out at once as contrary to the spirit of our Government; and yet what is this proposition but indirectly an appropriation for the support of churches and of private schools? Is it anything else but an indirect appropriation of the public money to aid in the support of private schools and churches? If it is, then perhaps we ought to carry this principle still further. There may be pernaps we ought to carry this principle still further. There may be some of these institutions that are languishing for help, and we ought to increase the amount; we ought to bring in an appropriation bill here to aid them still further than this bill actually does. I think the whole principle is pernicious. I do not believe that the Christian religion in this country will ever suffer or that education will suffer by requiring churches and school-houses to bear their just proportion of the public expenses. If a street is paved in front of a large and elegant church edifice, let the trustees pay their proportion of that expense, and not require some person who may live half a mile off, and who gets no benefit from the church, to pay for the expense.

I think the time will come in this country when the people will discover that the proposition to exempt churches and church property and private institutions from taxation is altogether wrong. I think the growth of that proposition in this country will after awhile teach the people that they must retrace their steps, and make these institutions pay their proportion of the public expenditures.

I shall not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, because if you exempt the building from taxation there is no reason why you should not exempt the apparatus. The whole principle is either right or it is wrong; and we should either exempt both their buildings and their property from taxation or we should exempt buildings and their property from taxation or we should exempt nothing. I shall vote to exempt nothing, whenever I can get an opportunity to do so.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I dissent entirely from the views expressed by the Senator from Arkansas and by the Senator from expressed by the Senator from Arkansas and by the Senator from Kansas. I do not think the churches of this country or the private institutions of learning are correct subjects of taxation. I do not think that this bill is perfect by any means. It proposes to exempt church buildings used for public worship. That is all the exemption given to churches, and under the provisions of the bill, if it should pass, you could then levy a tax upon the communion service and upon the very Bible on the altar. I am in favor of exempting not only the churches but all the appurtenances of the churches, exerciting conjected with them so far as the service is required.

recorything connected with them, so far as the service is required.

Therefore I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from New York, not only exempting the buildings but exempting the campus grounds around, which are requisite for the boys to play. I dissent entirely from the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas, and also from the remarks of the Senator from Kansas. We cannot do without the churches of this land. We all know how they are without the churches of this land. We all know how they are built. They are built by private contributions; they are sustained by private contributions; the pastors of the churches are paid by private contributions. It is a very considerable tax to those who give to their support, and yet it is proposed further to subject that property, which was built by the private contributions of the people who attend those institutions, to a further tax, because of the liberality which they have displayed in the building of these institutions. They are for the public use of the people. They are built by a comparatively few people, and yet they are for the public enjoyment of everybody in the community.

The Senator from Pennsylvania said it was not fair to exempt this property while you tax the property of the poor people. The Sena-

The Senator from Pennsylvania said it was not fair to exempt this property while you tax the property of the poor people. The Senator from Pennsylvania knows very well—for I have no doubt he has contributed out of his abundant means to the erection of churches in different localities—that they are usually built by men of means, at least in some sections of the country, and they are thrown open to the common enjoyment of everybody. Instead of being an oppression to the poor man it is greatly to his relief, and the men of wealth contribute of their substance to erect a church wherein to worship. So it is with reference to colleges. There are hundreds of men who could not educate their children in anything above the common schools of the land, if it were not for the liberality of those who contribute to build up schools of a higher grade. It is no hardship upon any portion of the community to allow schools and academies built up by private contributions to be exempted from taxation, because the advantages of those institutions are open to all alike. Hundreds of poor men have been able to send their children to institutions of that kind simply because they have been erected by the provisions of those in simply because they have been erected by the provisions of those in more liberal circumstances than themselves.

It operates, I say, therefore, as no hardship to any portion of the tax-paying people of the country because these churches and institutions of learning are exempted from the operation of tax laws. I tutions of learning are exempted from the operation of tax laws. I shall vote for exempting not only these institutions, but other institutions. There is one institution in this city, a very admirable one, the Louise Home, which under the operation of this bill would be taxed, unless the bill is amended. That institution was erected by the private contributions of one man as a home for aged women; and yet under the operation of this bill that valuable institution, so creditable to the generosity of the donor, would be subjected, now that his money has been put into that building, to the effect of a tax. I am in favor of exempting that, and if no one else moves the amendaam in favor of exempting that, and if no one else moves the amend-ment, I shall move to exempt specifically the Louise Home. It ought not be subject to tax. Neither would I consent that churches used for worship or any of the appurtenances of churches, the organs or or worship or any of the appurtenances of churches, the organs or communion-service or anything of the kind, should be subject to taxes imposed upon the property of this District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Let the amendment to the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York is to insert at the end of the eighth section the follow-

Sixthly, all property owned and actually occupied and used for purposes of edu-cation by incorporated colleges and academies.

It is proposed to amend that by striking out the word "property," in the first line, and inserting "buildings," and, in the second line, to strike out the words "and used," so that, if amended, the amendment will read:

All buildings owned and actually occupied for purposes of education by incorporated colleges and academies,

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not like the words of limitation in the amendment, and I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute when it shall be in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "sixthly," in the first line of the amendment, and insert "buildings devoted to purposes of education."

Mr. MERRIMON. That amendment would make the section con-

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina to strike out all of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York and to insert "buildings devoted to purposes of education."

Mr. CLAYTON. That would take in all private schools?

Mr. MERRIMON. It includes all buildings devoted to education, and it conforms to the exception of church buildings devoted to public worship. My object is to prevent any invidious distinctions. I do not see why incorporated schools should have the benefit of this exception when other schools do not.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to apologize to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] for some remarks which I do not think now ought to have been made, and to inquire of him in that connection, after making the apology, which I think is due, and to inquire of those who support this bill and oppose the amendment, to tell us why it is that they exempt the Corcoran Gallery from taxation. It does seem to me that it is exempted upon precisely the same principle which is contained in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. I think everybody would say it would be a shame and an outrage to tax the Corcoran Gallery. Why? The Corcoran Gallery is a free gift to this city for purposes that are of great benefit to the city itself and to all the people who live in it. It contributes to make the city a center of attraction, to draw people here, and thereby to draw taxable property within the reach of this very law. It makes all the property in the vicinity of it of more value, and therefore would give this proposed law more power to reach property by taxation. Every view of it which can be taken justifies the exemption of the Corcoran Gallery from taxation, and I cannot see for the life of me any distinction in the purposes, the object, the effect, the origin, between that property and all property devoted honestly and properly to the purposes of education generally. It is education of the highest order which comes of the Corcoran Gallery. The people, the poor people, everybody, goes there and is educated and is made a better citizen, is less likely to become a burden upon the District, less likely to become a charge upon it, more likely to contribute more largely to that which makes the District property itself valuable for the

That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following, and no other, namely: First, the Corcoran art building.

It makes no reference to the statuary and no reference to the paintings; and I wish to know of the Senator from Massachusetts if he thinks the paintings and statuary under that provision of this bill would be exempt from taxation?

Mr. DAWES. I should as soon think of taxing what the Senator himself alluded to a little while ago: the communion-service of a

Mr. SAULSBURY I want the exemption in the bill. It is not in

Mr. SPENCER. As the commissioners construe the language of the bill it excludes them.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to know upon what principle it is that we exempt from duty all imported books that are devoted to purposes of education, and philosophical apparatus, and works of art? Why do we exempt the ornamentations of churches, painted windows, and statuary from duty?

Mr. BOUTWELL. We do not now.

Mr. DAWES. We did until we made a mistake in the Revised Stat-Mr. DAWES. We did until we made a mistake in the Revised Statutes. It was by an accident that we got 10 per cent. upon them; that is the only way it was done. There is something that justifies, in the common opinion and consent of mankind, such exemptions. It does seem to me to be something worthy of consideration and it is a narrow and a mistaken policy. Even if we consider nothing in the world but the best means of getting the most money in the form of taxation out of the property of the District, it is a mistaken view of the question not to encourage the setting apart for all these purposes, out of the bounty and abundance of those who have means, property for the permanent use to which this property is devoted. It would be a great mistake to say to men "your property which you take and devote permanently to these uses shall be compelled always to bear the same burdens that my property that is not devoted to these uses does." It is a mistake and discourages such consecration of property, and we ought never to indulge in it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am sorry to find that my taste is not so refined as that of the Senator from Massachusetts. A taste for the arts is acquired only after a great deal of time. I heard somebody once say that it took three generations to make a gentleman. I believe it takes four or five generations to enable people to appreciate high art, especially painting and sculpture and their kindred arts. To my mind there is no reason for this at all. I do not pretend to have my taste cultivated so much as other gentlemen; and yet I have seen about all the fine paintings of the world. Of course my mind is obtuse and I cannot take in that fine cultivation so readily as other people; but I can see no reason why the Corcoran Art Gallery should not be taxed as well as any other building. If a Senator comes to this town and builds himself an expensive and beautiful house, he adds just as much in proportion to the money he expends there, in the taste he puts into it, as any public building does; and yet you make him pay taxes for the whole of it.

I believe that great honor is due to Mr. Corcoran not only for the art gallery, but especially for that home for indigent and good women. I think that is the noblest of his charities, and one that will live long after his name will no longer be heard in connection with other donations. If anything will connect his name with the world generations

I think that is the noblest of his charities, and one that will live long after his name will no longer be heard in connection with other donations. If anything will connect his name with the world generations after this, it will be that noble charity which is put up there. But it is no reason why those buildings should not pay city taxes as well as any other property. If Mr. Corcoran wanted the Corcoran Art Gallery to be free from taxation, he could have contributed a fund only a little larger than he gave, making a sinking fund to pay the taxes of the building which he had put there; and so he might have done in regard to the Louise Home.

I would not vote to tax that old woman's home—I say "old woman" because it is a better word than "old lady"—I would relieve that if I did anything. But I can see no reason why the humble man shall be taxed to keep up your streets, to make your pavements, and to plant these beautiful trees which are about to be planted, a bit more than these gorgeous buildings that have been put up by charity. It will require only a little more economy and care in the management of those buildings to pay the taxes and relieve them from this onerous charge which is made against them, of living at the expense of others. To my mind there is no justice in it.

I think the Senator from Delaware said we benefited religion by exempting these edifices from taxation. It is no such thing. Why should not the honest and quiet and industrious Mennonite of Pennsylvania, who builds no church but who preaches to his neighborhood in his own house, have his house exempted from taxen may sylvania, who builds no church but who preaches to his neighborhood in his own house, have his house exempted from taxation as well as a church here in Washington to which people go often more for fashion's sake than from motives of devotion? Not always, but often, there is not a bit of honesty in it. Every community ought to be taxed in proportion to the property belonging to that community; and a man with his small but ought not to be taxed for the purpose of relieving the rich man who wants a gargeous changle to warshing and a man with his small hut ought not to be taxed for the purpose of relieving the rich man who wants a gorgeous chapel to worship in. I do not believe in it, Mr. President.

I rose more at this time to pay a just tribute to Mr. Corcoran than anything else. I think that he has been not only a benefactor here, but a noble one. I think he has done a great deal of good, and I would not be willing to give a vote or say a word which would detract from his high merits.

The PRESIDENT was toward. The processing the process of the p tract from his high merits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the character of this amendment. I do not say that the exception as to schools should be broader than the exception as to churches. The exception as to churches as adopted by the Senate is as follows:

Church buildings used for public worship.

I propose to make the language of exception as to schools conform to that:

Buildings devoted to the purposes of education.

That is broad and comprehensive. I see no reason why incorporated That is broad and comprehensive. I see no reason why incorporated school buildings should be exempted and why others that are not incorporated and devoted to such purposes should not be exempted. My object is to make all buildings devoted to the purposes of education exempt from taxation. I can see no reason why that class of buildings should have preference over another class. The truth is that if there should be a preference it seems to me it ought to be in favor of those schools that have not so much means.

Mr. CLAYTON. May Leek the Senstra a question?

favor of those schools that have not so much means.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to ask the Senator whether his amendment would not exempt all private boarding-schools?

Mr. MERRIMON. I think not.

Mr. CLAYTON. It would exempt all buildings devoted to education?

Mr. CLAYTON. It would exempt all buildings devoted to education?

Mr. MERRIMON. If a building is devoted to education, of course it would be exempt. If a lady kept a house which would be devoted exclusively for purposes of education, it would be exempt undoubtedly.

Mr. CLAYTON. I understand that has been a great evil here in this District. Under the old law there were instances of ladies keeping very large houses, and having, say, half a dozen boarding-pupils. Under the provision of the old law that house and all the appurtenances thereto were exempt from taxation. I am told that heretofore that has been a great evil in this District, and that these methods have been resorted to by boarding a few scholars in their houses to thereby be exempt from taxation; and if the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is adopted it would lead to the same thing.

Mr. MERRIMON. I inserted the word "devoted" to exclude that very idea. The house must be "devoted to the purposes of education." Mr. CLAYTON. What does the word "devoted" mean in this case? It would not be devoted forever, but for the time being. Mr. MERRIMON. Set apart.

Mr. CLAYTON. Must it be dedicated forever to the purposes of education 7

Mr. MERRIMON. The Senator can insert the word "exclusively."

I ask the Clerk to insert the word "exclusively." Here is a building put up by private enterprise and encouraged by private enterprise wholly devoted to the purposes of education, and because it does not happen to belong to an incorporated company it must be taxed. It seems to me the discrimination is not just or wise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Buildings devoted exclusively to the purposes of education.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, because it limits the exemption to buildings. There is no exemption of the library, of the apparatus, of the grounds necessary in the enjoyment of the public schools. This exemption is limited to buildings. I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan,] which meets this whole case. It exempts the property used for school purposes.

Mr. MERRIMON. Then my friend would give the schools an advantage over the churches.

wantage over the churches.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; I would amend the clause relating to the

Mr. SAULEBURY. No; I would amend the clause relating to the churches. I hope the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will be voted down.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to say one word. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, and then I shall vote against the amendment after it is adopted. I think this amendment is logical, if the rule proposed by the Senator from New York is correct; that is to say, there is no reason why you should exempt institutions of learning that are held by incorporated companies; that does not supply to institutions of learning award by private individuals. If that is to say, there is no reason why you should exempt institutions of learning that are held by incorporated companies; that does not apply to institutions of learning owned by private individuals. If the one should be exempt, the other should be exempt also. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, because I would make it as broad as possible; but I shall vote against the amendment, as amended, after it has been adopted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he knows of any institution of learning, either owned by a private individual or by a joint stock company, which is not incorporated, in this city?

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know whether there is or not, nor do I care. I am striking at the principle. I do not know how soon there may be one if there is not now.

Mr. KERNAN. As to the proposed exemption of every building devoted to education I will state that there are fashionable ladies in the city of New York who rent entire buildings, and gentlemen of wealth pay $1,500 a year to have their daughters educated there. They become great money-making institutions, and the proprietors get rich. But these public academies and colleges are never used to make money. They are generally built with donations, and those in charge seek to educate as many as possible at as cheap a rate as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] proposed as a substitute to the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.]

KERNAN.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 14. Mr. MERRIMON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to say that I would not object to this amendment if it were not so limited as it is. I cannot consent to vote that an incorporated institution which may be ever so rich shall be exempt from taxation, while a private building devoted to the purposes of education shall be taxed. I will not do that.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 33, nays 19; as follows:

19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Barnum, Blaine, Bogy, Boutwell, Cockrell, Conver, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Morrill, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, and Wallace—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Clayton, Cragin, Harvey, Ingalls, Kelly, Logan, McMillan, Merrimon, Oglesby, Sargent, Teller, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Christianey, Conkling, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Mitchell, Morton, Randolph, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Whyte, Windom, and Withers—23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "Home," in the fifth line of section 8, the words "Louise Home and appurtenances;" so as to read:

That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following, and no other, namely: First, the Corcoran art building, free public library buildings, church buildings used for public worship, the Soldiers' Home, Louise Home and appartenances, and grounds actually eccupied by such buildings.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I should like to know what is meant by "appurtenances?" It is a very comprehensive word.

Mr. SPENCER. I suppose it means the furniture.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Then I would amend it by inserting the word "furniture." I move that "appurtenances" be stricken out and that the words "furniture within the building" be

Mr. SAULSBURY. I accept the amendment.
The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.
Mr. MERRIMON. In line 3, of section 8, after the word "building," I move to insert "and the works of art therein;" so as to read:

That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following, and no other, namely: First, the Corcoran art building and the works of art therein.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. WRIGHT. After line 61 on page 6, after the word "law," I move to insert the words "and whether heretofore or hereafter made;" so as to read :

And 10 per cent, per annum thereon, or if any property two years after having been so bid off at any sale whatever in the name of said District, under this or any other law, whether heretofore or hereafter made, is not or has not been so redeemed as aforesaid, then the commissioners of the District or their successors in office shall, in the name and on behalf of the District of Columbia, apply to the supreme court of said District, sitting in equity, for the purpose of enforcing the lien acquired as aforesaid by said District on the property as aforesaid.

I offer this for the purpose of making more clear the amendment adopted at the instance of the committee. I understand that it is entirely acceptable to the commission and to the committee.

Mr. SPENCER. It is acceptable. I accept it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON. In line 4 of section 8, after the word "buildings," I move to add the words "and their furniture;" so as to read:

Church buildings and their furniture.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no objection, I think, to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the last section of the bill: That this act shall remain in force as the tax law of the District of Columbia for each subsequent year after June 30, 1878, until repealed.

There are some provisions of this bill which are not in the nature of a tax law. Is it the intention that those provisions only shall remain in force until June 30, 1878? If it is the intention that it shall remain as a permanent part of the law, I suggest to the Senator from Alabama whether it might not be well to strike out the words "as the tax law of the District of Columbia."

Mr. SPENCER. I think that is a good suggestion. The object is to make it a permanent bill, and not to pass it each year.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest therefore to strike out the words "as the tax law of the District of Columbia" in the first and second lines of the eighteenth section.

of the eighteenth section.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not strike out line 3 also, so as to read: "that this act shall remain in force until repealed?"

Mr. SPENCER. This is to be the tax law for one year, but this section was framed to avoid the necessity of bringing in a tax bill section was framed to avoid the necessity of bringing in a tax bill every year.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suppose the Senator intends by the section that the bill shall remain in force for all purposes until repealed.

Mr. SPENCER. But the first section of the bill says that it is for the support of the government of the District for the next fiscal year.

Mr. WRIGHT. But the last section makes it the law for all coming time until you repeal it. I would make it the law by my amendment for all purposes as well as for tax purposes.

Mr. INGALLS. Amend the title.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes, we might amend the title.

Mr. WRIGHT. The title would not make any difference.

Mr. SPENCER. We would have to amend the bill in several places. I think the first amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa ac-

I think the first amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa accomplishes the object.

Mr. WRIGHT. It would accomplish brevity to make it as the Senator from Kansas suggests, but I think it better to strike out the words in the eighteenth section "as the tax law of the District of Columbia;" so as to read: That this act shall remain in force for each subsequent year after June 30, 1878, until repealed.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the amendment is adopted I will call the attention of the Senator from Alabama, who has the bill in charge, to the language of sections 3 and 4, in which it is provided—

That one half of the tax levied by this act upon real and personal property shall become due and payable on the 1st day of November, 1877, and the other one-half of such tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of May, 1878.

The same reference to the year is also contained in section 4. It therefore seems to me that, inasmuch as these sections have been framed with reference to the years 1877 and 1878, this amendment ought not to be made, and that in fact the entire section 18 ought to be stricken out. It would be impossible to levy or collect taxes under this bill hereafter unless it is entirely remodeled.

Mr. SPENCER. I am inclined to think the Senator from Kansas is right about that, although the commissioners of the District say not. They say this will be made a permanent act, but it does not seem so to me

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state to the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Kansas that my object in offering the amendment is that there are other things in the bill than a mere tax law. The section provides:

That this act shall remain in force as the tax law of the District of Columbia * * until repealed.

The effect of that would be to have it discontinued as to everything else than the tax law after this year. If it is the intention to have it dropped as to everything except the tax law, then the section is all right as it stands.

Mr. SPENCER. That was not the intention. The intention was to have it a permanent act so as not to have to go through this thing every year. That was the object of the bill. I hope the amendment every year. That was the object of the bill. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to strike out the words "as the tax law of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was across to the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to call attention to a proviso at the end of section 5. Section 5 provides for the sale of real estate, and the parties have a period in which they may redeem the lands, and there is a saving clause in the proviso in favor of minors and other persons under legal disabilities. The provision is that they may redeem in one year after the disability is removed, but it requires them to pay 10 per cent. upon the purchase-money.

And also the value of improvements which may have been made or erected on such property by the purchaser or by the District of Columbia, while the same was in his, her, or their, or its possession.

In the first place I shall move to strike out the word "ten" wherever it occurs in the provise and insert "six," so that the minor shall not be charged more than 6 per cent. I shall also move in line 98 to strike out the words

And also the value of improvements which may have been made or erected on such property by the purchaser or by the District of Columbia, while the same was in his, her, or their, or its possession.

If that provision applies it is no saving at all to any minor or any person laboring under any disability. If they are required to pay 10 per cent, upon the purchase-money in order to redeem and then in addition to that to pay for the improvements which the purchaser may have seen proper to put upon it, he may go on and put improvements there for the very purpose of depriving the minor or person under disability of the ability to redeem. I am, therefore, opposed to encouraging any improvements upon such property by purchasers until after the disability shall have been removed and purchasers until after the disability shall have been removed and when the time for redemption has passed.

My first amendment, therefore, is to strike out wherever it occurs the words "10 per cent." and insert "6 per cent.," and the other is the amendment which I have indicated, commencing in line 98.

Mr. SPENCER. This is the law as it stands now, but it is immaterial to me whether it is 10 per cent. or 6 per cent.

Mr. ALCORN. Ten per cent. I think is not too much in this case. Money is worth much more than 6 per cent. If you have but 6 per cent. running through the minority of a child, the guardian as a matter of course would let the property be sold. There is no compounding of the interest. Six per cent. for ten years would make it to the interest of the orphan that the property should be sold. The property is worth more than that. Money is worth all of 10 per cent. here or anywhere else in this country, and I am opposed to making it 6 per cent.

6 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 93 of section 5 it is proposed to strike out "10 per cent." and insert "6 per cent." in line 97, to strike out "10 per cent." and insert "6 per cent." and after the word "assessments," in line 98, to strike out the words:

And also the value of improvements which may have been made or erected on such property by the purchaser or by the District of Columbia while the same was in his, her, or their, or its possession.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Upon further examination of this bill I am convinced that section 18 is radically wrong. The Senator from Alabama states that this bill is intended as a permanency for the taxation of subsequent years. I have already called the attention of the Senator to the fact that the words 1877 and 1878 occur repeatedly in connections where they cannot be ignored and which would render this nections where they cannot be ignored and which would render this bill ineffectual and unavailing for subsequent years.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator can move to strike out those years.

Mr. INGALLS. There is another difficulty, and that is that section 17 has been inserted, which provides for the advancement by the Government to the District of $500,000 between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of November, 1877. If this is to be a permanent law and the reason are improved in the second section would him the second section. the years are immaterial, the seventeenth section would bind the Government to advance each year hereafter to the District of Columbia $500,000 between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of January, irrespective of the revenue each year. Therefore, I am convinced that the section should be stricken out and that the last section should

That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

I move to strike out section 18 and insert:

That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, the principle incorporated into this bill by the adoption of the amendment exempting private incorporated educational institutions from taxation is one which I regard as so erroneous that I must withhold my vote from the bill and shall take occasion to vote against the passage of the bill for that

So the bill was passed.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS.

Mr. RANSOM. I beg leave to present the petition of Theophilus H. Holmes, of North Carolina, praying for the removal of his political disabilities, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I cannot perform this duty, knowing as I do the great virtues and disinterested patriotism of this venerable man, without expressing the hope that that committee will promptly report a bill in accordance with his petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to present the petition of Frank Moore, of

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to present the petition of Frank Moore, of Mississippi, late assistant internal-revenue assessor in the northern district of Mississippi, praying for relief, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. I wish to make a remark in reference to this petition, and I would be glad to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Claims. In 1866, when the Government of the United States began to extend the collection of internal revenue in the Southern States, the Secretary of the Treasury was of opinion that no iron-clad oath, as it is called, was necessary in the premises, but instructed the internal-revenue collectors to permit their deputies to take the modified oath. They went forward and took the modified oath, and performed the service required; but after that time a point was raised that they could derive nothing for their services, nor receive any pay, because they could not take the oath prescribed by law. Here is a man who did work for the Government in 1866. He is a good man. He did his work in good faith. He has an account regularly made out here, and the Government have been chaffering with him for the last ten years because he could not take the iron-clad oath. I hope the committee will give careful consideration to the papers, and not keep this party waiting for his money because he cannot conform to an oath that for all practical purposes amounts to nothing at all.

The PRESIDENT was tempore. The petition will be referred to the amounts to nothing at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the unfinished business be called up.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

ate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of the said first-named act, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. GORDON to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lien thereof to in-pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Gordon to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert Senate bill No. 1134, reported from the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment which I shall propose either to the original bill or to the substitute, and I ask that it be printed in the Record. I do not ask that it be read now. I may desire to modify one feature of the amendment after I have made some calculations with reference to the provision relating to the time when the bonds shall be paid.

The amendment was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

The amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as fol-

A bill to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the Government bonds advanced to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, under and in pursuance of the act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and the acts amending the same or supplemental thereto, and for the settlement of the claims of the Government on account of said bonds.

and to secure to the Government the use of the same for pestal, military, and pellemental thereto, and for the settlement of the claims of the Government on account of said bonds.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembed. That for the purpose of liquidating the claims of the Government on account of the bonds advanced under the said act of July 1, 1802, and the acts amending the same or supplemental thereto, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to carry to the credit of the sinking fund for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the laws of the State of California, the successor by consolidation organized under the successor of the California of the mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores for the Government under the acts aforesaid, up to and including the 1st day of December, 1876, which, if not amounting at said date to the sum of $1.00,000 for each of said companies, shall be made up by the respect. The successor of the States of the California of the States of the States of the States of the California of the States of the States of the States of the California of the States of the States of the State

Mr. SARGENT. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California moves that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 16, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 15, 1877.

The House re-assembled at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PLEASURE YACHT MOHAWK.

Mr. BLOUNT obtained the floor and said: I rise to move that the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the naval appropriation bill, but am willing to yield to gentlemen who wish to submit requests for unanimous consent, to be disposed of without debate.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4658) changing the name of the pleasure yacht Mohawk to Queen; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, with leave to report at any time, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PIPER. I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution of the Senate for printing additional copies of the report of the special committee on Chinese Immigration be taken up for consider-

There was no objection; and the resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the joint special committee on Chinese immigration, with accompanying testimony, of which 1.500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 3,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was concurred in.

Mr. PIPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPLORATION OF MEXICAN FRONTIER.

Mr. MACKEY, by unanimous consent, introduced (by request) a joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) authorizing the establishment of a commission for the scientific exploration of the northern states of Mexico and the territory of the United States adjoining the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN CLINTON.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Claims, as a substitute for House bill No. 59, a bill (H. R. No. 4659) for the relief of John Clinton, postmaster at Brownsville, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSION BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. RUSK. I ask unanimous consent that several pension bills from the Senate which are now on the Speaker's table may be taken up and referred to the Committee on Pensions, for the reason that the committee will have a meeting to-morrow, and as there will be a night session of the House next week for the consideration of such bills it is necessary that these should be considered in time to be acted

There being no objection, bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider:

A bill (S. No. 36) amending the pension laws so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have since its termination enlisted in the Army of the United States and become disabled;

A bill (S. No. 1118) granting a pension to Mrs Amy King; and A bill (S. No. 1143) for the relief of the legal heirs of Ann Lynch.

GEORGE W. CITY.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill (H. R. No. 4660) to remove the political disabilities of George W. City, of Portsmouth, Virginia, and to have it put on its passage at this time. The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) for the removal of all political disabilities imposed upon George W. City, of Portsmouth, Virginia, by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States by reason of participation in the sphellion. participation in the rebellion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there a petition accompanying the bill?

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Petition of George W. City, of Portsmouth, Virginia, late assistant engineer United States Navy, for removal of political disabilities.

The petitioner would respectfully state he held a commission prior to 1861 as first assistant engineer in the United States Navy and afterward entered the service of the Confederate States. He prays his political disabilities may be removed by act of Congress.

GEORGE W. CITY.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds oncurring therein.

Mr. O'BRIEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREDERICK HENKLE.

Mr. MONROE. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with the unanimous recommendation of that committee, a bill (H. R. No. 4661) to absolve Frederick Henkle from his allegiance as a citizen of the United States of America, and to put the bill on its passage at this time. I can explain the reason for it in a moment.

The bill, which was read, provides that whereas Frederick Henkle, a native of Germany and a naturalized citizen of the United States, having accepted office in the civil service of the German Empire and desiring to remain in such service and renounce his American citizenship, and having petitioned that his naturalization as such citizen be abrogated, therefore it is enacted that the declaration of intention of said Frederick Henkle to become a citizen of the United States of America and his naturalization as such citizen in all their incidents and effect are abrogated and declared to be of no effect, and he is absolved from his allegiance as such citizen.

Mr. MONROE. I can explain in a moment the object of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no; let it go.

Mr. MONROE. Very well; if there is no objection to it, I ask that it be put on its pressure.

it be put on its passage.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MONROE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF SAIL-MAKERS IN UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania. I ask, Mr. Speaker, on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs, unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the fur-ther consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4300) to regulate the appoint-ment of sail-makers in the United States Navy, and that it be put upon its passage at this time.

The bill, which was read, provides that no civilian or other person not belonging to the Navy shall be appointed to take charge of or superintend the sail-makers' department of any of the navy-yards, but said appointment shall be made from the sail-makers who are in the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose there is no objection to that bill?

Mr. CONGER. Yes; I object to it for the reason that there are many sail-makers who would like employment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can object without giving his

Mr. CONGER. I object, and do give my reason.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, re-ported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

THOMAS LUCAS.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4662) for the relief of Thomas Lucas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4663) to amend section 4220 of chapter 3, title 48, Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Regulation of commerce and navigation;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IOWA RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 4168) to amend section 1 of the act of May 12, 1864, for a grant of lands to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State, returned from the Senate with an amendment, and to move non-concurrence in said amendment, and to ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill S. No. 1251, for the removal of the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, in order that it may be put upon its passage at this time.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second

The bill, which was read, provides for the removal of the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States upon Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there a petition?

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. There is.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed, two-thirds concurring therein.

SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

On motion of Mr. CROUNSE, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1163) for the relief of settlers on the public lands under the pre-emption laws was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMANDA M. SMYTH.

Mr. MacDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1862) for the relie of Amanda M. Smyth, widow of the late Brevet Major-General

Thomas A. Smyth, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MacDOUGALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the lable.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADOLPH VON HAACKE.

Mr. MacDOUGALL. I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 586) for the relief of Adolph von Haacke and to ask that the bill be now put upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. After that I will call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Adolph von Haacke the full pay and emoluments of a major, from the 8th day of August, 1863, to the 1st day of March,

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows: Add at the end of the bill these words: "Less whatever pay he may have received as captain or other subordinate officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be again read as now amended.

The bill, as amended, was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire from what committee this bill

The SPEAKER. From the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MacDOUGALL. If the gentleman from Indiana desires it, the report is here and can be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think this is a time to legislate in this way. I had supposed that these bills were being introduced for refer-

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the bill could be read for information, after which objections, if any, to its consideration would be in order. The bill was read and there was no objection to its con-

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that.
Mr. MacDougall. I think if the gentleman will hear the report read he will not object to the bill.
Mr. HOLMAN. I know that I have no right to object now.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MacDOUGALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HASTINGS AND DAKOTA RAILROAD.

Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4664) extending the time for the completion of the unfinished line of railroad of the Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider. The SPEAKER. No bill introduced and referred by unanimous consent can be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

E. M. WILLIAMS.

Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4665) for the relief of E. M. Williams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SAINT LOUIS IRON MOUNTAIN BANK.

Mr. KEHR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4666) for the relief of the Iron Mountain Banking Association of Saint Louis, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGERS, ETC.

Mr. ROBERTS. I am directed by the Committee of Accounts to report the resolution which I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is bereby, authorized to employ the following additional force, to wit: six messengers, three laborers, six pages, at the usual compensation, which shall commence from the date of their employment: Provided, They shall have respectively taken the oath of office prescribed by law: And provided further, That their term of service shall expire with

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to inquire of the Chair if this is a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rule that is not a report privileged at this time. If objected to, it cannot now be entertained.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

JOHN E. CATLETT.

On motion of Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 807) for the relief of John E. Catlett, of Hannibal, Missouri, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Misseuri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of Claims; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED ORDNANCE.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4487) donating condemned ordnance to Post No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, New Bedford, Massachusetts; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALBERT H. PFEIFFER.

Mr. JOHN REILLY also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommenda-tion, the bill (H. R. No. 2787) for the relief of Albert H. Pfeiffer, of Colorado Territory; and the same was laid on the table, and the ac-companying report ordered to be printed.

LAKE GEORGE (FLORIDA) SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Railways and Canals, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. No. 4456) to authorize William A. Dorner and others to construct a ship-canal at the head of Lake George, Florida. It will take but a few minutes to dispose of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will object if it is likely to give rise to any de-

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I think it need not occupy more than two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for information, after which

Mr. CONGER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the

I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for consideration at this time, the bill (H. R. No. 859) for the benefit of Andrew Williams, of Weakley County, Tennessee, and that it be passed, with the amendment of the Senate thereto.

The amendment of the Senate is as follows:

Provided. That such land-warrants shall not be issued to the said Andrew Williams until the patents issued to B. R. McNabb shall be returned to and canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and that fact be certified by him to the Commissioner of Pensions.

There being no objection, the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. BOONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF FRANCIS GRAHAM.

Mr. EDEN, from the Committee on War Claims, by unanimous consent, moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4542) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Graham, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

No objection being made, the motion was access?

No objection being made, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McFARLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill No. 805, relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California, be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the title to the lands certified to the State of California, known as indemnity school selections, which lands were selected in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, lying within Mexican grants, of which grants the final survey had not been made at the date of such selection by said State, is hereby confirmed to said State and its vendees, in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, for which the selections were made.

Sec. 2. That where indemnity school selections have been made and certified to said State, and said selection shall fail by reason of the land in lieu of which they were taken not being included within such final survey of a Mexican grant, or are otherwise defective or invalid, the same are hereby confirmed, and the sixteenth or thirty-sixth section in lieu of which the selection was made shall, upon being excluded from such final survey, be disposed of as other public lands of the United States: Provided, That if there be no such sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, and the land certified therefor shall be held by an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration, such purchaser shall be allowed to prove such facts before the proper land office, and shall be allowed to purchase the same at $1.25 per acre, not to exceed three hundred and twenty acres for any one person: Provided, That if such person shall neglect or refuse, after knowledge of such facts, to furnish such proof and make payment for such land, it shall be subject to the general land laws of the United States.

Sec. 3. That the foregoing confirmation shall not extend to the land settled upon by any actual settler claiming the right to enter not exceeding the preservibed legal quantity under the homestead or pre-emption laws: Provided, That such settlement was made in good faith upon lands not occupied by the settlement or improvement of any other person, and prior to the da

SEC. 4. That this act shall not apply to any mineral lands, nor to any lands in the city and county of San Francisco, nor to any incorporated city or town, nor to any tide, swamp, or overflowed lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object; it ought to come up on the regular order

Mr. HOLMAN. Before unanimous consent is given I wish to in-quire from what committee this bill comes? And I wish to reserve the point of order.

Mr. McFARLAND. This is a Senate bill from the Committee on Public Lands. They have considered it and instructed me to report it and to move that it be adopted in lieu of the bill (H. R. No. 3364) referred to the Committee on Public Lands at the last session.

The committee have fully considered the matter and have come to the conclusion that the Senate bill covers all the grounds contemplated by the original bill (H. R. No. 3364) which was introduced at the last session and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Since that time Senate bill No. 805 has been passed, and all I ask now is that the bill have agent as it was a table.

since that time Senate bill No. SUo has been passed, and all I ask now is that the bill be passed as it now stands.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the same bill that was passed then?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the bill was passed.

Mr. McFARLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SECTION 29 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4667) to amend section 29 of chapter 255 of the United States Statutesat-Large

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. DURHAM. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. As it changes existing law I think it should properly be referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the proper reference of this bill would be to the Committee on the Judiciary.

It was so ordered.

Mr. ROBERTS, by unanimous consent, offered the following reso-

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into any irregularities, abuses, or frauds that may exist in the letting of mail contracts or the execution of existing laws relating to such lettings, or contracts based thereon, with a view to ascertaining what change or reformation can be made, so as to promote integrity, economy, and efficiency; and further, that the said committee be, and they are hereby, authorized to send for persons and papers and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. I object to that resolution, as this is a matter which has been investigated to death for the last few years.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into—

Mr. LANE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, as I Mr. LANE. I nope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, as I desire to move to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage the bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late.

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon for a moment.

Mr. LANE. I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the claims of such persons who were duly qualified thereto and made bona fide settlements upon lands in the State of Oregon and Washington Territory under the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands," and the legislation supplemental thereto, which have been included, in whole or in part, within the limits of any reservation made by the United States for military purposes subsequent to the date of such settlement and prior to the completion of the period of residence and cultivation required by said act, which reservation has been, or may hereafter be, declared abandoned by the Secretary of War as no longer necessary to the United States for military or other purposes, shall be adjudicated and patented the same as other donation claims arising under said act and supplemental legislation, as though such reservation had never been made: Provided, however. That no claim of any settler coming within the purview of this act shall be validated or confirmed the value of whose improvements, at the time such reservation was made by the United States, has been ascertained and paid for by the Secretary of War, as required by the aforesaid act of September 27, 1850, and the legislation supplemental thereto.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a matter which it seems to me ought not to

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a matter which it seems to me ought not to pass without some explanation. I ask that the gentleman from Oregon have a reasonable time wherein to explain this matter.

Mr. LANE. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that this bill has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. I would ask that the report of the Senate be read, which I think would develop all I can say in the premises relating to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It now comes from the Committee on Public Lands of the House?

of the House?

Mr. LANE. It has never been referred.
Mr. HOLMAN. Has it ever been before the committee?

Mr. LANE. No, sir. I am informed that it has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate and passed that body without any objection whatever, and I trust the gentleman from Indiana will do me the kindness to withdraw any objection whatever is the committee of the committee.

tion he may have to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I see the chairman of the committee [Mr. SAYLER] is present, and perhaps he is more familiar with the facts of this bill, and I would like him to explain it, as I think it ought to be very carefully considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the report to be read, and will reserve the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850, report as follows:

The fourteenth section of the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands," authorized the President of the United States to reserve from the operation of said act such portions of the public lands as he might deem necessary for forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful uses. That section contains this provise:

"Provided, That if it shall be deemed necessary, in the judgment of the President, to include in any such reservation the improvements of any settler made previous to the passage of this act, it shall in such case be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause the value of such improvements to be ascertained, and the amount so ascertained shall be paid to the party entitled thereto out of any money not otherwise appropriated."

Under this law the military officers of the United States, under authority of the President, made quite a number of reservations, including in several instances portions of the claims of settlers upon which improvements had been made before the passage of the act of Congress. Some of these reservations were made merely with the view that possibly they might be needed for military purposes, but were never occupied as such, and were soon afterward abandoned by the military authorities as unsuitable and unnecessary. The Secretary of War never caused the value of the improvements of the settler to be made, as provided by the law, and no compensation was ever made to him. In some such instances, whereno compensation was made to the settler for his improvements, he continued to reside upon and cultivate the land as required by the act of Congress, until the t

The subjoined letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office is in conformity with these views:

Sir: In reply to your note of yesterday, accompanied by Senate bill No. 859, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, for the relief of cetrain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850, and asking to be advised whether said bill meets the views of this office, I have the honor to state that said bill fully accords with the views of this office; and I would respectfully recommend its passage.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON, Commissio

Hon. NEWTON BOOTH, United States Senate.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. With this statement of facts I make no further objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SAYLER. I will say that this bill has not been before the Committee on Public Lands, and I know nothing about it except from the statement of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Lane] and the report which has been made, and certainly from these statements and the letter of the Commissioner of the Land Office I think the bill ought to be passed and that this property should go to these parties.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill, and it was passed.

Mr. LANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making ap-and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, Mr. Mills in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question when the committee rose was upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair in relation to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whitthorne.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. I called for a further count upon sustaining the decision of the Chair. I will withdraw the call.

The CHAIRMAN. No further call being made, the decision of the Chair is sustained, and the pending question is upon the amendment moved by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whitthorne.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it the following:

the following:

And no expense shall be incurred by the United States on account of said com-mission except the regular and current salaries of the persons employed on the commission.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I accept the amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is upon the amendment as

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move as a substitute for the amendment as modified that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That a commission be created, in the manner hereinafter provided, whose duty it shall be to examine and inquire into the present condition of the Navy of the United States, as to its personnel and materiel, and into the laws and usages now governing the naval service; to consider the relation of the commercial to the national marine; what active floating naval force, including the type and class of vessels, their armament and equipment, should be maintained in time of peace, and what should be kept in readiness for actual service in event of sudden war; what number and kind of vessels should be constructed annually to make up for decay, destruction, and casualty; what changes are required in naval architecture, in ordnance, in armor, and in the instruments of defensive warfare by the advance of naval science; how the Government can obtain the best designs and models of the same; and especially to consider what measures are necessary to protect and extend our rapidly growing commerce on the Pacific Ocean and in Asiatic waters; and to report to Congress, through the President, during the month of January, 1878, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the results of their investigation, recommending such legislation as they may deem requisite to bring the Navy up to the highest standard of effectiveness consistent with wise economy.

That the said commission shall consist of two Senators, to be designated by the President of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, such as and Representatives being such as will be also members of the Forty-fifth Congress; and four officers of the Navy, to be designated by the President, two of whom shall be officers of the line, not below the rank of captain, who may be selected either from the active or retired list of the Navy; is hereby directed and empowered to furnish the commission with all facilities within his control for the convenient prosecution of their labo

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to reserve all points of order on this sub-

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will make but a brief explanation of the substithe I have offered for the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whitthorne.] Substantially my substitute is the same as the original amendment. I will state that I am opposed to the original amendment, but if it is to be adopted I desire to have it modified as I propose by my substitute.

The first difference between the substitute and the original amendment is this: I strike out of the amendment the words "of nine members" in the first section. The second difference, and the only important one, is that I omit from the commission the General of the Army. I do not see the propriety of making the General of the Army one of this commission, if it is to be appointed; for he has nothing to do with naval affairs, and I take it for granted that he knows very to do with naval affairs, and I take it for granted that he knows very little about them. When a military commission was provided for last year in the Army appropriation bill, it was not proposed to name the Admiral of the Navy as one of that commission.

A further difference is, that instead of two officers of the Navy I propose that there shall be four officers of the Navy upon this commission. That will make the commission consist of nine members, of whom four will be officers of the Navy, two of the line and two of the staff, to be selected from the retired or the active list of the Navy see the President may deem proper. as the President may deem proper.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will permit me I desire to call his attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whithere on Naval Affairs after a full and careful examination of the whole

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. O'BRIEN. I understand that perfectly. I understand further also that the chief information which the Naval Committee obtained upon this subject, the strongest appeal made to them, and the best report given of the whole matter, were given by just such officers as those which I propose shall be placed upon this commission in lieu of the officers of the line that are provided for by the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

have also included in my amendment the provisions suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and therefore my amendment is not liable to any objection that would not properly obtain against the original amendment. I will say again that the main difference between the two propositions is that I leave off the commission the General of the Army, but place upon it four officers of the Navy instead of two, two of those officers to be from the staff and two from the line, and all of them to be selected at the discr-tion of the President, either from the active or the retired list of the Navy.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The amendment submitted by myself was an amendment that was suggested by the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House, whose organ I am upon this occasion. We sought fairs of this Honse, whose organ I am upon this occasion. We sought to avoid if possible the very question now thrust upon the House by the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.] Any one at all familiar with the internal administration of the Navy must know that one of the existing evils in that service is this war between officers of the line and of the staff. We have sought to avoid that altogether in our amendment, and leave it discretionary with that altogether in our amendment, and leave it discretionary with the President of the United States as to whom he shall appoint.

I am free to admit, as an individual, that I trust the President of the United States, if he shall ever be charged with the performance of this duty, will appoint those officers of the Navy who have its honor and interest at heart, and who have such a bright comprehension of the difficulties which now surround it, the difficulties in the way of its progress, that, not being tied down by any previously conceived ideas, they will look only to the interest of the Navy and the honor of the country. With simply this idea in view the committee sought to avoid this difficulty, and I trust the House will not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. RIDDLE. Will my colleague permit me to ask him what is the object of having the General of the Army a member of this commission '

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I thank my colleague for asking me that question. It has been asked outside. The General of the Army is an educated gentleman, familiar with the military wants of the United States. A proper naval policy, as every gentleman must see, necessarily takes into consideration the proper coast defense of the country. In the progress of naval science, it has been maintained that monitors hereafter shall be our fortresses for that purpose. It was thought proper by the Naval Committee that, in considering this question in all its relations, the military mind, standing more or less independent between the civil mind as represented in the House and the Senate and the naval mind as represented by the naval officers upon this commission, should stand equally poised to pass judgment upon suggestions that may come before this commission.

Mr. CONGER. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last ord. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'Brien] seems to me an improvement upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, which I have opposed. If such an amendment is to be adopted, I certainly think it desirable that there should be upon this commission a sufficient number of persons thoroughly familiar with the naval service; and I think it especially important that the commission should embrace representatives of one or two or more of those important bureaus for and through which largest portion of our naval appropriations is expended. advice and counsel of practical men, including the Admiral of the Navy, should be called in to the assistance of legislation, for the information of the House and the country. I should have had no objection to the proposition at all, had it confined this commission entirely to men from the naval service. I think it should have been so confined. I can see no reason why two Senators should be put upon it. I can see no reason (unless we admit the inferiority of members of this House to Senators) why we should have three members of the House to balance the two Senators. But the gentleman from Tennessee perhaps has his own estimate of the relative importance of these two classes of public officers, and thinks three to two a fair proportion in ability, in power of judgment, and in capacity for obtaining information. taining information.

Inasmuch as this amendment of the gentleman from Maryland not only provides a larger representation from the naval service, but spec-ifies that at least two of these officers shall be from those important bureaus for which much of the money appropriated is expended, I submit that this is a desirable amendment, and ought to be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the proforma amendment.
The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. O'BRIEN, it as not agreed to; there being—ayes 25, noes 65.
The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. WHITTHORNE.
Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

And the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the commission herein provided for.

Mr. HOLMAN. That proposition is subject to a point of order, I believe. I reserve all points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair presumes that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER.] is about to discuss the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I expected to hear the clarion voice of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HOLMAN] raised against the proposition to create this commission. But I want to call him on with the proposition to create this commission. to ask him or any other member whether it can be supposed possible to carry out the objects of this commission without the expenditure of some money. It is a fraud upon the House to attempt to say so. My friend from Indiana has on other occasions opposed the creation of such commissions, and has lectured us upon the bane of the present times, the creation of new offices. Hence I had expected to hear him rise and oppose this proposition. I think it is right; but my friend will agree with me that, if the provision is to have any force, an appropriation to carry it out is necessary. The gentleman from Indiana will not be here in the next House (and I may say I regret it) to favor a deficiency appropriation to carry out the objects of this commission. I say it is no more than honest, it is no more than fair to make to-day the necessary appropriation for carrying out these objects.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] was not here last evening, so that he is not fully informed as to the history of this It was the express stipulation that no expense should be incurred by the United States from the creation of the commission.

Hence it is at least a perfectly innocent measure.

Mr. FOSTER. It certainly will be "perfectly innocent" if no appropriation is to be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. It goes through this House, if it goes through at all, with an express and positive understanding, not only on the part of every gentleman present but upon the face of the record, that these patriotic gentlemen, members of the House and Senate and officers of the Government, are to perform their duty on this commission without any compensation whatever beyond that which they would receive as members of Congress and as officers of the Government in

Mr. FOSTER. Are they to pay their own traveling expenses?

Mr. HOLMAN. The United States Government is to incur no expense. My friend thinks it impossible that members of Congress and public officers should rise to the attitude of performing these official duties without increased compensation. He ignores this gratifying instance of pure patriotism in which gentlemen are willing, without extra compensation, to devote days and weeks to labors beyond those extra compensation, to devote days and weeks to labors beyond those required by the law or by virtue of their respective positions under the Government. And I submit to my friend that it is ungracious on his part, inasmuch as they are willing to perform this service gratuitously, to try to defeat this measure indirectly, as he seems to do by this amendment, in declaring this commission will be a drain upon the Treasury. I regard this commission in its present form simply and entirely innocent. I never saw any good come from any of these commissions, but as this is to cost nothing I do not object to it.

Mr. FOSTER. It is innocent in this respect, for if there is no appropriation nothing can be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I never saw any of these commissions produce any good, but inasmuch as this is to cost nothing I hope some good will result from it and therefore do not object to it as it now stands. I do insist on my point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman really think that it will cost

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; or otherwise I should vote against it.
Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman will be one of the members of the commission.

Mr. BEEBE. Is debate exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. It is,
Mr. DANFORD. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether now, within two weeks of the close of the session, in the present condition of our appropriation bills, it is not bad policy to ingraft upon one of them this legislation?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and a message from the Senate, by Mr. Sympson, one of its clerks, announced concurrence in the amendment of the House to the bill (H. R. No. 234) to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg.

It further announced concurrence in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes.

It further announced the passage of a concurrent resolution that the monetary commission created by the joint resolution of August 15, 1876, be allowed until the 24th of February, 1877, to submit their report; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage, without amendment, of an act (H.

R. No. 7) to provide for the sale of exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New York, to the city of Brooklyn.

It further announced the passage of a bill (8. No. 1238) making appropriation for the expenses of the electoral commission; in which concurrence was requested.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BEEBE. Is it in order to submit an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be an amendment in the third degree, and not admissible.

Mr. BEEBE. I understand debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a question of order pending on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood the point of order was withdrawn. Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair expected the gentleman from Indiana would raise the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. So I did, and insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out.

the amendment out.

Mr. BEEBE. I move to strike out the last word; I do not know what it is and it does not matter for my present purpose, as I wish to speak to the main question.

I rise for the purpose, Mr. Chairman, of stating, although I have not been long a member of the House of Representatives, yet I have served long enough to know the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is leading us into a class of legislation which has proved to be the most dangerous of any resorted to in this body. I recollect when the Centennial proposition came before the House that by the action of the gentleman from Indiana, or some other gentleman equally zealous in guarding the public Treasury, it was provided the governor of the State of Pennsylvania should certify to the President that no expense should be involved, nothing which could by any possibility come from the Treasury of the United States, and I have, although serving only last year and this in this body, seen that it has already cost this Government a million and a half of dollars.

mission whatever convenience it may require, it will cost this country something, and next year the story will be necessary that to vintry something, and next year the story will be necessary that to vindicate the honor of the country we must pay the expenses incurred in other nations. Sir, it is better to put the expenditure at some amount; it is better to limit it some way, and say to the gentlemen who shall comprise this commission they shall not expend beyond a certain sum of money, and then if they do it they will come here without a particle of excuse. But if you pass this proposition as it is now before this committee, what are you saying to the country? What to the civilized word? When you authorize this commission you necessarily bind yourselves to pay the essential, necessary expenses of that commission. For that reason I am opposed to this Trojan horse which is to walk into the Treasury of the United States when the gentleman from Indiana will not be here to defend that Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say but a word. The gentleman from

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say but a word. The gentleman from New York assumes that this measure came from the Committee on

New York assumes that this measure came from the committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BEEBE. O, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman corrects me. The measure did not come from the Committee on Appropriations. They have not considered it. The gentleman having charge of this bill, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] thought it was simply a proper courtesy on the part of the Committee on Appropriations not especially to oppose a proposition coming from another committee of the House that had charge of the subject-matter for which these appropriations were being made; and the Committee on Appropriations have simwere being made; and the Committee on Appropriations have simply as a committee not opposed the measure. But in the absence of an assurance from the gentleman who submits this proposition that it should not entail on the Government a dollar of expense, and without the provision being incorporated in the measure that it should be attended with no expense, and the understanding in advance—not an assumption, but a positive understanding in advance—that it should not cost the Treasury one dollar, I should have earnestly opposed the measure. But I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have never seen any beneficial fruits result from these commissions.

Mr. BEEBE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a ques-

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. BEEBE. Does the gentleman from Indiana believe it possible to have this commission do any work at all without incurring expenses which must be paid?

Mr. HOLMAN. If these gentlemen think proper to meet in this Capitol, which I suppose is the object, no expense will be necessary. The commission is to consist of officers of the Government, members of the Sangta having an interest in this of the House and members of the Senate having an interest in this subject-matter—members, perhaps, at the present time of the respective naval committees, identified with the Government in its general operations. These gentlemen can meet here in the Capitol perhaps a month in advance of the next meeting of Congress and gather facts together to submit to the next Congress; and all this can be done without incurring a dollar of expense.

Mr. BEEBE. What is meant, then, by the provision that the Secretary of the Navy shall provide facilities for this commission? Are they to sail about the halls of this Capitol?

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, expect this to be carried out with-

Mr. HOLMAN. If this measure gets through on the assurance that it involves no expense, and expense should then be incurred, it will be a very deliberate fraud, and I know that my friend from Tennessee will be a party to no such fraud.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] is very well aware, a large amount of testimony has already been is very well aware, a large amount of testimony has already been taken, disinterested and non-partisan, submitted by over sixty officers of the Navy, commencing with the Admiral, rear-admirals, commodores, captains, commanders, staff officers, line officers. All this evidence has been collected and is now ready for examination.

But very little actual testimony beyond that is necessary, and that is to be had from searching the records of this Government and of other governments. We expect these to be examined and reviewed by this commission by this commission.

And I will say to my friend from New York [Mr. Beebe] that it is not necessary to sail about anywhere. The facilities contemplated, as provided for by the bill, are, in the event of its being necessary, for this commission or tribunal to examine various reports; for instance, the report on the result of the squadron exercise of the squadron of Key West, and the report of the result of the squadron exercise off Beaufort.

Mr. BEEBE. If the gentleman from Tennessee found it impossible to examine into the condition of the navy-yards of this country without taking his committee to the navy-yards, how does he expect this commission to examine and report upon a better condition of naval affairs by merely holding a solemn conclave in the halls of this the Treasury of the United States, and I have, although serving only last year and this in this body, seen that it has already cost this Government a million and a half of dollars.

Now if you send this commission roving about the world, with a proposition that the Secretary of the Navy is to subject to this comprehend the difference between the two states of facts or quesproposition that the Secretary of the Navy is to subject to this comit will be there will be but very little of practical testimony to be taken in the examination of witnesses.

Mr. FOSTER. Will it cost anything †

Mr. WHITTHORNE. And I will say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] that I trust there will be found ready to serve on this commission officers in the Army and Navy, and members of the Senate and House of Representatives, who are paid by the month their regular salaries for the discharge of their public duties, and who would be unwilling to demand from the Public Treasury any more compensation.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. When this amendment was first drafted in the Naval Committee there was a section 4 providing for the expenses of the commis-

Mr. BEEBE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER.]

Mr. FOSTER. I submit the following as an amendment, to come in at the proper place.

Mr. BEEBE. I have an amendment to offer which I know will meet the views of my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I beg to withdraw my amendment, and I will hear that of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BEEBE.]

Mr. BEEBE. I offer the following amendment:

That the chairman be instructed to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reduce the appropriations so that the amount of the aggregate thereof shall not exceed $9,000,000.

Mr. BEEBE. Not one step has been taken by the Secretary of the Navy; not a motion has been made by the President of the United States to inquire into the proposition submitted to their attention constates to inquire into the proposition submitted to their attention concerning the proper management of affairs in the Navy. So long as the Navy is administered with such indifference on the part of the President of the United States, this recklessness and extravagance on the part of the Secretary of the Navy, this glaring and infamous negligence on the parts of the chiefs of the bureaus of the Navy, I am unwilling to vote $12,000,000 for the administration of the Navy for a single year. It is prepostations single year. It is preposterous.

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, if you believe this department of the Government is corruptly administered, you have no partment of the Government is corruptly administered, you have no excuse, you cannot justify yourselves to your constituents or to the country in voting this enormous sum of money for carrying on the Navy Department of the Government. It is in the very nature of its terms an outrage upon the credulity of the people to ask them to believe you when you are making your protest in favor of retrenchment and economy, and then at the next step vote with reckless indifference $12,000,000 of the people's money, to be expended by a man whom you have yourselves, by your own deliberate action, condemned as corrupt and unworthy. The CHAIRMAN. The resolution of the gentleman is not germane to the bill, but it may be submitted as a separate motion.

Mr. BEEBE. It certainly is within the power of the Committee of the Whole to instruct its chairman to make a particular report to the

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BEEBE. That is what I propose by my resolution.

Mr. CONGER. Then I rise to oppose the resolution. I would like Mr. CONGER. Then I rise to oppose the resolution. I would like to know what particular animosity the gentleman from New York [Mr. Beebe,] has to the Secretary of the Navy that has slept so long? When the resolution to which he refers was offered here in the House I understood what the object was; I understood the political object that was intended to be effected by its bearing upon the campaign. I could understand why our democratic friends should rush pell-mell after such a resolution as that and adopt it without regard to the facts in the case.

facts in the case.

But the election is now past. Even if that animosity still lingers in the breasts of brave men against this Secretary of the Navy, in common justice to themselves they ought to be soothed by the unanimous report of their own committee, which exonerates the Secretary of the Navy from all blame whatever in the administration of his Department—a report adopted by the House long after the resolution to which the gentleman refers was adopted—exonerating the Secretary of the Navy from the least shadow of reproach, and holding him up to the people to whom the gentleman appeals and to the world as a model officer, who in the midst of very intricate and delicate duties has so managed the affairs of his Department as to command the unanimous approbation of his political enemies, his political foes. That ought to soothe the irritation of members, even if they were vastly exasperated and excited when they passed the resolution to which the gentleman refers. It ought at least to be a kind of Winslow's soothing sirup to their agitated feelings.

Why is it revived to-day? Why is this attack made upon the Secretary of the Navy, who has been thus honorably and justly and worthily exonerated from all blame in the administration of his Department, and not only that, but he has been held up to the admiration of the world as perhaps the most efficient Secretary of the Navy that we have ever had? managed the affairs of his Department as to command the unanimous that we have ever had f

Mr. EDEN. To what report does the gentleman refer?
Mr. CONGER. The report exonerating the Secretary of the Navy.
Mr. EDEN. From what committee?
Mr. CONGER. From the Committee on the Judiciary.
Mr. BEEBE. As to that I would say—
Mr. CONGER. I have not time now for the gentleman to say what he ought to have said when he was on the floor. I must go on with the subject-matter of my remarks or I shall be called to order by the Chairman—a very good Chairman, and very prompt in the exercise of his duties he is, too. [Langhter.]

his duties he is, too. [Laughter.]

Why this animosity to the Secretary of the Navy? "Dwells such insatiate wrath in these mortal minds?" Why this bitter unseemly insatiate wrath in these mortal minds?" Why this bitter unseemly attack upon a man who is not here to defend himself? Why is he to be called infamous? Merely because a resolution passed by the democracy used the term "infamous." Who does not know that these are the mere catch-words of the House for partisan purposes? Let the gentleman state the facts, and then let the House judge whether there be infamy or not. But these are immaterial constructions.

I find here a gentleman willing to cut down the appropriations for the Navy Department to the extent of $3,000,000 because his tastes are not suited by the action or the appearance of two officers in that Department. The sum of $3,000,000 is to be taken from this appropriation bill because he does not like the Secretary of the Navy, because he does not like the naval constructor; that gentleman would take off $3,000,000 because those two officers are distasteful to him. Who next, as they say in the barber-shop, who is next in turn to get up here and move to cut off three millions more because two other officers are objectionable to him?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I am not debating this question under the fiveminute rule as applicable to the bill. I understand that this resolution is an independent proposition, and I prefer to have my hour

Mr. BEEBE. I move to strike out the last word—not the last word of the gentleman from Michigan.
Mr. CONGER. No; leave me that.
Mr. BEEBE. The Chair has saved me that trouble. The gentleman wants to know what animosity toward the Secretary of the Navy actuates me. None in the world. But I ask him what animosity actuated him last year when he sat silent in his seat and permitted this resolution to be passed without recording himself against

Mr. BEEBE. The gentleman will be kind enough to conform to the rules of the House, if not to the rules of courtesy.

Mr. CONGER. If that last remark has a personal application, I desire the gentleman to take it back. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEEBE. I will settle outside of the Hall, if the gentleman likes.

Mr. CONGER. Ah, well; that will do.

Mr. BEEBE. There is no animosity actuating me in this matter, except that animosity which every honest citizen of this country, every honest official of this country, should feel toward an extravagant if not a corrupt administration of public affairs.

Again, sir, the gentleman tells us that last year he understood the object. In virtue of what arrogation of authority or prescience or wisdom on his part does he assume to sit in judgment upon the motives of other members of this House? Sir, I submitted that resolution to the House last year. I secured a vote upon it. That vote stigmatized the chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair as a dishonest man; and the gentleman raised not his voice against it.

dishonest man; and the gentleman raised not his voice against it.

The facts reported at the time sustained the committee.

I know that the gentleman feels called upon to constitute himself the defender, the bosses of the buckler of the Secretary of the Navy; but, sir, great as is his provess, he wages an unequal war. The people of the United States have condemned the Secretary of the Navy.

The Judiciary Committee of this House has not reported that he has been washed in the waters of that committee and brought here whiter than the driven snow or the fleeces of the lamb. No such action has been taken. They have said that there are not facts sufficient to warrant his impeachment and trial before a Senate that tried and acquitted Belknap.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will my friend yield a moment? I stated this morning to my friend from Maine that he was mistaken in the this morning to my friend from Maine that he was mistaken in the statement I understood him to make yesterday, that the Judiciary Committee had made report upon this subject. Upon the reiteration of the statement by the gentleman from Maine a few moments ago I went to the member of the Judiciary Committee who has charge of the report, and with whom I had made a personal agreement that I should be present whenever he did report. I asked him whether he had at any time made that report and he said he had not; that he had it yet in his pocket.

Mr. BEEBE. I do not care to go into a question which is so patent a matter of history as the one to which the gentleman from Tennessee has referred. It is unimportant as compared with other matters pressing upon the consideration of this House in direct connection with this bill and which have pressed upon the consideration of the country too.

The gentleman tells us that there is nothing laid to the charge of the administration of the Navy Department. Why, sir, it has been found to be extravagant and corrupt, and there is no apologist for it outside of this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman

The CHAIRMAN. As the debate has taken a somewhat partisan range, the Chair will have to recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] and afterward he will recognize the gentleman from IMP. CONGER] and afterward he will recognize the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BEEBE. Is it in order for me to withdraw the amendment? The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. CONGER. I had risen to speak upon the amendment. I hope the gentleman does not wish to withdraw it lest I should speak upon it. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan can renew it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. I do not does for the purpose of cutting off the gentleman from Michigan in his five minutes. But my point of order is this: A motion that the committee rise and report a bill to the House is not, as I understand the rules, a debatable motion. If it were, it seems to me it would be almost impossible ever to get a bill reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that he would have sustained that point when the question first arose. But the debate has evidently taken a partisan aspect. After the gentleman from New York [Mr. Beebe] had spoken his five minutes, it was but fair to allow the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONCER] to speak five minutes in reply. The gentleman from New York having now spoken five minutes again, the Chair has accorded the floor to the gentleman from Michigan for five minutes additional, after which he will recognize the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

char has accorded the hoor to the gentleman from Michigan for hye minutes additional, after which he will recognize the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Blount.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I shall insist on the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that neither the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee nor the gentleman from New York denies my statement that the report of the Judiciary Committee exonerates the Secretary of the Navy from all blame. But how do they meet my statement? The gentleman from New York says the report is in the pocket of the chairman. All right; it is the same report; it has been printed; it has been perhaps recommitted. I do not know why and I do not care why. But the country has had that report, and it is undisputed. Now, why does the gentleman desire at this late stage of proceedings to revive that old campaign resolution and those old campaign stories?

Mr. BEEBE. Why did the gentleman support the resolution?

Mr. CONGER. To the discredit of the American people and of American politics (I take to myself and my party our fair share of the reproach) that kind of vituperous calumniating use of language, whether in resolutions of this House or on the stump, is indulged in to such excess that no American citizen to-day attaches the least importance to campaign assaults of that sort, and those of us who make them are applied assaults of that sort, and those of us who make them are applied as a first who were the near the resolution.

importance to campaign assaults of that sort, and those of us who make them are subjects of ridicule from the people. If we have any sensibility we ought to go into quiet places and become humpbacked by stooping down to despise ourselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEEBE. May I ask the gentleman why he supported the resolution ?

Mr. CONGER. Why should these things be revived now? I come back to the question, What is the animus of the gentlemen? What excites their animosity to interrupt the course of business by bringing in at this time a rehash of old political calumnies which have heretofore been embodied in resolutions or spoken on the have heretofore been embodied in resolutions or spoken on the stump?

Sir, the gentleman will find, as all good men in this House will find, that the administration of the affairs of the Navy during the last four years, under the present Secretary of the Navy, has been as economical, as pure, as honest, as faithful—as the committee reports—as the administration of any other officer who has filled that station. History will give him that place. The common judgment of the people gives it to him to-day. And that hard laboring-man, who commenced with his ax and his adze, as thousands of American boys have done, to work out his own fortune, in his poverty, by labor and by toil, until he has become the chief naval constructor of our Navy, he is to be attacked by members of this House with their kid gloves; he, one of the laboring-men of the Union, when he is not here to defend himself. Ah, the time was when the democracy protected the rights of the laboring-classes of the country and did not attack them when there was no opportunity for their defense!

Mr. SHEAKLEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BEEBE. The Administration does not attack Belknap, but, on the contrary ordered the dismissal of the indictment against

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman attacks the only man in the Navy to whom he has referred, who by his own labor and toil raised himself in the working masses by every successive step in the progress of naval building to be the chief naval constructor of the United States.

Mr. BEEBE. A man who went to a member of this House and offered him $400, goes to the house and takes tea with the chief of that burean. The gentleman had better read the testimony and understand what he is talking about.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. BEEBE. I say, sir, that a member of this House was insulted by the offer of a bribe of $400 by a man who was taken to the bosom of Isaiah Hanscom immediately on his arrival here as a witness.

Mr. CONGER. Why did not the man report it?

Mr. BEEBE. It has been reported to the House, but the gentleman has not read the evidence.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. It is perfectly plain from the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan that he has not read a word of the evidence.

Mr. BEEBE. He does not know what he is talking about, as is frequently the case with him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. BEEBE. I ask one moment. The Chair stigmatized what I said as a partisan arraignment. If the Chair feels called upon to stand by that assertion, I am content. I meant nothing partisan.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from New York that he characterized the remark of the gentleman as a party attack—that it took that direction, and it was only fair to let party attack—that it took that direction, and it was only fair to let the gentleman from Michigan make a party attack on the other side. Mr. BEEBE. I meant no party attack.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BLOUNT, that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House. Mr. CONGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the motion was to report the bill to the House and to recommit the bill with instructions.

the hotton was to report the bill to the House and to recommit the bill with instructions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moved, as a substitute for that, that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 2.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The motion, as amended, was adopted.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under considera-tion the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry

Mr. BLOUNT demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BEEBE demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following reto message from the President.
The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives :

To the House of Representatives:

I return the House bill No. 3156, entitled "An act to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States," without my approval. My objection is to the single provision which amends section 3823 of the Revised Statutes.

That section is as follows:

"SEC. 3823. The Clerk of the House of Representatives shall select in Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas, one or more newspapers, not exceeding the number allowed by law, in which such treaties and laws of the United States as may be ordered for publication in newspapers according to law shall be published, and in some one or more of which so selected all such advertisements as may be ordered for publication in said districts by any United States court or judge thereof, or by any officer of such courts, or by any executive officer of the United States, shall be published, the compensation for which, and other terms of publication, shall be fixed by said clerk at a rate not exceeding $2 per page for the publication of treaties and laws, and not exceeding $1 per square of eight lines of space, for the publication of advertisements, the accounts for which shall be adjusted by the proper accounting offi-cers, and paid in the manner now authorized by law in the like cases."

The bill proposes to amend this section as follows:
"By striking out all after the word 'in' in the first line to the word 'one' in the third line, and inserting therefor the words, each State and Territory of the United

Prior to 1867 the advertising of the Executive Departments had been subject to the direction of the heads of those Departments, and had been published in newspapers selected by them, and on terms fixed by them. In the year 1867, (14 United States Statutes-at-Large, pages 466-467.) while the ten States above named were yet unrestricted, and when there existed a radical difference of opinion between the executive and legislative departments as to the administration of the Government in those States, this provision was enacted. Subsequently, during the same year, (15 United States Statutes-at-Large, page 8.) so much of this provision "as relates to the publication of the laws and treaties of the United States "was extended to all the States and Territories, leaving the advertisements ordered by Congress and by the Executive Departments unaffected thereby. The continuance of this provision after the reconstruction acts had taken effect and the bringing it forward into the Revised Statutes were probably through inadvertence.

The existence of this section 3823 of the Revised Statutes seems to have been ignored by Congress itself in the adoption of section 3941, authorizing the Postmaster-General to advertise in such newspapers as he may choose. But the present act, if it should go into effect, would compel him and the other heads of the Executive Departments, as well as all the courts, to publish all their advertisements in newspapers selected by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. It would make general in its operation a provision which was exceptional and temporary in its origin and character. This, in my judgment, would be unwise, if not also an actual encoachment upon the constitutional rights of the executive branch of the Government of the United States should be given, if not an officer of the United States under article 2, sect

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 14, 1877.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to say a few things before I ask for a vote on this veto message. There were a great many supposed inaccuracies in the Revised Statutes sent to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I believe I stated on a former occasion that there were over two thousand. When the committee came to present there were over two thousand. When the committee came to present this bill, after having a joint meeting with the similar committee on the part of the Senate, we reported the bill, which I hold in my hand and which the President has vetoed, making corrections amounting to some three or four hundred in number. After the bill had passed both Houses and gone to the President he seems to have sent it to the Attorney-General; and out of all these corrections that have been made, making the Revised Statutes, as we supposed, nearly perfect, the President vetoes one provision, thereby destroying the work of this committee for the whole Congress.

Being apprised on yesterday that this message would be sent in, I called a meeting of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and also had a conference with certain members of the Senate committee, and I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the veto message should be sustained. When this recommendation was sent down by the Treasury Department, which the President has vetoed, it is proper and due to the House committee to say that we rejected the proposition. The bill was passed by the Senate, and in a conference between the Senate committee and the House committee the House committee gave way on this point, as it now turns out they should not have done.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman refer to the particular proposition covered by the President's veto?

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, sir. I hope the gentleman from Maine will not misunderstand me. The proposition was not put by the Senate upon the bill after it passed this House, but it was put on by the Senate committee when we had the joint conference as to perfecting the original bill as presented to the true Houses.

the original bill as presented to the two Houses.

Mr. HALE. So that it is not the fault of the House committee †

Mr. DURHAM. It is not the fault of the House committee, and I think the chairman of the Senate committee will do us the justice to Now what I desire to say is this. The committee have instructed me to ask the House to sustain the veto of the President. They have further instructed me to ask unanimous consent to report immediately further instructed me to ask unanimous consent to report immediately another bill to this House leaving out this one single correction, and to ask the House to pass that bill immediately. If they do not, then all the work of this committee and all the work of the committee of the Senate during this whole Congress will have been wasted, and this whole matter will have to go before the Committee on the Revision of the Laws at the next session of Congress. And there can be no correct publication of the Revised Statutes of the United States unless this course is pursued.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is the provision vetoed by the President an omission from the Revised Statutes of 1873 reported by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, or is it a mistake of the committee or of the joint committee in reporting the bill now under consideration?

Mr. DURHAM. If the gentleman from Illinois had heard my statement, he would have learned that this was a supposed omission in the Revised Statutes sent to the committee from the Treasury Department. It turned out not to be an omission, and the committee of this House so decided when it was before them; but the committee of the Senate decided that it was an omission, and consequently the supposed correction was inserted in the bill.

Now what I ask, Mr. Speaker, is that the vote be taken upon this veto message. I am instructed by the committee, after a conference with some members of the committee of the Senate, to ask that the veto message be sustained. I shall then immediately present a new bill—because that is the only way the object sought can be accomplished—leaving out this objectionable feature, and I shall ask to have that bill put immediately on its passage.

Mr. HALE. The new bill being like the old one except in this respect?

Mr. DURHAM. Precisely like the old one, which I hold in my hand, with the single and solitary exception that it leaves out the clause which has been vetoed by the President of the United States.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The question is: Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill?

Mr. HALE. Those voting no, sustain the President's veto?

The SPEAKER. The pegative vete sustains the veto.

The SPEAKER. The negative vote sustains the veto.

The question was taken, and there were—yea 1, nays 211, not voting 78: as follows:

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask leave of the House to take from the Speaker's table and refer back to the Committee on Appropriations the bill making appropriations for the diplomatic service.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the amendments acted upon at this time?

Mr. SINGLETON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SINGLETON. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read the first amendment of the Senate, as follows:

For salaries and expenses of the United States and Spanish claims commission, amely, for commissioner, $4,000.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move that the House concur in that amendment with an amendment to reduce the salary from $4,000 to $3,500. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer this amendment. We have had consultations with the Senate Committee amendment. We have had consultations with the Senate Committee and that arrangement was satisfactory to them, and we therefore make this salary $3,500 instead of $4,000, which is the present salary. The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The next amendment of the Senate was on page 12, line 10, to strike out the words "of consul at $3,000" and insert "$4,000."

Mr. SINGLETON. That is similar to the other amendment, and I are instructed by the Committee on Amenoration to the other than the committee of the consultation of the consult

The next amendment of the Senate was on page 10, line 25 of the bill, to strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. SINGLETON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move that this amendment be concurred in with an amendment so as to make the amount $750.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was then concurred in.

The last amendment was upon page 10, line 26, to strike out "$7,700" and to insert "$10,212.50."

Mr. SINGLETON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to concur in this amendment with an amendment so as to make the amount $8,962.50.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the votes of the House upon the amendments of the Senate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LATE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolutions; which were read, considered, and unanimously adopted:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That 2,000 copies, in book form, suitably bound, of the memorial addresses on the life and character of Hon. Michael C. Kerr, late Speaker of the House of Representatives, be printed; 500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

And be it further resolved, That a steel engraving of the late Speaker be procured for the front title page of the said copies.

SIOUX NATION OF INDIANS, ETC.

Mr. BOONE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill of the Senate No. 1185, to ratify an agreement with certain bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians, and also with the Northern Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians. This bill was made the special order immediately after the passage of the naval appropriation bill, and from day to day until passage of the navar appropriated disposed of.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be now read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will then be read.

The bill was then read.

Mr. MILLS. I move to amend the bill by adding to the first paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the removal of the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory; and the President of the United States is hereby directed to prohibit the removal of any portion of the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory until the same shall be authorized by an act of Congress hereafter enacted.

Mr. SEELYE. As I told the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] yesterday, I am perfectly willing that this amendment shall be considered by the House.

Mr. Mills. I understood the agreement to be that the amendment should be made to the bill. I never should have consented that this bill should be brought before the House had I not understood the friends of the bill that the state of the bill that the from the friends of the bill that my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It never can be agreed to without a vote of the House.

Mr. SEELYE. There is no objection to the principle involved in the amendment, so far as I know; but there is an objection to making it to this bill, because of the delay which it would lead to. The gentleman can introduce his proposition in a separate form, if he thinks

Mr. MILLS. I think the gentleman in charge of this bill will agree that there was an understanding with me that my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. BLAND. If the amendment is not agreed to, then I hope the bill will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. That is within the control of the House.

Mr. SEELYE. I desire to say a word or two on this subject. This country, the Black Hills, is now in the possession of Sioux Indians; it belongs to them, it is theirs by solemn treaty of the United States, which not only guarantees them in the possession of it, but also guarantees that no white person shall set his foot upon it. Notwithstanding that, during the last season more than ten thousand white persons went there as miners, that among other causes bringing on the Sioux war with results with which we are all familiar. In order to prevent further difficulties of this sort this commission, authorized by an act of the present Congress at its last session, during the last season went there and negotiated this treaty with the Sioux, providing partially that the Sioux Indians might be removed to some other region of country. That provision, however, not having been!

providing partially that the Sioux Indians might be removed to some other region of country. That provision, however, not having been assented to by the Sioux in open council, is stricken out from this bill, which now contains nothing authorizing in any respect the removal of the Sioux to the Indian Territory. It is quite unnecessary, therefore, to introduce any provision respecting that matter.

Now let me state the reason for having this bill passed promptly at this time. No appropriations can be made to carry out the purpose of the bill until it has been passed. Meanwhile the ten thousand miners already occupying the Black Hills are likely to be increased perhaps tenfold. As I am informed this morning by a gentleman coming from that Territory, there is very little doubt that during the coming season there will be 100,000 miners in the Black Hills. Now, there is no law over that Territory, no United States or territorial law; and there cannot be any law until this treaty is carried out; there cannot be until the Territory of Dakota is thus authorized to pass laws for the government of these 100,000 men. I ask the House to consider for a moment the condition of things, both as respects the Indians and the miners, if these thousands of men are allowed to rush in there to work out their own ends without any law to control them.

rush in there to work out their own ends without any law to control them.

Now, the Legislature of Dakota is at the present time in session at Yankton; and it is very important this bill should be passed in order that the Legislature may make prompt provision for extending the authority of the courts over the Black Hills. This bill has passed the Senate without any objection; and while, as I remarked to the gentleman from Texas yesterday, there is no objection to his submitting this amendment, and asking a vote of the House upon it, and while I know of no objection to the amendment itself so far as the principle is concerned, yet the amendment is unnecessary, since the bill does not provide for any removal of the Sioux to the Indian Territory; and it would be quite inexpedient to adopt it, because it will delay the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOONE. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to disagree with my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Seelye,] in reference to the propriety of this amendment. I can see very good reasons why the people who live contiguous to the Indian Territory should feel some apprehension about the removal of these Sioux Indians to that Territory, because of the frequent incursions which wild, untamed Indians might make upon their settlements. I think it proper, therefore, that we should accommodate ourselves to that feeling so far as we possibly can; and I am sorry there has been any antagonism to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, because I desire that the passage of this bill shall not be jeoparded by a division of sentiment on this subject.

This bill, as has been well remarked, is one of great importance, and should, in my judgment, be passed. The Black Hills country is to the people of the United States a valuable country. This agreement concedes the Black Hills territory to the Government of the United States, in consideration of which we make provision for feeding these Indians upon the Missouri River at points contignous to the means of transportat ing these Indians upon the Missouri River at points contiguous to the means of transportation, so that there will be a saving to the Government in feeding the Indians, in addition to the transfer of this valuable country to the United States.

Besides this, the Indians by this bill are to be placed on a part of the reservation which they now hold which is susceptible of cultiva-tion; and if we are ever to succeed in teaching them the arts of agriculture and civilization they will be in a position where we can carry forward those great enterprises which have succeeded so well in the Indian Territory with much greater facility than can possibly be done in the present scattered and inaccessible condition of these Indians.

In view, therefore, of the interests dependent upon this bill, it occurs to me that there can be no special reason why we should not curs to me that there can be no special reason why we should not accommodate ourselves to the views of those gentlemen who live in contiguous States, and adopt an amendment prohibiting the removal of these Indians to the Indian Territory. While I grant that there is no authority for such removal, and that under this bill it could not be done, because the only provision that ever authorized it has been stricken out by an amendment in the Senate—while I concede all this, yet, to accommodate gentlemen who have fears on this subject, I am willing that the amendment should be incorrected. I am willing that the amendment should be incorporated in the bill, especially as the gentleman from Texas informs me that it was a part of the agreement into which he entered yesterday by which he allowed this bill to be made a special order for to-day. I hope, therefore, that we shall have no trouble upon this subject; that the amendment will be adopted and the bill passed, so that we may accomplish the objects we all have in view. I now move the previous question tion.

Mr. CROUNSE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman what disposition of the Indians is made by this bill? Where are they to go?

Mr. BOONE. They are to be removed up on the Missouri River, on their own reservation in Dakota.

their own reservation in Dakota.

Mr. CROUNSE. This leaves these Indians in a territory contiguous to Nebraska; and while I should be glad to have them removed as far as possible, yet I do not feel disposed to enter any protest in behalf of my State. It is of the greatest importance that this bill pass and that the Black Hills country be opened up at once. The question as to where these Sioux Indians shall be finally located better be postponed to some future time or referred to the judgment and discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The Indian Territory is regarded as designed to eventually furnish homes for the various tribes. Whether it would be wise or economical to transfer these Indians there at this time, I will not say. But the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills,] which shuts them out in any event, should not be adopted. That Territory, in common with the other territory of the United States, should be open to their introduction as the best interest of the Government and of the Indians may demand. may demand.

But particularly, as the amendment might defeat the bill either

But particularly, as the amendment might defeat the bill either here or in the Senate, it should not be pressed at this time.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to say to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr CROUNSE] that no provision in this bill as passed by the Senate allows the removal of these Indians to the Indian Territory. I quite agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is entirely unnecessary and accomplishes nothing. There is no authority of law for moving these Indians, but the gentleman and those interested in the southern country desiring this spendiment are willing to accept if for the number of excepting the second ment are willing to accept if for the number of exdesiring this amendment are willing to accept it for the purpose of expediting the bill, which is of the greatest necessity to every one interested in this country.

There is no proposition in this bill as it stands to remove these Indians, and therefore the gentleman from Nebraska gains nothing by leaving the question open, because subsequent legislation will be necessary before they can be removed. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MILLS. I hope, Mr. Speaker, I may have the attention of the

Mr. MILLS. I hope, Mr. Speaker, I may have the attention of the House. I feel my duty to my constituents requires I should oppose the passage of the bill without the utmost guarantee possible to be written by human hands against the transfer of the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory.

Gentlemen say that is wholly unnecessary because the law which authorizes the transfer of these Indians to the Indian Territory has been stricken out of the bill and there is no law to authorize it. We are in the same condition we were twelve months ago, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs brought before this House a bill to authorize the pregnatation of a treaty with the Sioux Indians. The thorize the negotiation of a treaty with the Sioux Indians. The friends who take the view of this question I do, in conjunction with myself, opposed that bill until the Committee on Indian Affairs would agree to a provision absolutely prohibiting the transfer of those Indians to the Indian Territory.

Why did we do it? Because it is known to all gentlemen here that it is a favorite project of the Administration to concentrate all the Indians throughout the whole United States which can possibly be concentrated there upon that Indian Territory; and without positive interdiction of law they will continue to do it. They have done it. They do not wait for authority of law. I want to lay down the interdiction at their feet, saying "You shall not do it;" and then the President of the United States cannot upon that undertake to go on and put these Indians down there. This would be much the better plan for the Indians themselves, and I am not their advocate; it would be much the better plan for the people living in the States adjacent to the Indian Territory, and much the better plan for the Indians living on that Territory and trying to become civilized, who are reaching far up to the comforts of civilization which they desire to enjoy, as well as their white brethren who live around them. It would be unjust to them to place in their midst an element which it is impossible to civilize, and when, with all the appliances the gentleman has exercised toward them for many years, they are to-day as savage as they ever have been.

I wish to give to this House what General Stanley, who has been in the Army for twenty-four years and who has been among these Sioux Indians, said in his testimony before the committee during the

The Sioux Indians of Dakota are about equally divided into what you might call friendly and hostile Indians. The hostile element is the prevailing or popular element of the tribe. They keep peaceful Indians in constant dread, and their kinspeople are afraid of them. The grand difficulty in the way of civilizing the Sioux has been this dread of hostile Indians. The peaceful Indians arraid to obey or to have a feeling of attachment for the white man, for the fear of incurring the wrath of the hostile Indians. All attempts at raising stock have been frustrated in that way. Their attempts at agriculture have proved futile for the same reason; and notwithstanding the reports that the Sioux have made an advancement in civilization, since my first acquaintance with them—I mean the Sioux as a nation; I do not mean the Santee or Yankton, who for many years have been what you might call civilized—they have never made any advancement at all. I know what I say. It is claimed they have made advancement, but really they have not. With regard to the transfer of these Indians to the War Department, I will say frankly that I do not want to see it done.

The only spot in the Indian Territory the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had is a piece of territory obtained from the Creek Indians, and which he obtained on the plighted faith of the Government it would not put upon that spot of land as neighbors any but civilized Indians. When the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, without authority of law, sent gentlemen to negotiate with these Sioux Indians he instructed them to press upon them that they had to go upon the Indian Territory, and if they did not go there their rations would be cut off. When that treaty was signed by many of the Sioux chiefs, they came and touched the pen with the declaration that they signed the treaty with the understanding, "We are not to leave the land of our fathers, and you must go and tell our Father at Washington so." Notwithstanding that, they have compelled this people to enter into a treaty and send delegates to select the territory the Creek Indians said should not be yielded to any but civilized Indians. This will carry 35,000 irreconcilable savages into the midst of those people who have been struggling for civilization. It will turn them loose upon the State of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which as the commission of the state of Taxas which are the commission of the state of Taxas which are the commission of the state of Taxas which are the State of Texas, which, as the commissioner himself says in his letter, will be an inviting feast to them. Turn them loose there! letter, will be an inviting feast to them. Turn them loose there! And he says he will send more troops, more cavalry, down there to guard them. But send 35,000 Sioux to go with the Comanche and Kiowa Indians, and then there will be no peace on the borders of Texas, no peace in Missouri, no peace in Arkansas, and no peace in Kansas; and the very sparks of civilization itself that have been struggling into existence in the Indian Territory will be put out in utter darkness forever. These, sir, are the reasons why I object.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask the gentleman from Texas if the bill will be satisfactory to him provided his amendment is attached to it.

Mr. MILLS. Yes sir; and I so stated to the friends of the bill at

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir; and I so stated to the friends of the bill at the time when it was introduced. But one of its friends said he the time when it was introduced. But one of its friends said he would not agree to that and he would only consent to my being allowed to bring in my amendment before the House.

Mr. MAGINNIS. He thought the amendment unnecessary. But I am satisfied the friends of the bill will support the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. In that case I have nothing more to say.

Mr. SCALES. I would not like to do anything that would jeopardize the passage of this bill in the House. If it be so that it cannot pass without the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills,] I would have no objection to the amendment and would vote for it. But really I have not seen, and cannot see now, after the speech of the gentleman from Texas, that there is any necessity whatever for this amendment. Such a provision as that to necessity whatever for this amendment. Such a provision as that to which the gentleman objects was in the original bill; but the committee, in deference to the sentiment of the gentleman from Texas and those who object with him, struck that provision out. How did that leave the matter? It left it as it was before. It left it as it had been and as gentlemen had been contented with it for years. It left them without any authority of law on the part of the President or any one else to send these or any other Indians to the Indian Ter-Why, then, delay this bill? Why postpone action? Is there any necessity for the action asked for by the gentleman from Texas? I sympathize with him in all that he has said in regard to the people of those States that are contiguous to this Territory. I believe their wishes ought to be respected. I desire to respect them. But, sir, if this bill had not been introduced here I ask the gentleman from Texas if he or any other gentleman would have introduced any bill carrying out the provision which he desires put upon this bill. No such intimation has ever been made. They were perfectly contented with the situation of the law as it stood before this bill was introduced.

Mr. MILLS. As the gentleman has asked me a question I will say that I had a provision put on the Indian appropriation bill positively forbidding the introduction of these Indians.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. And the Senate struck it out.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. It will be remembered that at the last session of Congress a bill passed the Senate, came to the House, and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which had for its object the appropriate the committee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which had for its object the appropriate and the committee of t to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which had for its object the appointment of a commission and an appropriation of money to enable them to treat with these Indians; and, although it was not disclosed distinctly on the face of the bill, it was in the debate in the Senate, that the object was to transfer the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory. I had the pleasure of going before the committee of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] is chairman, and proposed an amendment, which was unanimously adopted, providing that the Sioux Indians by virtue of the treaty should not be removed from the territory on which they live or some part of it. And then in the sioux Indians by virtue of the treaty should not be removed from the territory on which they live, or some part of it. And then, in the face of the positive action of the committee and in the absence of all law, the President, through the Indian Bureau, sent commissioners and made a treaty, making it, as the history of the transaction shows, by placing the Sioux Indians under severe duress to force them to go to that Territory. My colleague, then, is right in seeking to prohibit now the doing of what was done in the face of a quasi-prohibition in the last session.

in the last session.

Mr. SCALES. I was just coming to that, and to the similar statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILIS] who first addressed the House. He says he wants this prohibition. Why? He wants it because in this treaty or contract with the Sioux, whatever you may call it, the commission appointed for that purpose had inserted a provision that the Sioux were to go to the Indian Territory and there select locations, and because the President acted without authority of law. Now, sir, my answer to that is simply this: that provision was in the treaty. But what became of it? It came to this House as it should have done for our sanction. It had no force, no authority, and could have none, because there was no law to give it sanction or force until it came back to us. It came back to us and the Indian Committee struck it out, and we propose to leave the States referred to by the gentleman from Texas, contiguous to that Territory, just as they were under the law. How can they complain, then? There is no indication of any attempt on the part of the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to delay any law of Congress on that subject. And although I am no friend to the Administration, yet I must say that in this particular the only thing that has been done is to provide for this in a treaty which was sent to us afterward for our confirmation, and that and there select locations, and because the President acted without treaty which was sent to us afterward for our confirmation, and that provision has been stricken out.

provision has been stricken out.

Mr. BOONE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. I hope that gentlemen will now not go back on their agreement. In view of the misunderstanding that there seems to be upon the subject, I think the whole agreement should be canceled and this bill returned to its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SCALES. If there has been any agreement such as the gentleman indicates, I know nothing about it.

Mr. MILLS. It was agreed that this amendment should be put upon the bill. Then, as soon as I get the floor for the purpose of moving it, I am told that there is objection to the amendment. If objection is made to this amendment, I want an opportunity to dis-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Boone] has moved the previous question.

Mr. SEELYE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few min-

Mr. BOONE. I will first yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. Hooker.]

Mr. HOOKER. I do not desire five minutes. I desire simply to say that I think the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] should be accepted at once by the friends of the bill. I do not see any necessity for delay in this matter. Even my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Seelye] does not object to the principle of the amendment. As it seems to have been understood that it should be offered at some stage by those who favored it, I hope all objection will be withdrawn by the friends of this bill to its acceptance.

Mr. BOONE. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Seelye,] after which I think I must insist upon a vote.

There is no objection certainly on the part of the friends of this bill to have this amendment submitted to the House, as was stated yesterday to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills.] That was my clear understanding of the arrangement between us. There is no objection to the principle involved in the amendment, but it is very clearly understood by us all that there is no necessity for the amendment. There is nothing at all in the bill as now presented which looks in any respect to a removal of these Indians to the Indian

Mr. FRANKLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. SEELYE. I have but five minutes.
Mr. FRANKLIN. I would refer the gentleman to article 9 of this agreement, which contemplates the removal of these Indians.
Mr. SEELYE. Certainly, but not to the Indian Territory.
Mr. FRANKLIN. Certainly not, but to some other place.
Mr. SEELYE. Their removal is an absolute necessity. These Indians are now where even the most cultivated white man could not obtain a living with all his knowledge of agriculture. It is necessary that they should be removed, but the contemplation is that they shall be removed to the Upper Missouri. There is therefore no necessary shall be removed to the Upper Missouri. There is therefore no necessity for this amendment.

Moreover, if we put this amendment on this bill it will raise a question which I do not like to send to the Senate because of the delay it would involve in the passage of the bill. It involves a question respecting the whole future policy of our treatment of the Indians. I know that certain distinguished Senators are very earnestly convinced that these Indians should be removed to the Indian Territory, and they will not consent to any prohibition against their removal. I am therefore not willing to introduce such a prohibition here, unnecessary as it is will the House for a single moment contemplate the condition of things there and the result of a failure to promptly pass this bill? We had this trouble with the Sioux Indians last summer. The increase of these miners to perhaps one hundred thousand during the present season is going to intensify these troubles with the Sioux at least tenfold. But even if that was not the case, what will be the condition of affairs with a hundred thousand miners from every country in the world, without any law, without any provision for pun-ishing crime, without any legal provisions which should regulate the intercourse of man with man?

It is necessary that this bill should be passed, and that it should be passed promptly. I think this amendment would interfere with the prompt passage of the bill, and therefore I hope the bill will be sustained as reported to the House.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BOONE] to yield to me for two minutes.

Mr. BOONE. I will yield to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] says that this amendment is perhaps not wrong on principle. Then why not adopt it? It can be concurred in by the Senate in a moment when the bill is reported there. We of Texas and of the other States contiguous to the Indian Territory believe that it would be a great wrong not only to the semi-civilized Indians of that Territory, but to the people of the surrounding States, to allow these Sioux Indians to go in there.

It was agreed yesterday that this amendment should be adopted. I so understood the agreement, standing here ready all the time with my colleague to object to this bill if there was no such understanding.

The gentleman from Nebraska thinks it perhaps best that these Indians should go to the Indian Territory. Those of us representing the States adjacent to that Territory think differently. Already the Government has colonized over eighteen thousand wild Indians there. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes from the north, and Apaches from New Manual Cheyennes and Arapahoes from the north, and Apaches from New Manual Cheyennes and Arapahoes Indians, the Comanches, Kiowas, Mexico, besides our own southern Indians, the Comanches, Kiowas, Mexico, besides our own southern Indians, the Comanches, Kiowas, and other tribes, are colonized there and immediately on the border of Texas. To place these northern Sioux there would be unjust to Texas and the neighboring States and an outrage upon the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, and Chickasaws. What would the gentleman from Nebraska think if we should attempt to send the wild Indians of the south into Nebraska? We, sir, would stand here and aid him to resist such policy. We ask that these northern savages shall not be sent down on us. I hope the bill will be defeated if the amendment is not adouted. ment is not adopted.

Mr. BOONE. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. The question being upon the amendment reported by the committee,

Mr. BOONE. I desire to say one word only. While I was not present when that agreement of which the gentleman from Texas speaks was entered into, I clearly understood from the reading of the Journal was entered into, I clearly understood from the reading of the Journal and from the information of other gentlemen that there was such an agreement. Hence, I was perfectly willing to accept his amendment, as I supposed the whole committee was, because I knew that it carried out what I understood to be the views of the whole committee upon the subject of the removal of these Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory. We thought that such removal would not only be unjust to the people of States adjacent to that Territory, but also unjust to the indian Ind the people of States adjacent to that Territory, but also unjust to the civilized Indians who are already quartered there. Hence, as I understood, we were all opposed to it. While I do not believe, as I before remarked, that the amendment was necessary in order to accomplish that result, yet, in order to accommodate myself to the feeling, which I confess I entertain in common with gentlemen who live in those States, that these wild Indians should be kept from their vicinity, I was willing to excele to the prescrition and account the amendment. was willing to accede to the proposition and accept the amendment. I would like the gentleman from Texas, and all others, to know that do not go back upon this agreement or any other that I enter into. now call for a vote upon the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OMAHA BRIDGE.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state for the information of the House that the object of the gentleman from Texas in moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is in order to bring up in Committee of the Whole a bill which has been made a special order, being the bill in reference to the rate of tell on the Omelia bridge. to the rate of toll on the Omaha bridge.

to the rate of toll on the Omana bridge.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. The motion which the gentleman from Texas makes is always in order. The idea of the gentleman is to lay aside all the bills upon the Calendar until this bill is reached, and then take it up for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask whether we could not, by unanimous consent, agree to take that bill up immediately?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the committee to deter-

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. THROCKMORTON; and

The question was taken of the interest it was agreed to.

And the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Buckner in the chair.)

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move that the committee set aside all preceding business on the Calendar and take up for consideration the bill regulating the rate of toll on the Omaha bridge. That will have to be done by laying aside each bill in its order until the special order shall be reached.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is not necessary to put the question on anything but special orders.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why not take up this bill and obviate the necessity of reading over all the bills on the Calendar until this bill is

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not exactly understand the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is that all business on the Private Calendar preceding this bill shall be set aside and the bill taken up for consideration.

No objection was made, and the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4532) to provide for fixing the rates and charges for freight and passengers passing over the bridge constructed across the Missouri River at Omaha, Nebraska, on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. The bill just read represents the views of the majority of the committee. I desire to have read at the Clerk's desk a proposition representing the views of the minority, which I will offer at a proper time as a substitute for the bill reported by the majority.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted. &c., That after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Union Pacific Railroad Company, its lessess or assigns, to charge more than $5 for any car of freight nor more than twenty-five cents for any passenger passing over the bridge and approaches constructed by said company between Council Bluffs, in Iowa, and Omaha, in the State of Nebraska: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give said company the right to charge any special or greater rate for the transportation of freight or passengers over said bridge and its approaches than is now conferred by existing law.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I am informed that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CROUNSE] desires to discuss this bill. Mr. CROUNSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. For how long?

Mr. CROUNSE. I cannot say. Mr. THROCKMORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska for half an hour.

Mr. CROUNSE addressed the committee. His remarks will appear

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Will the gentleman yield for a motion that the committee rise ?

Mr. CROUNSE. I am not disposed to occupy the time of the com-

Mr. CROUNSE. I may then ask for some more time to-morrow.

The motion of Mr. Throckmorron was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buckner reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4532) to provide for fixing the rates and charges for freight and passengers passing over the bridge constructed across the Missouri River at Omaha, Nebraska, on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ISAAC RAINES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General on the bill (H. R. No. 3871) for the relief of Isaac Raines, Eighth Tennessee Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General on House bill No. 4180, in regard to certain lands in San Francisco, California; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WATER FRONT AT MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the chief clerk of the War Department, (in the absence of the Secretary of War,) transmitting a report on the survey of the water front at Memphis, Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. WILLARD asked and obtained unanimous consent to have the following taken from the Speaker's table; and the same was read

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the monetary commission created by the joint resolution of August 15, 1876, be allowed until the 24th of February, 1877, to submit their report.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BLAND asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the claim of Jacob De Haven, there being no adverse report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LORD, by unanimous consent, was granted indefinite leave of absence on account of severe illness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning; and I ask unanimous consent that there be an understanding that the House will then take a further recess until five minutes before eleven o'clock.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Can we not take up and consider to-morrow morning some bills now pending before the Committee on Public Lands which have been passed by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be the understanding that to-morrow at ten o'clock the House take a further recess until five minutes before eleven o'clock.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion of Mr. Holman was then agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at ten o'clock a. m., Friday, February 16.

OMAHA BRIDGE.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to resume the consideration of the bill in regard to the Omaha bridge. The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Buckner in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4532) to provide for fixing the rates and charges for freight and passengers passing over the bridge constructed across the Missouri River at Omaha, Nebraska, on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL.]
[Mr. LUTTRELL addressed the committee. His remarks will appear in Appendix.]

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Philips.]

Mr. Philips. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to inveigh against this railroad corporation, nor shall I do so. The question presented here is simply one of right and justice between this corporation and the people of the State of Nebraska and of the city of Omaha and the traveling public; and if I can have the atten-tion of the Committee of the Whole for a few minutes, I think I shall so define the exact issue between the majority and the minority of the committee that the House may at least be able to vote in-

It is complained on the part of the people of the State of Nebraska and of the city of Omaha that the Union Pacific Railroad Company is charging exorbitant and unnecessary rates for the transportation of freight and passengers over the Omaha bridge. It is represented and the fact is conceded that they charge $10 for every car-load of freight and fifty cents for every passenger that passes over it. Th say that this charge is exorbitant and that it is unnecessary.

The railroad corporation, on the other hand, claims that it is necessary, for the reason that this bridge, under a power given to the Union Pacific Railroad Company by the charter granted in 1871, is mortgaged to secure the sum of two and a half millions of dollars bearing 8 per to secure the sum of two and a half millions of dollars bearing 8 per cent. interest. The mortgage, furthermore, provides for a sinking fund amounting to $40,000 per annum. So that they claim the bridge must earn the company, in order to meet this interest and this sinking fund, $240,000 per annum outside of what is required to meet the necessary expenses of operating and maintaining the bridge. There is in the judgment of the minority of the committee no necessity whatever for this company exacting a dollar from the people of Nebraska or from the public beyond this sum.

It is proposed by the majority of the committee by the bill they report here to refer this question to the Government directors of this railroad. And the question presents itself right here: Where is the necessity for this reference? Why cannot this matter be ascertained and determined by the Congress of the United States, where the charter of the road places this whole matter? Because, sir, when this company obtained its charter for this bridge authorizing them to mortgage it, Congress in granting the charter expressly reserved the right—

At all times to regulate said bridge and the rates for the transportation of freight and passengers over the same, and the local travel that might use it.

There was an express reservation in the very charter granted for Congress to regulate this matter of freights and the rates for passen-Congress to regulate this matter of freights and the rates for passengers. It seemed then to be anticipated and supposed probable by Congress that this company under the grant would exact exorbitant and outrageous rates from the people, and therefore it reserved the right in Congress—in this House—to regulate this matter. It is proposed by the majority of the committee, however, to refer this matter to the board of Government directors. For what purpose? For what necessity? We have, sir, a standing committee of this House, a committee known as the Pacific Railroad Committee, who have the same powers and the same rights to do exactly what this commission can decomply the property of the reservoir of the property of the property of the reservoir of the property of the prope do. We have power to inquire and investigate into this matter, to send for persons and papers, and to ascertain the facts. We are just as competent and much less liable to the outside influence and control of this corporation than this commission would be, which, doubtless would be cozened, wined, and cajoled by the railroad magnates beyond would be cozened, wined, and cajoled by the railroad magnates beyond their sense of propriety and the line of duty.

This duty, sir, ought to be discharged by the committee of this House. The duty is simple. The facts to be ascertained are few and plain. And the committee of this House is already in possession of all the facts necessary to enable us to arrive at a just and proper conclusion and judgment in this matter.

What are those facts? We have called upon the railroad corporation and they have furnished us a full statement of the earnings of this bridge and its expenditures. That presents the whole case. If a commission appointed by Congress were to start out to day to requa commission appointed by Congress were to start out to-day to regulate these rates, the first thing they would do would be to call upon this corporation to ascertain what were the earnings of this bridge, this corporation to ascertain what were the earnings of this bridge, and what were the necessary and legitimate expenditures required to keep it up. And when they had those figures they would have before them all the data upon which to predicate their judgment as to what should be the rates for freight and passengers over it. They have furnished us with that statement. And, sir, according to that statement furnished by President Dillon of the Union Pacific Railroad, the earnings of this bridge for the first six months of 1875 were $266,750; and if the increase were in the same proportion for the remaining period as it had been in the preceding six months, the earn-$200,700; and it the increase were in the same proportion for the remaining period as it had been in the preceding six months, the earnings of this railroad bridge for the year 1875 would not be less than $600,000; $600,000 earned in one year; and what becomes of it? They undertake to show that the greater part of these earnings is expended necessarily in keeping up and equipping the bridge. But, sir, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was made since the bill was introduced into this House by the gentleman made since the bill was introduced into this House by the gentleman from Nebraska, [Mr. Crounse,] it was decided that the Omaha railroad bridge is a part of the Union Pacific Railroad; that its eastern terminus or initial point is at Council Bluffs; and that that bridge is a part of the whole railroad. And, therefore, the legitimate construction of this decision of the Supreme Court is that the expenses incident to the operation of this bridge should be apportioned to the whole line, and therefore the great body of the item which they charged to the bridge should be charged to the whole road. If that be done, I have here a statement furnished by President Dillon showing how the matter stands; it is as follows:

So the total expense for the year would be $25,582.66.

The earnings of the road for the whole year of 1876 were $533,501.70 even if there was no increase during the last six months. Deducting operating expenses would leave $507,919 net earnings. From this deduct $200,000 for interest and $40,000 sinking fund, leaving a net surduct $200,000 for interest and $40,000 sinking rund, leaving a net surplus of $293,501.70. So, sir, here are the facts; plain, undisputed, and undisputable. The reduction proposed by the minority of the committee leaves the bondholders secured and affords relief to the people who are unconscionably subjected to this toll. Why therefore remit this adjustment to railroad directors to ascertain that which is already known to this House, already in its possession? The special charter of the bridge reserves the right to and imposes upon Congress—this House—the duty of regulating these rates. Why then shift the responsibility to a set of men outside, to be manipulated and cozened by railroad men who are sharp, smooth, and plausible?

by railroad men who are sharp, smooth, and plausible?

Before I take my seat I offer as a substitute for the report of the majority the bill reported by the minority and which has already

Mr. BLAND. I would ask the gentleman whether the bridge is owned by the Pacific Railroad Company or another company?

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. It is a part of the same line. It has been the policy and the effort of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to treat it as a separate franchise, but under the decision of the Supreme Court it is a part and parcel of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and ought to be treated as any other bridge upon the same ond.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The decision of the Supreme Court was that it was a part and parcel of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. THROCKMORTON I propose briefly to call the attention of the House for a few moments to the facts in this case, and I ask the attention of members for a very short time, that I may lay the question clearly before them. My friend from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL,] in the political harangue which he delivered, said so much about the Credit Mobilier and things of that kind that I think it proper to make a brief statement so as to lay this question fairly before the House, so that every member may judge for himself.

Now, sir, we find by an act of Congress, February 4, 1871, that there was a charter granted for the purpose of constructing a bridge across the Missouri River between Council Bluffs and Omaha. I would beg to call the attention of members especially to an extract from that charter, in connection with what my friend from California has said in regard to the decision of the Supreme Court. Now, sir, that act, among other provisions, provides that the company may issue bonds for the construction of a bridge, and it further provides, and I read the exact language of the statute:

Said company may collect tolls and charges for the use of the same, and for the use and protection of said bridge property.

That is what Congress said. There is a difference between my That is what Congress said. There is a difference between my friend from California and Congress. He has stated here this morning that the Supreme Court has decided that they had no right to charge tolls for the use of this bridge. Now, sir, I will read the language that he has referred to, to show the difference between the opinion of the gentleman on the subject and what are the facts. Here is the language marked by him, saying that Mr. Dillon admitted that the Supreme Court had decided that they had no right to collect

Mr. LUTTRELL. I referred to the decision of the Supreme Court which I hold in my hand.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Let me read:

By a recent decision of the Supreme Court-

Says Mr. Dillon-

it has been decided that the Omaha bridge must be operated as a part of the continuous line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. LUTTRELL. That was what I referred to; not to the end of

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Yes, the court has decided that the bridge must be operated as a part of the line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. But I ask every intelligent man, does that imply that no tolls may be charged for the use of this bridge? The Supreme Court decided no such thing, but they decided that it must be used as a part of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but nowhere decided that there was not a right that tolls might be collected for the use of this bridge.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? If the road is to be operated as one continuous line, how can they separate the rates of toll over this bridge from the rates of toll charged over the whole line?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Because Congress has said by an act that this bridge might be constructed, that the company might issue bonds for its construction, and should have a right to charge tolls for the use and protection of their property. I have referred the gentleman to the act of February 4, 1871, 16 Stat., page 430, which says:

The said company may levy and collect tolls and charges for the use of the same, and for the use and protection of said bridge property.

Now, sir, I have said thus much to show what the Supreme Court Now, Sir, I have said thus inden to show what the supreme court did decide as to the rights of this company. I propose now to state what is the difference between the majority and the minority of the committee on the subject. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Crounse] introduced the bill for which the bill offered by the committee is a substitute. Mr. Crounse's bill provided:

That after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful for the Union Pacific Railroad Company, its lessees, or assigns, to charge more than $5 for any car of freight, nor more than twenty-five cents for any passenger, passing over the bridge and approaches constructed by said company between Council Bluffs in Iowa and Omaha in the State of Nebraska.

Now I am free to confess as a member of that committee that I believe the present rates of charges fixed by the bridge company, namely, $10 a car for freight and fifty cents each for passengers, are too high; I believe they constitute an unjust burden upon the commerce and travel of the country. But the act of Congress to which I have alluded, and which was referred to by the member from Missouri, [Mr. Philips,] declares that Congress shall have the right at all times to regulate and control these charges for freight and passengers.

The question that presented itself to the committee was whether that committee, with the knowledge they had before them, would be competent to fix a proper rate of toll. Not a single member of that committee was disposed to fix anything like an exorbitant charge upon the commerce and travel of the country. We were, however, charged with a very difficult duty to perform. Here are five or six, perhaps more, railroads concentrating at Council Bluffs and Omaha, Now I am free to confess as a member of that committee that I be-charged with a very difficult duty to perform. Here are five or six, perhaps more, railroads concentrating at Council Bluffs and Omaha, and transacting business over this bridge. On the one hand here was the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the bridge company, and on the other hand all these other railroads that are interested in

I believe it is the duty of Congress to act fairly toward all the parties in interest. I ask every man in this House how it is possible for a committee of this House, with little time for investigating these matters, to fix a just and proper rate of charge, having due regard to the interest of the parties who have advanced their money for the construction of this bridge and also a due regard to the great interests of the country.

on the one hand are these different railroad companies which are obliged to use the bridge, and feel that the charges imposed by the bridge company are altogether too high; and they contend for a reduction of the rates. On the other hand is the company, which submits a statement from their books to show that there is a large deficiency, taking into consideration the outlay for building and the expense of maintaining this bridge.

Now, what is the committee to do? For one I believe that instead

Now, what is the committee to do? For one I believe that instead of sitting in our committee-room and attempting to fix an arbitrary rate, which we could not possibly know would be just to the holders of these bridge bonds and to the owners of this property, and which might operate very unequally upon them, it was the duty of Congress to appoint a commission composed of gentlemen having a knowledge of the cost of constructing and maintaining such a work. I believe that these foreign bondholders who rely upon the action of Congress to maintain the faith and credit of the country have a right to look to Congress to see that justice is done to them.

The committee therefore report this bill, providing that those directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, who are appointed by the President, and who represent the Government and who are specially charged with the interests of the public rather than the interests of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, should constitute this commission. We believe that these Government directors would perhaps be better qualified to determine the rates of charges to be imhaps be better qualified to determine the rates of charges to be imposed than anybody else we could select; especially when we made it their duty to give notice by publication in three prominent journals of the Northwest of the time when they would meet for the purpose of determining this question, in order that everybody interested, these various railroad companies and everybody else who felt an interest in the matter, might come before the board, which board could examine engineers and experts, and send for the books and papers of this company for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of its construction and the expense of its maintenance.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

No objection being made, the time of Mr. THROCKMORTON was extended for thirty minutes.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Chairman, the committee thought that this board of Government directors, having the power to send for persons and papers, to examine experts, to hear all parties in interest on either side, would be much better able to determine the proper rate to be charged than would a committee of this House.

In addition to that, this bill provides that after the rates have been fixed by the board of Government directors they shall be re-adjusted by this board of commissioners, and that a similar re-adjustment shall by this board of commissioners, and that a similar re-adjustment shall be made every twelve months thereafter. This provision was in-cluded on account of a belief that the rates of charge from time to cluded on account of a belief that the rates of charge from time to time should be decreased as the business of the road increases. We believe that such will be the result. In addition to this, one of the last clauses of the bill provides that Congress shall still retain the right to repeal or alter the rates that may be fixed by this board of directors. We cannot act intelligently upon this subject without the finding of a board of commissioners authorized to investigate and report upon this whole question.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to know from the gentleman how this bridge company happens to be a separate corporation from the Union

Mr. BLAND. I would like to know from the gentleman how this bridge company happens to be a separate corporation from the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or whether it is the same company? If the bridge company is controlled by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, I would like to know how the latter obtained control of it.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I cannot answer as to the constitution of the bridge company.

Mr. BLAND. There seems to be a mystery about this matter. I do not think it is understood here. They say that this is a continuous line, yet that the bridge company is a separate corporation.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The construction of the bridge was commenced in 1869, prior to the passage of the act of 1871.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. The answer to the inquiry propounded by my colleague [Mr. Bland] is found in the decision of the Supreme Court, in which it is held in effect that the bridge over the Missouri River is a part of the continuous line of road from Council Bluffs westward; that the bridge company is not a separate corporation, but a part of the original corporation. The court decides, however, that under the act of 1871 the company is authorized to mortgage the bridge to secure bonds to the amount of $2,500,000 to be used in its construction; that the additional power to execute such a mortgage to secure this indebtedness is given to the company as if this were a separate property. But it is held, nevertheless, that the bridge is a part of the continuous line of road and comes under the original grant of power made to the company under the act of 1832.

Mr. BLAND. Then this bridge is owned by the Union Pacific Railroad Company?

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. Unquestionably; it is the same corporation, and the stockholders are the same.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that originally the Union Pacific Railroad Company claimed that the eastern terminus of their road was Omaha. The Supreme Court has decided that the eastern terminus is Council Bluffs. But before that decision Congress granted a charter for the construction of this bridge.

Mr. CROUNSE. No, sir, not for the construction of the bridge, but simply for the issue of bonds.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Yes, sir, for issue of the bonds.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The bridge was commenced in 1869.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. In pursuance of the act of Congress, bonds to the amount of $2,500,000 to provide for the construction of the

for the payment of the principal.

I have here a statement made by the bridge company. As a matter of course, I do not pretend to vouch for its accuracy; but it has been submitted by the officers of that company as a correct statement of their expenditures and receipts in connection with this bridge. They issued bonds to the amount of $2,500,000, which were sold at eighty-two and one-half cents on the dollar, making $2,060,000, leaving a balance of $366,463 of the expenses of construction to be paid by the company and not covered by the bonds. According to this statement of earnings and expenses, the deficiency from March 25, 1872, to June 30, 1873, was $61,145; and the total deficiency, including the redemption of bonds, to December 31, 1875, was $332,561. That is the statement made by the officers of the company. As a matter of course the committee have no means of referring to books or papers to verify this statement. I give it for what it may be worth.

matter of course the committee have no means of referring to books or papers to verify this statement. I give it for what it may be worth. Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him with a question. I wish to inquire whether the company in the statement which I now hold in my hand did not furnish the items of these expenditures, and whether it was not conceded by the committee upon investigation and inquiry that two-thirds of the items charged to the bridge are now properly chargeable to the whole. line of the road under the decision of the Supreme Court? Is it not apparent from the items here furnished that two-thirds of those which apparent from the items here furnished that two-thirds of those which are charged to the expenses of the bridge ought to be charged to the whole line of the road?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I am of the impression some of the items should be charged to the maintenance of the road and not to the bridge property; and that is the reason why we could not enter into this controversy as to what was properly chargeable to the bridge and what to the remaining portion of the road, and therefore agreed to the provision contained in this bill. I do not know who these Government directors are, but from their knowledge of the road and the cost of the construction of the Omaha bridge, it seemed to the committee they were eminently fitted to determine this question. When they have determined it, if the various interests involved are not satisfied it has been fairly and properly adjusted, Congress still has it in its power to change, alter, or amend their determination. For one I believe we owe it to American credit that the bridge property, being charged with the payment by act of Congress of a certain debt, not to pass any law fixing the rate of charges unless we know the money advanced by foreign capitalists will be protected. Members of Congress would hesitate long before they would act upon the advice or argument of parties directly interested on one side or the other and pass a law which would militate against our credit as a nation. As has a matter of course, I presume no member of Congress would stand up here in favor of foreign bondholders to the injury of any American citizen or interest. It is devolved upon Congress to guard carefully all interests concerned and not to determine the question upon the statements of parties interested on the one side or on the other. I will not trespass, however, further upon the time of the House, but ask that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BLAND. I ask the gentleman if this bridge is mortgaged as a separate piece of property from the road itself, whether if that mortgage is foreclosed it will separate the bridge from the railroad company, or will it continue to be a continuous line? There seems to be some question about it.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I do not suppose it could be separated.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. With the gentleman's permission, I will read some extracts from the decision of the Supreme Court which are pertinent to this matter.

Mr. THROCKMORFON. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose,
Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me, and wish now only to call the attention of the committee particularly to the following language of the decision of the Supreme ticularly to the following language of the decision of the Supreme Court:

Thus far we have confined our attention to the act of 1862, and to the President's action under it. From that act alone we have deduced the conclusion that the company was authorized and required to build their railroad to the Iowa shore. That authority included within itself power to build a bridge over the Missouri. No express grant to bridge the river was needed. Whatever bridges were necessary on their authorized line was as fully authorized as the line itself, and the company were as much empowered to build one across the Missourias they were across the Platte or any other river intersecting the route of their road. (People vs. The Saratoga and Reusellaer Railroad Company, 15 Wendell, 130; Springfield vs. Connecticut River Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad Company, 4 Cush, 63; Mohawk Bridge Company vs. Utica and Schenectady Railroad, and the act declared this anthority to be given to enable the company to make convenient and necessary connections with other roads. This enactment may not have been necessary. The power may have been conferred upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company by the act of 1863, and we think it was. But whether necessary or not, it shows clearly that Congress had in view the constructed without making use of the lowa shore of their road. They were not authorized to use it for other purposes than those of their road. They were not authorized to use it for other purposes than those of their road. They w

If we are correct in this conclusion it is difficult to see why the bridge over the river, built by the railroad company, is not a part of their railroad, and required by law to be operated as a part thereof. It was commenced in 1869 under the acts of 1862 and 1864. These acts were the only authority the company had at the time of its commencement for building it. It is a railroad bridge, a continuation of the line west of the river, and it connects the road with its required eastern terminus. The acts chartering the company manifest no intention to distinguish between the bridge over the Missouri River and other bridges on the line of their road. If it is not a part of their road, are the power to build all bridges was given in the same words.

There is nothing, either in the act of 1862 or 1864 or in that of February 24, 1871, which empowers them to build more than one bridge over the Missouri for the Iowa branch, and the latter act contains an implied recognition of their right under the former acts to build their bridge on its present location. There is no intimation in it of a distinct bridge franchise. It grants no power to build a bridge. Its main purpose manifestly was to give the company additional means and privileges for the completion of a structure already authorized, not to enable them to construct a new and independent road. To hold that the bridge is not a part of the road would defeat the plain object Congress had in view in 1862 and 1864—a continuous line for connection with the Iowa roads.

Holding, then, as we do, that the legal terminus of the railroad is fixed by law on the Iowa shore of the river, and that the bridge is a part of the railroad, there can be no doubt that the company is under obligation to operate and run the whole road, including the bridge, as one connected and continuous line. This is a duty expressly imposed by the acts of 1862 and 1864, and recognized by that of 1871. What this means it is not difficult to understand. It is a requisition made for the convenience of the public. An arrangement, such as the company has made, by which freight and passengers, destined for or beyond the eastern terminus, are stopped two or three miles from it and transferred to another train, and again transferred at the terminus, or by which freight and passengers going west from the eastern end of the line must be transferred at Omaha, breaks the road into two lines, and plainly is inconsistent with continuous operation of it as a whole. If not, the injunction of the statute has no meaning. The mandamus awarded in this case, therefore, imposes no duty beyond what the law requires.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general debate on this bill has expired.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHLIPS] a question. Did not Judge Dillon of the circuit court of the United States determine that the company had the right to charge toll?

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I concede that; and for that reason a clause in the minority bill reserves that whole question for determination by the court. We do not think it wise or prudent to trench on nation by the court. We do the prerogatives of the court.

Mr. CROUNSE. I desire to offer the following amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Union Pacific Railroad Company, its lessess or assigns, to charge any special or greater rate for the transportation of freight or passengers over the bridge and approaches constructed by said company between Council Bluffs in Iowa and Omaha in the State of Nebraska than that charged for the transportation of the same for like distance over other portions of its road; nor shall it charge other companies more than $5 for every freight and passenger car and contents which any such company may transport over said bridge and approaches except in case of transportation of coal, sait, grain, or lumber, when not more than one-half of said last-named rate shall be charged.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buckner reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4532) to provide for fixing the rates and charges for freight and passengers passing over the bridge constructed across the Missouri River at On that, Nebraska, on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House take a recess till twelve o'clock. The motion was agreed to; and (at eleven o'clock and fifty-four minutes a. m.) a recess was accordingly taken.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, the post-office, and internal-revenue officers at Austin, Texas, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the General Assembly of Arkansas, in favor of the passage of an act to facilitate the settlement of conflicts between the United States and the States having the benefit of the swamp-land grant of September 28, 1850; having the benefit of the swamp-land grant of September 28, 1850; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KELLY presented a petition of citizens of Washington Territory, praying for the establishment of a post-route from The Dalles, in the State of Oregon, to Yakima City, in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LOGAN. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, concerning pensions for soldiers in the Mexican war and the Black Hawk war. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 13, concerning pensions for soldiers of the Mexican and Black Hawk wars.

Whereas the House of Representatives at Washington City did on the 4th day of January last, by a manimous vote, pass a bill granting a pension of $8 per month to the soldiers of the Mexican war, and to their unmarried widows: Therefore, Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Illinois, (the house of representatives concurring herein.) That our Senators in Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed to vote for and use their influence to secure the speedy passage of said bill by the United States Senate. And that they also be requested to insert in such bill the following: United States Senate. And that the following:

"That the soldiers of the Black Hawk war, and their unmarried widows, shall receive as a pension the sum of $8 per month."

ANDREW SHUMAN,

ANDREW SHUMAN,
President of the Senate. JAMES SHAW, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the Senate February 3, 1877.

JAMES H. PADDOCK. Secretary of the Senate.

Concurred in by the House of Representatives February 7, 1877.

E. F. DUTTON,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish merely to call the attention of the Senate to this matter. The bill referred to is before the Committee on Pensions. It seems not to have been reported back. It passed the House of Representatives by a unanimous vote of both parties. It seems to me that it at least ought to receive the consideration of the Senate of the United States. The Legislature of Illinois by this memorial have called the attention of Congress to the bill. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to. Mr. McMILLAN presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads: A memorial to Congress for right of way and grant of land for railroad purposes. To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress as-sembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, respectfully represent that the rapidly increasing settlements of the Northwest, the surplus agricultural products and material developments, demand greater and cheaper facilities than now existing, and a more direct transit to the Atlantic seaboard and European ports, and eastern products transported to the Northwest.

That the saving in the distance to eastern markets of three hundred miles, by a railroad route from Saint Paul and Minneapolis to Sault Sainte Marie will tend to more fully develop the great wheat-growing region of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota, Huron, and Montans.

The surplus of wheat which forms one of the most reliable exports from our Government, in shortening the distance to European markets three hundred miles, will give encouragement to this great source of wealth to our whole land, and deserves aid and protection.

That by reason of the facts set forth in this memorial, and many other considerations, the nearest transit makes cheap transportation, and thereby develops the country and increases prosperity.

To further these objects, we ask Congress to donate land to aid, and the right of way through Government land to build a railroad from the cities of Saint Paul and Minneapolis to the falls of Sault Sainte Marie, where it will connect with railroad enterprises fostered and built by the Dominion government.

Your memorialists therefore earnestly request the matters aforesaid may receive the early and favorable consideration of Congress.

President of the Senate.
J. L. GIBBS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, Saint Paul, February 7, A. D. 1877.

J. S. IRGENS.

Secretary of State.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of Alfred A. Green for himself and on behalf of others, praying for an investigation into the alleged wrongful action of the joint commission to adjust the claims between citizens of the United States and the republic of Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3513) granting a pension to Dr. P. F. Reuss, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely. He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2841) granting a pension to Green Edwards, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely. He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1238) granting a pension to Esther P. Fox, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3011) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Annis, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1232) to repeal an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company" and to provide for winding up the affairs of said corporation, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 3373) for the relief of Susan E. Willard, widow of Sylvester D. Willard, of New York, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

OFFICIAL STAMPS FOR THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SARGENT. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill which I send to the desk, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. No. 1265) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase of official postage-stamps for the Treasury Department for the current fiscal year was read twice the Treasury Department for the current fiscal year was read twice by its title.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $100,000 to purchase official postage-stamps for the Treasury Department.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the bill explained.

Mr. SARGENT. That is what I intend to do. A letter which I send to the desk will explain the bill very tersely. I should like to say, however, before the letter is read that this item was passed by the House in the regular deficiency bill which is now before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; but the Department cannot wait the two or three weeks which are likely to elapse before that bill will become a law. The letter explains why.

bill will become a law. The letter explains why.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, D. C., February 15, 1877.

Department, Office of the Secretary,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1877.

Dear Sir: I have the honor to respectfully call your attention to the item in the deficiency appropriation bill as passed by the House of Representatives which appropriates $100,000 for official postage-stamps for the Treasury Department for the balance of the current fiscal year, and to state that the Department is at this moment in pressing need of this appropriation, as the regular appropriation for this purpose is entirely exhausted, and the supply of stamps on hand will also be exhausted in a few days. If the Department is left without the means of procuring an additional supply it will suffer most serious inconvenience in transacting its ordinary business, while great embarrassment and pecumary loss will result to many important business interests by the inability of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to forward to collectors of internal revenue the stamps which must be affixed to every package of distilled spirits, tobacco, cigars, snuff, or fermented liquors, before it can be removed from the place of manufacture or bonded warehouse, and which by existing law are required to be sent to collectors through the mails in registered packages.

This is a very important matter to the Department, and your attention is thus specially called to it with a view of obtaining the needed appropriation at the earliest possible moment.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. F. CONANT. Acting Scoretary.

Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. I think there can be no question about the bill. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WEST (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1266) to provide for the election of directors of national banks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORT ON EUROPEAN SHIPS OF WAR.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved. That 1,000 copies of the letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the report of J. W. King, chief engineer United States Navy, on European ships of war, be printed for the use of the Secretary of the Navy.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHAFFEE, Mr. DORSEY, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. HITCH-COCK submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 1231) for the relief of the board of trustees of the Antietam National Cemetery be recom-mitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY IN MEMPHIS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4576. It is merely to correct the boundaries of certain lands given to the United States by the city of Memphis for public build-ings there. It has been acted upon by the House. It will give rise to no debate at all.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4576) to provide for changing and fixing the boundaries of certain property ceded to the Government of the United States by the city of Memphis, Tennessee. Mr. MORRILL. I will merely state that the bill corrects the boundaries and surrenders land that we do not want for land that we do ant. That is all there is to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2382) granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas

State of Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion?

Mr. WRIGHT. When was the bill reported?

Mr. DORSEY. The bill was reported a few days ago from the Committee on Public Lands as a substitute to the bill reported probably two weeks ago, and it has been printed and lies on our table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the substitute was reported the day before yesterday.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is there anything in the bill, aside from a mere grant to the road of the right of way over this reservation?

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, sir; there is a provision in the bill for the disposition of the Hot Springs reservation, the entire disposition of that question.

question.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say, then, while I have no wish at all to postpone this bill, that two bills upon that subject have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and are now under consideration there. They have been referred by the committee to a subcommittee who are at present considering the subject. I call the attention of the Senate to this fact. I appreciate with the Senator the very great importance of an early disposition of this question, not alone so far as the interests of the Government are concerned, but in the interest of the people upon the reservation as well, yet this bill having been reported day before yesterday I have not had any opportunity to examine it, and I suggest that it go over for at least a day or two that I may have time to examine it.

I may have time to examine it.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator from Iowa objects, of course one objection takes the bill over until to-morrow. I shall endeavor to-morrow to have the bill taken up and finally acted upon.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish the Senator from Arkansas to understand Mr. WRIGHT. I wish the Schator from Arkansas to understand that I do not mean to be understood as in the position of an objector. Mr. DORSEY. Certainly not; I understand the Schator. Mr. WRIGHT. I merely state the circumstance and give the reasons why the Schator should not press the bill at this time. Mr. DORSEY. I shall not press the bill to-day, but to-morrow I will endeavor to call it up and have it acted upon.

Mr. CLAYTON. Do I understand that one objection carries the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection prevents the Chair from entertaining a motion to go to the Calendar within the morn-from entertaining a motion to go to the Calendar within the morning hour.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether the bill which has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary provides for the final disposition of this property? I think there is but one bill which provides for its final disposition, and that is the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT. My impression is that two bills have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary on this subject, covering the whole ground with reference to the disposition of the Hot Springs reservation.

Mr. LOGAN. This matter I believe is disposed of for to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. This matter I believe is disposed of for to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Arkanas cannot be now entertained, objection being made.

THE SILVER DOLLAR.

Mr. LOGAN. I gave notice yesterday that I should call up at the first opportunity the bill (S. No. 1026) for the issue of silver coin and to make the silver dollar a legal tender, reported from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion?

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know whether the Senator from Illinois

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion?
Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know whether the Senator from Illinois proposes to call the bill up this morning for action.
Mr. LOGAN. Why not?
Mr. MORRILL. I will say to him that the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] the chairman of the Comimttee on Finance, who is familiar with the bill and reported it, is absent from the Senate and will not be here writil to more results.

with the bill and reported it, is absent from the Senate and will not be here until to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that this is a bill which I drafted myself and had referred to the Committee on Finance. It was reported back as a substitute for the House bill. The chairman of the Committee on Finance said to me that I could call it up whenever I desired. I do not know that anybody on the committee will urge it very much except two or three members, and I do not think it is material whether the chairman is here or not so far as this bill is concerned. When I say that, I only mean that I do not know that the chairman of the committee desires to urge the bill or to oppose it, but it is a bill which I drew myself and introduced. The chairman of the committee told me to take charge of it. duced. The chairman of the committee told me to take charge of it, and that I could call it up whenever I desired. My desire is to call it up whenever I can. It is a very important measure, and one that the country is looking to the Senate to take same action upon.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object to the bill being called up at the earliest moment at which action can be properly had and the subject fairly considered; but it seems to me that common courtesy would require that the Senate should wait until the chairman of the Comrequire that the Senate should wait until the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who, I know, and so does the Senator, takes a deep interest in the silver question, is here. I saw by the RECORD of this morning that the Senator from Illinois gave notice that he would call up the bill to-day. I did not happen to be in the Senate yesterday morning when he gave the notice; but I must say that it takes me somewhat by surprise that he should propose to take up in the morning hour a question of such grave import as this is, and one which must lead to a protracted discussion; for no bill of this kind can be expected to pass until it is thoroughly examined, while no more than one or two or three or half a dozen Senators may take part in the debate. I suggest to the Senator to give notice of some day in the debate. I suggest to the Senator to give notice of some day when he will call up and discuss the measure.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I do not desire to press any measure in this Senate in opposition to the views of certain gentlemen in the Senate. I am very well aware that neither this bill nor any other bill remonetizing the silver dollar will ever get a hearing in the Senate unless it is pressed.

Mr. MORRILL. I will help the Senator bring up the bill at the proper time

Mr. LOGAN. I know; but the question has been before the Senate Mr. LOGAN. I know; but the question has been before the Senate over a year. I have time and again asked for a vote, merely a vote, on this question in the Senate. The House have passed two bills, or probably three bills on this subject, which have been referred to the Committee on Finance. None of those bills has been reported back except this which is reported as a substitute for a House bill—a bill that I drafted over a year ago; that has been lying on the table ever since; that has been sent back to the committee once and held there at that if the been always impossible to get this question before the so that it has been almost impossible to get this question before the Senate. It has been, however, discussed before the Senate. It has been discussed by the chairman of the Committee on Finance; it has been discussed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Morrill] it has been discussed by the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. Jones,] the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Bogy,] and other Senators. There has been a full discussion time and again in this Senate Chamber; but yet the time seems never to come when we can take a vote on a bill of this kind.

I do not wish to find any fault with any gentleman, but I do have this to say: When measures come before the Senate of the United States we ought at least to have candor and fairness enough to oppose a bill if we are opposed to it or to vote for it if we are in favor of it and not try to kill it by lapse of time or by references, or anything of that kind. I fear this bill will be killed because of want of time. I am as well satisfied of it as I can be of anything. It is to be killed by delay, by motions to postpone, and by everything of

The Senator from Vermont, I am satisfied, will oppose the bill when it comes up, for I do not believe he thinks there is anything in the world that ought to be money but gold or diamonds or something of that kind; but I differ with him in that. I propose to the Senator, if he will agree to it, to fix a time when this bill shall be taken up and discussed and acted on. He think it very important that the and discussed and acted on. He think it very important that the chairman of the committee should be here and that we cannot do any business until the chairman is here. I do not understand the Senate to be run in that way. If the chairman of the committee is not here it is not our fault. This matter is important enough before the country to be acted on. I have great respect for the chairman of this committee and for his opinions, and always have had; but I am not responsible for his absence. I feel it my duty to attempt at every opportunity that offers to get this question before the Senate and let the country know how we stand upon it. I have tried for over a year to get a vote on it, but have not been able to do so. Now I propose to take it up on Monday, if the Senator from Vermont will agree to that. Let it be set down for Monday.

Mr. MORRILL. I have not the slightest objection to Monday, and so far as I am concerned shall be ready to consider the bill at as early a day as that mentioned; but the Senator ought not to say that there has been any disposition to push this bill aside. It is well known to the Senate that an able commission was appointed at the last session to investigate and report upon this subject. As a matter due to them, in deference to their thorough investigation of this subject, it has been thought I suppose on all sides of the Senate that we should wait until the report from that commission should be made. I must say that so far as I am concerned I have been disappointed that that commission has not made its report earlier, and I notice by reading the RECORD this morning that they have got a postponement of ten days more.

Mr. LOGAN. Ten days? No, sir; until the next session of Congress, is it not

Mr. BOUTWELL. Until the 24th of February.
Mr. LOGAN. The 24th of this mouth. That means that this bill shall not be acted on at all. I do not say it means that on the report of the commission. I have great respect for the commission, for their ability, for their perseverance in trying to hunt up the facts in reference to the subject; but at the same time that I have respect for the commission I have just as much respect for my own judg-ment; and I think every other Senator has or ought to have for his; but I do not think the report of the commission will change the judgment of a solitary man in this Senate in reference to the remonetiz-ing of the silver dollar that was demonetized by a trick of legisla-

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am sure that this commission, so far as I understand its composition, is not unfriendly to a further issue of silver currency in some form.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not intimate that they were. I know nothing about what their opinions are, and I say I have great respect for their opinions, but I do not think their report will change the views of Senators in reference to restoring that which was destroyed by an act that no Senator or member can stand before this Senate and tell how was done, and none ever has been able to tell.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Senator is very much mistaken in characterizing the act of 1873 in the terms in which he does; but when it comes to the question whether our opinions will be changed by the report, it will depend entirely upon the character and the ability of the report. Before I express my opinion as to whether I shall change the views that I have heretofore held on this subject, I would prefer much to hear the report and consider it. I think it would be no more than fair to do that. But I have not the slightest idea of trying to postpone action upon this bill. All I desire is that idea of trying to postpone action upon this bill. All I desire is that we shall have time to consider it, and that there shall be a proper time designated for its consideration, and that we wait until the chairman of the Finance Committee is here, who certainly has taken more time to investigate the subject than perhaps any other member of the Finance Committee. I think it would be eminently proper that we should wait until he is present before the subject is called up.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not suppose it will be necessary for other members of the committee to say anything about their investigations. They might not get very much credit for them if they did. I move that this bill be made the special order for Monday at one o'clock, and hope we may have a vote on that motion.

hope we may have a vote on that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to make this bill the special order for Monday next at one o'clock.

Mr. BOGY. While I do not object to the motion made by the Sen-to make this bill the special order for Monday next at one o'clock.

Mr. BOGY. While I do not object to the motion made by the Senator from Illinois, because like him I am anxious for the passage of some bill upon this subject, nevertheless there are a great many reasons why we should not take it up without a great deal of reflection. I will mention, merely by way of illustration, the question of the relation of silver to gold. Whether we should make the silver dollar 16 to 1 or 15½ to 1 is a very grave question. If you make the silver dollar 16 to 1 while in the remainder of the commercial world it is 15½ to 1 very legislation will not only be useless but will be directly into 1, your legislation will not only be useless but will be directly injurious, and the friends of the measure, instead of being benefited, would receive direct injury, as the coined silver would be immediately exported as a mere article of commerce. Therefore, the subject is one full of complications.

I have the honor of being a member of the silver commission, and although the report which will be made by that commission within a very few days may not be very able, yet it will show great labor. I devoted myself two months in the city of New York to the investigation of this subject, and consulted with the best and most intelligent men in that city, and the more I penetrated into the matter the greater the difficulties presented themselves. It is really a great and grave subject, and it assumes complications and difficulties in proportion to the investigation that may be bestowed upon it.

tion to the investigation that may be bestowed upon it.

If we pass the bill of the House, which fixes the relation at 16 to 1, we may commit a very great error. On the other hand, if we attempt to retain the silver dollar at 412.8 grains, as is the case now, it being the old American standard dollar, you may retain what perhaps cannot be maintained. If you attempt to vary the relation by an increase of the gold dollar and let the silver dollar remain at its present weight, you may encounter difficulties which may make it impossible to pass the bill.

So, sir, without detaining the Senate, the subject is one full of complications. The report of the commissioner, I think, will be made in very few days. In point of fact, it is delayed now, in a great measure, by the difficulty in having it printed. The report is ready, and would have been ready some days ago if the printing for the Senate was going on, so that each member of the commission could have had was going on, so that each member of the commission of the annot be an opportunity to examine it for himself. As it is now, it cannot be printed, and the consequence is that we are thrown into a basty investigation in a common room and have met with great delay. The report was ready last week; it was all prepared; but we could not get it printed so that all the members of the commission could examine it separately.

I concur with the Senator from Illinois on this subject. We have concurred from the beginning. I am in favor of the restoration of the silver dollar as soon as possible; but while I am in favor of this restoration of the silver dollar, I wish to do it in such a way as to produce a benefit, and not an injury; and if you fix the relation wrong you may do a very great injury. Consequently, while I concur with the Senator and agree with him in views, I am not prepared to urge at this moment that too early a day be fixed. I think it would be wiser to let it lie over for at least two or three days more and then we may dispose of it more intelligently. As it is now it might lead to most disastrous results. The whole West, I may say, is in favor of the restoration of silver as a legal tender; but, while this is so, it must not be done in a bungling manner.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say in answer to the Senator that I think the earlier we reach it, so that we may receive some of this valuable information that these gentlemen have, because of course they cerintormation that these gentlemen have, because or course they certainly have not forgotten it all and they can give it to us in their arguments, the more readily we shall be enlightened on the subject. The Senator certainly shows that it is a very great subject and a very important question, and having given so much time to it as he has he certainly understands it perfectly, and therefore is qualified in every respect to enlighten the Senate upon it on Monday next, and we shall be very glad to hear from him, because it is, I presume, a very difficult question. I do not claim that I have made so great an very difficult question. I do not claim that I have made so great an examination of it myself, I probably go more on general principles than I do on anything else; but I know that it is considered a very important question by the country, and I deem it a very important question, and it is so important that I think it should be acted on and pressed to its passage pressed to its passage.

Mr. BOGY. I will inform the Senator from Illinois that it is so important that I think it should not be acted on hastily. I feel its importance myself, and the Legislature of my State has passed joint resolutions on the subject, and, if I am not mistaken, they are unanimous in favor of the bill offered by the Senator from Illinois, in favor of the bill designated as Logan's bill. I know the sentiment of the Legislature of my State on that subject, and I may say without regard to party they are in favor of the general proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. This is no question of party.

Mr. BOGY. I think the action of the Legislature of the State of Missouri was unanimous or very nearly so. I think it was unanimous.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri whether in the report that his commission will make to the Senate they propose the report that his commission will make to the Senate they propose

Mr. BOGY. I will inform the Senator that they do not propose to report a bill, because the preparation of a bill is a very easy and short thing. Your own bill is very short. Although the subject is very comprehensive the bill is very short. It does not require a lengthy bill, no matter how you may put it.

Mr. LOGAN. That is exactly what I thought. After so much study has been given to this great measure, and so much thought, it doe seem to me that somebody that understands it ought to report a bill, or introduce a bill. These gentlemen who have so thoroughly investigated it ought certainly to propose a bill to us, and then explain it

mr. BOGAN. If I have by accident struck as good a bill as could be prepared. It may be modified as to the relation.

Mr. LOGAN. If I have by accident struck as good a bill as could be prepared, without examination of the question, that bill then can receive the suggestions at least of those gentlemen who do understand the question, when it comes up. I should like, if the bill that I have prepared is not suitable, to have the genius and the learning of these gentlemen exhibited in drafting or supplementing it in some way by one that would be satisfactory to the country.

Now, Mr. President, I insist on my motion, that this bill be set down for a hearing on Monday next at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the bill be made the special order for Monday next at one o'clock.

I do not wish to raise any objections to the consid-Mr. WINDOM. I do not wish to raise any objections to the consideration of this bill, for I am very much in favor of it, or at least in favor of the consideration of the silver question; but I want to notify the Senate that as soon as the Printing Office can be started again, the Committee on Appropriations desire to press their bills. There are two important bills, as I stated to the Senate last evening, the post-office and the legislative appropriation bills, which have been reported back to the Senate and are ready for action. We desire to call them up, but there is no money to print them with, and it is impossible to up, but there is no money to print them with, and it is impossible to act upon them until we can have them printed.

Mr. LOGAN. Special orders always give way to appropriation bills. Mr. WINDOM. With that understanding 1 have no objection to the motion.

Mr. LOGAN. That has always been done by the Senate, and I certainly should not stand in the way of a great appropriation bill; but I ask that this bill be set down for Monday, subject to the order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to make this bill the special order for Monday next at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to by a two-thirds vote.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Bepresentatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, with certain amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate that the monetary commission created by the joint resolution of August 15, 1876, be allowed until the 24th of February, 1877, to submit their report.

The message also announced that the House had passed the Senate concurrent resolution for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the report of the joint special committee on Chinese immigration, with the accompanying testimony.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 2,000 copies in book form, suitably bound, of the memorial addresses on the life and character of Hon. Michael C. Kerr, late Speaker of the House of Representatives; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

CHARLES C. CAMPBELL.

Mr. WRIGHT. If there be no more morning business, I wish to appeal to the Senate once more to take up a little bill, what is known as the Campbell bill, reported from the Committee on Claims. I refer to the bill (H. R. No. 429) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. WRIGHT. That report has been read, I believe, once or twice. It is a very short time now before the expiration of the morning hour.

I think the report had better be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. WRIGHT, submitted by the Committee on Claims on the 17th of January last.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from Iowa. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment to Charles C. Campbell of $6,000 for property taken and used as supplies by the armies of the United States under Generals Stoneman and Burbridge, in the year 1864, while upon their marches in the States of Virginia and Tennessee; which sum is to be in full satisfaction of all claims of said Campbell against the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHARLES E. BOGGS.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 457) authorizing the restoration of Charles E. Boggs to the active list.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to in-

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to restore Assistant Paymaster Charles E. Boggs, now on the retired list, to the active list of the Navy: Provided, That no extra pay shall be given him for the period prior to his restoration.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to inquire on what ground this officer

Mr. CRAGIN. This officer is a young officer, and he was examined for promotion by the board and they failed to recommend him for promotion, and by law he went on the retired list; but it all grew out of a little circumstance that when stationed in New York City he and another officer took some young ladies on board a vessel and they were there entertained, and some of the other officers thought it was unbecoming and they made charges against this young man. The Department recommend his restoration and two members of the board who failed to recommend him for promotion have joined in recommending that he be restored. He is a young officer upon the retired list, drawing almost as much pay as he would upon the active list. So far as is known to the committee or the board, those ladies were entirely respectable. It was simply a matter of gallantry in the officers. The Department recommend this bill, and the committee have reported it.

Mr. LOGAN. That does not answer the inquiry I made. I asked why he was retired.

Mr. CRAGIN. The law in relation to the retirement of naval officers is this: When an officer comes to be examined for promotion, if the board fail to recommend him for promotion by law he goes directly upon the retired list. They may fail to recommend him for any cause within their own knowledge, without giving any reason whatever, and they gave no reason in this case.

Mr. LOGAN. They retire, then, irrespective of age.

Mr. CRAGIN. Irrespective of age, if a man fails to be recommended for presention.

for promotion.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I would suggest to the Naval Committee that it had better amend that law, because it certainly is a villainous law, there can be no doubt about that, that where a man fails to be promoted he is to be retired irrespective of his age or condition or anything else. If that is the law, it certainly is a villainous one, and it ought to be amended. I merely make the suggestion. If it is the law, I have nothing to say about this bill. I merely wanted to know how a young man could get on the retired list merely by a failure to be promoted. If that is the law in the Navy, I think the Naval Committee had better make some recommendation for its amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the Senate take up the message from the House of Representatives on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The CHEF CLERK. The House of Representatives concur in the second, third, fifth, and sixth amendments of the Senate with amendments as follows:

Ments as 10 lows:

Strike out "four," in the second amendment of the Senate, and insert "three;" and after the word "thousand," in line 22, page 10 of the bill, insert the words "five hundred."

Strike out the word "four," in the third amendment of the Senate, and insert the word "three;" and after the word "thousand," in line 23, page 10 of the bill, insert "five hundred."

Strike out the words "one thousand," in the fifth amendment of the Senate, and insert the words "seven hundred and fifty."

Strike out the words "ten thousand two hundred and twelve," in the sixth amendment of the Senate, and insert the words "eighty-nine hundred and sixty-two."

Mr. SARGENT. I move to concur in the House amendments to our amendments. They are matters of detail and of very slight importance, simply reducing by a little the amendments of the Senate.

The motion to concur was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 691) for the relief of Edward A. Leland.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1184) to ratify an agreement with certain bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians, and also with the Northern Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of the late Admiral Charles Wilkes;
A bill (S. No. 805) relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California;
A bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850;
A bill (S. No. 1251) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E.

A bill (S. No. 234) to amend section 4698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg, in lieu of $24 per month,

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the unfinished business is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of the said first-named act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.]

The amendment to the amendment was to strike out all after the word "that," in the first line of its second section, and in lieu thereof to insert:

The said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company shall each pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $750,000 per annum in equal semi-annual installments on the 1st day of April and October in each year, commencing on the 1st day of October, 1877, in lawful money, until said sums, with interest thereon as hereinafter provided, shall be sufficient, when added to the other sums to the credit of said sinking fund, to pay off and extinguish the Government bonds at maturity, advanced as aforesaid, with 6 per cent. Interest thereon, from their respective dates up to the date when they are so paid and extinguished as aforesaid. Interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking fund shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum: Provided, however, That, if the foregoing provision shall prevent insufficient to extinguish the Government bonds and interest thereon at maturity as aforesaid, the semi-annual payments shall be increased to such a sum as shall be sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. WEST. I presume it is the design of the Senator who offered that amendment to supplement it with some provision in a subsequent part of the bill making that stipulation compulsory on the part of the companies. Am I correct in that?

Mr. BOOTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEST. There are some difficulties connected with this amendment, but they may not be irreconcilable to possible legislation. I would call the attention of the Senator himself, who moved the amendment, to the fact that he had by a preceding amendment provided that the contingent payments of 5 per cent. of the net earnings and the amount retained by the Government for transportation, &c., should be first architect the register of the net earnings. be first credited to the railroad companies and retained in the Treas or mst credited to the railroad companies and retained in the Treasury, and this payment is to be made in addition to that, and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix the amount. Now, I ask him, when there is no determining what will be the annual amount accruing to the Treasury of the United States from the earnings, either the 5 per cent. or the amount of transportation, as that amount is floating and vacillating, as he himself remarked, likely to be increased at one time during a war to a very large sum and likely to be abated again to a very trivial sum how can very fix sami annually the again to a very trivial sum, how can you fix semi-annually the amount that shall be paid by these companies and adjusted to that? That is the practical difficulty in the way of the application of that amendment.

There is a much graver difficulty; for whatever there might have been in the way of stringency in the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, the amendment now offered by the honorable Senator from California [Mr. Booth] makes this proposition still more stringent, much more so than the bill of the Judiciary Committee, because the bill of the Judiciary Committee made a sliding scale, as it were, contingent on the earnings of the companies or their ability to pay, while the proposition of the Senator from California is an absolute one and cannot be varied in any way. Furthermore, it does not do what the Judiciary Committee bill did, provide for the protection of the first-mortgage bonds; but it extends the illimitable power which the Senator contends the Congress of the United States possess of altering, amending receasing even to making the second mortgage of the Gov. amending, repealing, even to making the second mortgage of the Government of the United States take precedence over the first, because this is a provision to pay the Government bonds, and requires that they shall be paid by the companies. Nothing is said as to what becomes of the first-mortgage bonds at all; but where you compel these men to pay this money it must go to the credit of the Government itself by the terms of the Senator's amendment:

That if the foregoing provision shall prove insufficient to extinguish the Government bonds and interest thereon at maturity as aforesaid, the semi-annual payments shall be increased to such sum as shall be sufficient for that purpose.

The Senator says that he will follow up that provision with a stipu-The Senator says that he will follow up that provision with a stipulation compelling these companies to pay this money. Consequently it is really requiring from them to begin now to pay those bonds—something that the Supreme Court has said they are not required to do. These difficulties having occurred to me, I shall be very happy to have any explanation, or have the Senator state that I am incorrect in my view of his amendment. I have stated the amendment to him and to the Senate as I look at it; perhaps I may be in error.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, I wish to state with entire frankness that I have no idea that any amendment can be made to this bill which will secure my support. My only object in offering amendments is to make it so good a bill that its present friends will not support it. The theory of this amendment is that in place of postponing payment by the companies to the Government until 1912, and giving port it. The theory of this amendment is that in place of postponing payment by the companies to the Government until 1912, and giving them the benefit of this accumulated compound interest, by which $1 paid into the Treasury now shall discharge $8.50 of indebtedness, the term shall be fixed when the bonds themselves become due, at which the accumulations of this sinking fund shall discharge the debt. There may be some difficulty in making that calculation; but I do not think it will be an insuperable difficulty. If they should be required to pay too much in one year, it can easily be deducted from the amount they shall pay in the next.

That is the theory of all the amendments I have offered or shall offer; first, that it is in the power of Congress to compel these companies to discharge the amount, principal and interest, of the bonds when the Government itself has to pay them; that they have the power, and it is their duty to exercise it, to compel these companies to provide such a sinking fund in order to protect this Government. That is the scope, theory, and object of all the amendments that I shall offer; and I frankly repeat that I believe, to borrow an expression from the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] that this bill is so paved with dynamite that nobody can touch it with safety.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr.

Mr. WEST. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOGY. This appears to be exactly the same as the bill offered by the Senator from Georgia. I do not understand the amendment. I should like to have the amendment explained. I am disposed to concur with the Senator from California in his views as to this measure; but it seems to me, as well as I can understand the reading, that the words read by the Clerk are the same as are now in the bill of the Senator from Georgia. Will the Senator from California explain the

Mr. BOOTH. The purport of the words omitted in the amendment is "1912," and "the maturity of the bonds themselves" is substituted is "1912," and "the maturity of the bonds themselves" is substituted as the date at which they must be met by the companies.

Mr. WEST. And the fixed amount is omitted.

Mr. BOGY. The result is to fix the period of maturity, to take the actual maturity instead of 1912.

Mr. BOOTH. That is the material object; but there is one other amendment, to strike out from the text of the section the words that amendment, to strike out from the text of the section the words that the companies might pay "either in lawful money or in any bonds." The only object I have in striking out those words is that they would have the effect (although I do not think it was contemplated by the committee that reported the bill) of giving the companies the option to pay into the Treasury bonds of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WEST. The stipulation for the character of the payments that shall be made by these companies is in the original act:

The said company may also pay the United States wholly or in part in the same or other bonds.

And the bill of the Senator from Georgia carries out that intent by And the bill of the Senator from Georgia carries out that intent by its provisions. Omitting that is not, perhaps, a material matter; but this amendment itself makes the Government's second mortgage take precedence over the first. Is it any wonder that the Senator says that he considers the power of Congress in this case i.limitable when, by his amendment, he proposes to proceed to that extent? That is the virtual act of the amendment, and I ask the Senator if it is not so.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, I do not care particularly to get into a debate on cross-examination this morning. The Senator can place his own interpretation on my amendment. He says it has that effect. Lay that practically it will have no such effect; that the first mort-

I say that practically it will have no such effect; that the first mortgage is amply secured and will be amply secured after these companies are compelled to provide this sinking fund. The Senator said, in remarks which he made when this bill was under discussion before, that if these amendments should prevail the practical effect would be that under a decision of the Supreme Court this Government would lose $100,000,000. Surely the Senator is mistaken. The moral obligation will remain the same. Why, these companies are besieging us all the time to allow them to pay this indebtedness, so that they realize the moral obligation. It requires, according to the Sen-ator, the ingenuity of the Committee on the Judiciary to prevent these ator, the ingenuity of the Committee on the Judiciary to prevent these companies from coming in and paying off this debt.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from California allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOOTH. For what purpose?

Mr. MITCHELL. For the purpose of understanding the effect of the amendment that the Senator proposes.

Mr. BOOTH. If I could furnish the Senator with all the understanding he needs on this bill, I should be happy to do so; but I fear I cannot.

I cannot.

Mr. MITCHELL. I presume it is not for the Senator from California to determine for me what my action shall be or what my notives are in connection with the bill. The Senator from California has offered an amendment to the pending bill which he had a perfect right to do. I have a right, it appears to me, to make a proper inquiry of him in connection with the effect of that amendment. What I wanted to know is this, and I think the inquiry is pertinent; I think it is one that the Senate ought to understand: This amendment, as I understand it, if adopted, will compel these companies respectively to pay into the Treasury of the United States as a sinking fund the sum annually of $1,500,000; in other words, it requires each of the companies to pay the sum of $750,000 at the end of each six months, whether they earn that amount or not, without any six months, whether they earn that amount or not, without any kind of reference to the question whether their net earnings will be $1,500,000 annually or will be $750,000 every six months. Now suppose this provision becomes a law and suppose it should turn out as a matter of fact—I do not say it will turn out that way—that the earnings of each company for a year do not exceed $1,500,000, then I want to know where the money is to come from with which to pay the interest to the holders of the first-mortgage bonds; and if there is no money left, if the payment of the $1,500,000 annually should exhaust the net carnings of the companies, then I want to know it this amendment does not interfere directly with the rights of the first-mortgage bondholders !

If it is demonstrative, if it is a fact that the earnings of the companies are largely in excess of this amount, so that there would be a sufficient surplus to meet the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, then so far as this part of my objection to the amendment is con-cerned it amounts to nothing. Of course there are other objections, as I conceive, to the adoption of this amendment. These other ob-jections find their support in the constitutional views that have been urged by very many Senators on this floor against the general character of this legislation, namely, whether Congress has the power to in-terfere by amendment or repeal with what is understood to be and what, in my judgment, is a contract, a solemn contract made between the Government upon the one part and certain railroad companies upon the other part, a contract sanctioned by the highest power known to this Government in its legislative capacity.

As I said the other day, and as has been stated by several Senators upon the floor, the only reservation made by the Government, and it is plain, so far as such reservation looked to a provision for a sinking fund to meet this indebtedness at its maturity, was the one-half of the compensation for service rendered by these companies to the Government and 5 per cent. of the net earnings annually of the companies. If Congress has a right to so amend this law as to go beyond that and as to compel the payment of interest annually when the Supreme Court of the United States says it is not due for thirty years, and if they can fix a sum total that these companies must pay and if they can fix a sum total that these companies must pay into the Treasury every six months or every year in excess of what these several sums would amount to, then what is to prevent them, I want to know, from going to any extent? Where is the power, I ask the Senator from California? Where do you get it? If he can satisfy me that we have the power, I will vote cheerfully for the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee and be glad to do it; but until I am satisfied of that fact, I will vote neither for that bill nor for any other bill that will in my judgment contravene a solemn contract entered into between the Government and these corporations. And in saving what I do I do not mean to be understood as opposing a proper saying what I do I do not mean to be understood as opposing a proper bill providing for a sinking fund with which to meet this indebted-

The very same objection that is made now by the honorable Sena-The very same objection that is made now by the honorable Sena-ator from California and by others was made here on this floor and in the other end of Congress when the question was raised some two or three years ago in regard to the power of Congress to compel these companies to refund annually to the Government the interest paid by the Government. It was contended by certain Senators and mem-bers of the House that that was something which the Congress of the United States had no power to do. Upon the other hand, it was said that Congress had the power, and that it was the duty of Congress to do it. The whole matter was referred to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims decided that no such power existed, that the in-terest was not due until the bonds matured; and on appeal to the terest was not due until the bonds matured; and on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States that decision was unanimously affirmed. And now, in the face of that decision, will it be said that Congress can step in and do indirectly what the Supreme Court has said you cannot do directly, namely, compel these companies to pay

Now I do not think it ought to be said by the Senator from California or by any other Senator that he will try to amend this bill so as to make it such a good bill that even the friends of the bill will not support it. I do not think that the Senators who have vindicated the bill reported from the Railroad Committee are exactly in a pesition to be criticised in that ironical kind of manner. We have stated frankly the reason why we cannot go for the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee; and that is, because we as lawyers do not believe we have the power to go for the bill. We do not stand alone. The Judiciary Committee are not by any means united on the bill reported by that committee. The able lawyers of that committee have divided on this question, if I have understood the debates correctly, in reference to the constitutional power of Congress over this matter. Very able lawyers of the Senate that belong to neither of these committees have taken this position, that Congress has no constitutional powers to pass any such bill. That being the case, I appeal to the Senator from California whether we ought to be subjected to the ironical criticism that he will so amend this bill that it will become under his amendments such a good bill that even the friends of the bill will desert it.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon says that if I can satisfy him of the constitutional power to pass an act that would compel these companies to liquidate their indebtedness when it becomes due he will support it. I have no such power. I am not supernaturally endowed.

supernaturally endowed.

The Senator says that he would be in favor of compelling the companies to provide a sinking fund, if I properly understood him. That is what we are in favor of; that is all. According to the Senator, it is perfectly right and perfectly proper to compel them to pay into the Treasury $750,000, which, under the operation of compound interest, will extinguish the debt in 1912; but it is a violation of every constitutional right to compel them to pay in double that sum to extinguish the debt when it becomes due. That, sir, is a question of figures, not of constitutional law. That is to say, it is perfectly constitutional to allow them to do an unjust thing, but unconstitutional to compel them to fulfill the letter of their contract.

Why, Mr. President, if I have read this bill from the Railroad Committee aright they do not provide anywhere that if these railroad companies fail to earn $1,500,000 a part of it shall be remitted. What is the necessity of providing for a contingency that in no human probability will ever arise, and if it did arise Congress would deal with it then far better than now, because it would have more intelligence on the matter.

Now, one word about the first-mortgage bondholders that flit before our eyes. Whenever we try to do justice to the Government this consideration is something that is held up between the Government and the companies. The first-mortgage bonds were issued subject to that provision of the law reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal it. Is there any danger that at any time the Congress of the United States will pursue a policy that will impair the contract between the companies and the first-mortgage bondholders? None in the world. No one proposes to assail that. We used to be treated to the injustice that would be done to the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company—the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, which, under the operation of the Judiciary Committee bill, would not be touched at all.

That was Dives rolling himself in the rags of Lazarus that he might steal into Abraham's bosom.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to detain the Senate by a discussion of the merits of this bill; but I desire to call the attention of Senators to the effect of this amendment. There seems to be a disposition in the Senate on the part of some to make a warfare generally upon the rights of these corporations, and a disposition on the part of others to claim some imaginary rights on the part of the Government, and on the part of others a disposition to act fairly as between the Government and these corporations, for the purpose of satisfying both if possible, and at the same time protecting the Government in all that it fairly demands of these corporations. I have no personal grievance myself, either with the Government on the one side or the railroad companies on the other. I desire, so far as my action is con-railroad companies on the other. I desire, so far as my action is concerned, to try to act justly as between these parties.

The Senator from California offered an amendment yesterday to section 3, and this morning to section 2. His amendment to section 3 yesterday was adopted by two majority, I believe, striking out the words in line 2 "in lieu of," and inserting "in addition to." What was the effect of that amendment? Section 2 provides that the companies shall pay a certain amount of money into the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of liquidating the obligations against them on the part of the Government held by the Government, and that these liquidations shall go on until the year 1912, and that if all the deficiency on their part is not supplied by this payment, then additions shall be made to it by the corporations to make up the sum.

This little extension of time is proposed to be given to them by reason of their paying a certain amount of money into the Treasury annually, and that money is to liquidate the obligation on the part of the companies to the Government, and when that was paid in and this obligation liquidated, it was to be received by the Government in lieu of what? In lieu of the amount of the bonds maturing at the end of thirty years. That language in section 3 was important and necessary if section 2 should be adopted by Congress, because if you strike out the words "in lieu of" and insert the words "in addition to," it makes them not only pay the obligations on them to the Governto," it makes them not only pay the obligations on them to the Government, but it makes them pay this million and a half dollars annually in addition to that, thus making a double payment. That is the effect precisely of the amendment of the Senator from California that was adopted yesterday. Now what is the effect of the present proposition of the Senator from California? Section 3 being amended yesterday so as to make this annual payment of one and a half millions in addition to the other payments that they are required to make, now he provides that this payment shall be made at maturity. That is the language, and that is the only change; for I think I know exactly what the Senator is driving at; I mean by that, what his language in the amend-

What then is the proposition? The proposition now is to strike out of section 2 the words "Government bonds advanced as aforesaid," and use the words "at maturity." What is the effect of that? said," and use the words "at maturity." What is the effect of that? The effect of that is to make the railroad companies pay the fifty-odd million dollars, according to the provisions of their charter, at maturity, and pay the million and a half under section 3 of this bill annually in addition thereto, and that total must be paid at the maturity of these bonds. That is the effect of the two amendments. I ask the Senator to tell me what other effect they will have?

Mr. BOOTH. Perhaps I do not understand the effect my amendment would have on this bill. I can only state the effect I intended it to have.

it to have.

Mr. LOGAN. I am speaking of the effect of the amendment.

Mr. BOOTH. I can state what I mean to be the effect of the amendment, taken in connection with the bill. Mr. LOGAN. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. BOOTH. I will try to explain. These companies now are under obligation to pay into the Treasury of the United States 5 per cent. upon the net earnings and one-half of the amount due from the Government to them for Government business. That is to be applied upon the principal and interest of the debt, and under legal construction would first apply upon the interest; and so far as it was a payment it would extinguish it to that amount, leaving less interest to be noid. to be paid.

Now the object of inserting the change in section 3 was this: that in addition to the amount they are already compelled to pay into the Treasury of the United States they should be compelled to pay a sum annually upon which they should be allowed compound interest, and that duly compounded until the bonds matured would meet the principal and the balance of the interest, if any, which had not been paid by this 5 per cent. and half transportation. That was the object. Mr. LOGAN. I believe that I did not mistake the Senator when I was speaking of the construction of his amendments, not as to what he intended. Evidently the construction of the amendments that he offered, which would be given to them if they should become a part of the law, unless I am very much mistaken, will be as I have stated. Now take it that he is correct—and I do not wish to discuss that propoare required to pay a certain per cent. into the Treasury, what then? For instance, to illustrate, the interest required by section 5 of the act of 1862 was to be paid semi-annually; but the Supreme Court has decided that the word "maturity" used in section 6 of the act of 1862 controlled the obligation, and therefore none of the interest was due on those bonds until the maturity of the bonds.

Mr. BOOTH. Allow me one moment.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BOOTH. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Supreme Court have decided that there is not due annually from these companies 5 per cent. and the half transportation, which amounts shall be paid upon accruing interest?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I was not discussing that proposition at all.

I was speaking of the interest. The amount of the transportation is a very different proposition.

Mr. BOOTH. The point I wished to make simply was that, although the Supreme Court have decided that the interest is not due until the maturity of the bonds, it is subject to the exception that the 5 per cent. upon net earnings and the one-half payment for transportation shall annually be applied to the interest that the Government pays.

Mr. LOGAN. That was not the proposition I was discussing at all. But the Senator is mistaken in reference to a portion of that, though I will not go into it. The proposition I was discussing, and it is the only thing that is material in the objection I make to the amendment, is that the Supreme Court have decided that the bonds and the interest thereon are not payable until their maturity.

In section 3, as I stated, it is provided that the million and a half of dollars to be paid annually shall be paid by the companies in lieu of what? In lieu of the amount that they are under obligation to pay of what? In lieu of the amount that they are under obligation to pay to the Treasury Department on their contract; that it shall be paid in lieu thereof, and up to 1912 that the amount shall liquidate the whole obligation—bonds, interest, 5 per cent., and all. The obligation is to be liquidated by these payments, so far as they go; and if they fail, then they are to pay the addition necessary to liquidate the amount of their obligation to the Government. That is the meaning of it; but you put the words "in addition to" instead of "in lieu of." That changes the whole sense of the section, and it makes them pay a "nillion and a half of dollars in addition to what? In addition to the obion and a half of dollars in addition to what? In addition to the obligation now on them by the Government. That is the meaning of it.

You cannot give it any other construction.

Then if you amend section 2, as the Senator from California has proposed to amend it, so as to use the word "maturity," and then construct that section after it is amended together with section 3 which you must do to get at the sense of the law and the understanding of the authority that makes the law, for you have got to examine them together, construe them together—what would be the meaning? The construction would be that under your amendment to section 2 they would have to pay the 5 per cent., have to pay this half amount of transportation, have to pay a million and a half of dollars annually in addition thereto, and liquidate the whole obligation at the end of thirty years. That is the meaning of the Senator's amendment, of thirty years. That is the meaning of the Senator's amendment, and you cannot give it any other construction.

Mr. BOOTH. The theory of the amendment is that this payment at 1900 would liquidate the whole obligation, and that is the object. The moneys are paid in for that purpose; they accumulate at compound interest for that purpose. That is the whole theory.

Mr. I.OGAN. I am not talking about compound interest. I am just talking about the meaning of the two amendments the Senator has proposed. When you take them together, instead of showing liberality on the part of the Government and a desire to settle this controversy with these railroad companies, it shows a disposition to crush out and destroy the corporations. As I said, I have no personal grievance either with the Government or with the corporations; therefore I am willing to act as I think is proper between the two, in order grievance either with the Government or with the corporations; therefore I am willing to act as I think is proper between the two, in order that there may be an arrangement made by which we shall not be in interminable litigation. That is my object, and the only object I have; and when gentlemen say they desire to amend these propositions and make the bill so good that the friends of the measure will not take it, it evinces in the presence of this Senate a disposition to crush out the rights of one for the purpose of gratifying something that God knows I will not attempt to describe.

These two amendments would make it impossible, according to the history of these corporations and their success, for them to carry out the bill. Add this obligation, besides that which the contract requires and compels them to live up to, and you say to them that their property shall be placed in such a position by the action of Congress that it is of no value, that the requirement on the part of the Government is far beyond that which the original contract was.

It was said here the other day that the only object was to make them live up to their contract. Is this amendment requiring them to live up to their contract? Is it not going far beyond the original contract? Is it not imposing upon them burdens and obligations that do not exist in the original contract? Where do you obtain that power? Where do you get the power to change the contract and impose burdens by one party upon the other without the consent of the other, except in your theory of your right to amend or alter your law. That I do not wish to discuss. I tried in my feeble way to discuss the power of Congress on that subject heretofore.

Now, sir, I am opposed to this amendment. I voted against the amendment yesterday to section 3. I did it because I believed the effect would be to impose an obligation upon these corporations that they cannot carry out and ought not to be required to do on the part of the Government.

of the Government.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have not enjoyed the pleasure or the profit of hearing any considerable part of the able discussion that has been had on this bill. It is quite possible that I may not fully understand all its provisions, and I rise therefore rather in a mood to ask questions than to answer them, to seek information rather than to give it. I have tried, however, to carefully study the bill which is reported from the Railroad Committee, and my conclusion has been that I could not see my way clear to give it my support, and for two or three reasons which I will briefly recapitulate. First, I think the period assigned for the final payment and liquidation of the debt due to the Government is too remote. I do not concur in the entire line of argument presented by the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] a day or two since. But there was one point of great importance which the Senator presented with force and aptness, showing that as you remove the date of final liquidation you may decrease the annual installment of the sinking fund, and that if instead of 1912 the date assigned by the pending bill, you insert 1930, or 1940, or 1950, you diminish in a very rapid ratio the sum to be paid each year, scaling indeed the three-quarters of a million now proposed down to a mere nominal sum.

Second. I am still further opposed to the fifth section of the bill. Taking what the amount required for ultimate liquidation would be and counting backward for an existing present value, you do not exactly realize the reductio ad absurdum, yet you do reach such a minimum point as shows that it amounts to no adequate payment at all. It is like looking at a man through one end of a telescope which draws him near to you, but forthwith you change it and look at him through the small end he becomes amazingly remote. I think that section has the power of infinite mischief in it, of disappointment to the people and serious disadvantage if not disaster to the whole funding scheme.

Third. I am opposed also to the proviso in the third section. I am opposed to making any condition that the Government shall or shall not patronize this road. I would leave that with the Government officials. I would leave it, as the phrase of the day goes, to "the laws of trade." I think the Departments of the Government that have had charge of the transportation are generally conscientious and upright. I think especially so in the Quartermaster's Department, which would have most to do on behalf of the Government with these companies in this respect, and that they may be left to select the most advantageous and the cheapest modes of transportation without the law hinding them to use the Pacific Railroad which would have most to do on behalf of the Government with these companies in this respect, and that they may be left to select the most advantageous and the cheapest modes of transportation without the law binding them to use the Pacific Railroad.

For these reasons and others that I might name I shall be constrained to vote against the bill originally introduced by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Gordon,] and substantially adopted by the Railroad Committee, whose chairman [Mr. West] has so ably presented it to the Senate.

On the other hand, I am very sure that I cannot vote for the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee. The judiciary bill simply means a lawsuit. That is all there is of it. I do not mean that the honorable and able committee which reports it means a lawsuit; but in effect it throws this whole case into litigation, where it has been now for years past, and where legislation of that kind will keep it for years to come. I do not believe we can do any greater disservice to the United States Treasury, whatever its effect might be on the railroad, which we are not here specially bound to consider, than to pass a bill of that character. It would be litigation, the law's delay, the law's uncertainty; and the law's uncertainty thus far has been a pretty absolute certainty against the Government in all the controversies and conflicts which we have had with these Pacific Railroad Companies. I want to keep out of the courts. "The burnt child dreads the fire." We certainly, to use a common phrase, have not had luck in the courts in our controversies with these two railroad companies. I do not say that they have not had right on their side; I am bound to presume they have had. They have had most important decisions in their favor from the very highest judicial tribunal known to our laws, and thus far I believe have come off victorious in every contest with the Government.

In its great economic and financial feature this question presents itself just about thus: Under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States they have the indulgence on their side of such a long postponement of the annual interest as waits until the maturity of the bonds. That is the law. We are bound to respect it. The gross sum owed to the Government by these two railroad companies when the bonds mature will be somewhere in the neighborhood of $140,000,000 or $150,000,000, and above that there lies a mortgage of about $54,000,000, making an aggregate, if nothing is done and nothing is settled when that point is reached at the end of the present century, of something over $200,000,000 which the Government would have invested. If it chose on its own account to raise the first mortgage and become the owner of the road the Government would have on its hands some eighteen or nineteen hundred miles of railway in which it had invested at the rate of $110,000 a mile. I do not think that would be a profitable investment. I do not think we ought to enact any legislation that would render that step possible. Nay, I do not think we ought to take any risks on the subject. Therefore I should be in favor of doing something. These railroad companies act in their own interest, and they will do that of course. There is a great deal said, and has been for a great many years, about the men who control these roads being grasping and avaricious, aiming at monopoly. Well, Mr. President, they are men; that is all. They have got hold of a great property and they maintain their rights and hold on to it, and they intend to keep all the law will give them. Everybody else would do the same thing in their place. They are men, I repeat, and that is all there is of it. They have got a property and they propose to protect it, and to appeal to the law, and I suppose to light it to the bitter end in defense of what they consider their legal rights. They would be more or less than men if they did differently.

Now, instead of making a bitter controversy, possibly extending on until the condition of things to which I have spoken comes to pass, when the Government confronts itself as the owner of this railroad at the enormous price of $110,000 per mile invested in it, is it not better if we can have some sort of adjustment that will be fair to the Government and fair to the railroads?

I was very much struck, I confess, in reading over the bill proposed possibly to be submitted as an amendment by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison.] It does not propose a specific sum annually. I am a little suspicious of specific sums. Compound interest and Babbager calculators are very deceptive, and there are no tabular statements brought into legislative halls that are not a little tinctured with interest on the one side or the other. They are made out against the railroad or they are made out for the railroads, and I distrust both. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] proposes, as I read it, to leave it to the Treasury Department to say just what sum shall be paid by those companies that shall entirely liquidate and discharge their obligation to the Government by the year 1905. I understood the Senator from California to indicate that he would go for a sinking fund which would discharge it in 1900. There is only a margin of five years difference then between the Senator from California and the Senator from Iowa. That is not a very great period in the life of a nation. It would hardly be wise to put this whole question at risk on a wrangle or difference between 1900 and 1905. I do not think the public judgment of the American people would justify the Senate of the United States in coming to a sharp issue with the railroad companies and throwing the whole thing to the doubtful hazards and chances of a suit at law, with its prolongations and its doubts and uncertainties, merely on the point of the ultimate liquidation being in 1900 instead of 1905.

I therefore have been and in reading over the amendment suggested.

I therefore have hoped in reading over the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa that his proposition might be brought before the Senate for a square vote. I could not support the one which the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] has presented from the Railroad Committee, and I could not vote for that of the Judiciary Committee, which, in my judgment, means litigation and controversy. But I would like to vote for some middle proposition that would be fair and just to all parties. While I have not examined the details with care and do not know but that there may be some to which I would not wholly assent, yet the general scope and purport of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa is one that commands my approval.

There is another consideration, Mr. President, which weighs heavily with me. I want to see an end of Pacific Railroad legislation in Congress. I hope to remain in Congress long enough to see a session go by without a Pacific Railroad bill coming before us. That is an ambition which I cherish and yet which in fourteen years I have never had gratified, and I shall never have it realized unless the length of my service should go beyond that of the honorable occupant of the chair [Mr. Anthony] if we go into such bills as the Judiciary Committee reported here. The amendment of the honorable Senator from Iowa proposes to leave this matter to the acceptance of the railroad companies to make a contract. Any bill which will go through here and adjust and end in any manner satisfactorily to the people must be in the nature of a contract; for, shielded as the railroad companies are from the obligation of paying the annual interest, they are in a position more advantageous than the Government itself, and they can continue this controversy and will continue it indefinitely at the Government's expense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] on which the year and pays have been ordered.

the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALCORN, (when his name was called.) On this bill and the amendments thereto I stand paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. Morton.] I would vote "yea" on this amendment, and if he were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. Sharon.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. CHAFFEE, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Sherman.] The Senator from Ohio if here would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on this amendment.

amendment.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I have very grave doubts whether the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea" on this amendment; but unless I can have some assurance on that subject I am not inclined to vote. I should vote "nay" if I felt at liberty to do so.

Mr. HAMLIN, (when his name was called.) I stated yesterday that I was paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] on the bill.

I was paired with the Senator from Onio [Mr. THURMAN] on the bill. From the general character of the subject I assume the Senator from Onio would not vote for this amendment. I should vote "nay" if at liberty do so, but I shall not vote.

Mr. PADDOCK, (after having just voted in the negative.) I was paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] Yesterday I understood myself to have been relieved from that pair and that it had been prede with my friend from I conjugate. [Mr. West 1] The had been made with my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. West.] The Senator from Louisiana now informs me that that is not the case, Vermont. The Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" if here, and I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn if no objection be made.

The question being taken by year and nays, resulted—year 24, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs, Anthony, Bailey, Bogy, Booth, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cooper, Harvey, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Morrill, Oglesby, Randolph, Rob-ertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] to the amendment will be re-

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of the amendment:

That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. BOOTH. I understand that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] has an amendment which embodies mine, and I ask leave to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. In place of the amendment just withdrawn I move to strike out the whole of sections 6 and 7 and to insert in lieu, as a final section, the following:

Congress shall at all times have power to alter and amend as well as to repeal this

Mr. WEST. As I understood, the Senator from California withdraws his concluding amendment.

Mr. BOOTH. I have withdrawn the amendment to alter, amend,

Mr. WEST. It is perfectly competent now for the Senator from Michigan to offer an amendment at any stage of the bill, but I ask the ruling of the Chair as to whether the Senator's amendment now takes precedence of the others; for instance the one offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison.] I think that amendment now according to our rules is the amendment under consideration.

Mr. HARVEY. I offered an amendment, but I do not remember in what order, whether before or after the amendment of the Senator

Mr. WEST. I believe the amendment of the Senator from Michigan does come first. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan is to perfect the text which is proposed to be stricken out.

It is therefere in order.

Mr. WEST. Very well.

Mr. DAWES. Is it in order to amend the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. DAWES. I will move, therefore, to strike out of the amendment to the amendment the words "six and." That would leave the amendment to be to strike out the seventh section and insert in lieu thereof what I do not object to; but to strike out the sixth section is to propose another lawsuit. Of course, I do not mean to say that the Senator proposes another lawsuit, but it imposes another lawsuit upon the United States. It strikes out all power or all-opportunity on the part of these railroads to have any voice whatever themselves in the arrangement by which they are to pay their indebtedness to the United States in a different way and at a different time and upon different terms than those upon which they originally contracted.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I desire to offer an amendment to the sixth sec-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be in the third degree. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I wish to propose an amendment to the sixth section of the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive it.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move after the word "same," in the sixth line of the sixth section, to insert: "Provided the said companies shall faithfully comply with all the provisions of this act and shall not be in default in any of the installments when due;" so that, if amended, it will read:

That if this act shall be accepted by the said companies within four months from the date of its passage, by votes of the directors and stockholders at regular meetings duly called, the same shall be deemed and construed to be a final settlement between the Government and the company or companies so accepting the same, provided the said companies shall faithfully comply with all the provisions of this act and shall not be in default in any of the installments when due; such acceptance to be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.]

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I will explain my object in offering my amendment. I think the conduct of these railroad companies toward the Government has not been such as to encourage us to give up the security and the power of amendment and repeal that we now have. The sixth section, as it stands now or as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Colorado, would still cut off all power of amendment and repeal. It will be only necessary to read the section for the purpose of showing that:

That if this act shall be accepted by the said companies within four months from the date of its passage, by votes of the directors and stockholders at regular meetings duly called, the same shall be deemed and construed to be a final settlement between the Government and the company or companies so accepting the same; such acceptance to be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado does not the amendment offered by the senator from Colorado does not change the effect of the section in this respect. It would still bind the Government and would be in effect irrepealable. If the sixth section should be retained, as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, then the section which I propose in lieu of the sixth and seventh sections would be repugnant to the previous section in some sense. I prefer, therefore, to strike out entirely sections 6 and 7 and to insert the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

My DAWLES We President I connect understand how it would be

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I cannot understand how it would be repugnant, if there was any soundness in the argument of the Senator from Michigan a few days since, as he said that without some such provision the bill would have just the effect that I do not desire that it shall have, that is, to repeal the previous authority of the United States over these railroad acts, whatever it is, I desire to maintain unimpaired. The Senator from Michigan intimated in his argument the other day that, by leaving out, instead of repeating, as in the act of 1864, the reservation of the power of repeal, the power itself by implication would be taken away. I yielded to the force of that argument sufficient to say that, rather than leave any such implication existing whatever, I would supply it. It was in concession to that argument of the Senator from Michigan. Now, the Senator says to put it in would be repugnant to the whole provision.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Will the Senator call my attention to the part of my argument to which he refers?

Mr. DAWES. I only speak from recollection. I desire to co-operate with every other Senator here who has any such disposition or purpose. It is not for me to criticise any Senator's purpose. I desire to co-operate with Senators and with these railroad companies in accomplishing one purpose, and that is in providing that when these bonds Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I cannot understand how it would be co-operate with senators and with these railroad companies in accomplishing one purpose, and that is in providing that when these bonds and interest become due there shall be a sinking fund that shall liquidate the indebtedness, for I feel that there is danger of the indebtedness becoming so large that the companies will shrink from it, and the obligation will fall upon the United States not only to meet its own bonds but to meet the prior mortgage or lose all it has paid. I think that every business man, whether in the railroad or out of the railroad, looking candidly, quietly, and fairly at this condition of things, will see the same danger.

I am not one of those who desire specially and first to triumph over these railroads. I have not, and I have never had, any war with them. I have no old grievances which come up when any bill proposthem. I have no old grievances which come up when any bill proposing legislation touching them shall appear in the Senate or elsewhere. They never served me; they never injured me. They never served me other than as they have served the people of these United States in common. I have no other expectation from them than as one of forty-five million people looking to this grand work as one upon which the nation can look with pride, and toward which it can turn for incidental and collateral remuneration for every dollar that may have been expended. But I cannot understand the spirit that boils over in hitterness and in malice when we are trying to get such legover in bitterness and in malice when we are trying to get such legislation as in other matters would secure and make safe such a fund as that at the time these obligations shall become due. I must confess I do not understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] in his argument against that provision which shall permit those who have this obligation to pay when we have determined the time when it shall be paid and the amount that shall then be paid, and say to this our debtor: "You shall not, if you happen to be able now, pay into the Treasury that which is absolutely worth to us just as much as the obligation will be at the time in the distance when it is to be liquidated." I cannot understand the objection as between man and man except as between the loaner of money on long credit and his debtor. There, in view of the profits that he derives from that business, the creditor may be reasonable in declining to take now that which he is under no obligation to take until twenty or thirty or forty years hence; but that is not the relation in which the United States stand nence; but that is not the relation in which the United States stand to these railroad companies or to these obligations. They have not made these obligations as a matter of gain. These obligations were put out to create a great work, as a concession to that work, and why we should not, the moment we can, secure against every vicissitude of the future that which is worth just as much to us as it will be in the distant future, I cannot understand. Of course I know that the Senator from Maine has no spirit in his appreciation to that section of Senator from Maine has no spirit in his opposition to that section of the kind I have indicated, but I cannot well understand the animus of the kind I have indicated, but I cannot well understand the animus of certain opposition to any provision here that will obtain the consent of the party of the second part to this great contract.

There seems to be a disposition to recoil from any measure, however otherwise reasonable, that contains in it a provision that the party of the second part shall have an opportunity to say whether it will or will not accept these new conditions. Are we not capable, as business men, of bringing into our legislation some of the principles that govern business men in transactions of this kind and let them enter into our legislation?

I said, when I first ventured to express an opinion upon these bills, that I was not quite prepared to give my consent to all the provisions of the Railroad Committee's bill. I thought it was wise and I thought the companies would concede, and that we ought to require them to concede, to such an annual payment as would meet these obligations concede, to such an annual payment as would meet these obligations when they become due, in 1898 or 1900, rather than postpone them. I thought all the conditions surrounding these questions and these railroads were such as would justify that, and I had no doubt as I they would see the wisdom of some such provision and that we ought to agree to it if we seek solely the making of a provision that will secure that end. I think, if we seek solely that rather than a disposition to triumph over these railroads either in these Halls or in the Supreme Court, we shall obtain such a result and shall do something

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I have a few words to say in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts. Nothing which I have said authorizes bim to consider me as hostile to these railroad companies.

Mr. DAWES. I do not.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I certainly never have indicated anything of Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I certainly never have indicated anything of the kind. I look upon these roads as a great national enterprise, and I am willing to be liberal to them; but at the same time, I think, we have the power; and it is our duty to insist upon their doing busi-ness upon principles of common honesty, upon common business principles. When the debt which is so large now is pressing upon the United States, and we can receive no relief from the companies the United States, and we can receive no relief from the companies by way of payment of the principal at least or interest to any extent until about 1900, or 1898 at least, it is not asking much from these companies, upon business principles, to lay aside a sinking fund which shall meet that debt at maturity. That is all I want and all I ask. In the mean time, until a more satisfactory arrangement is made than this substitute now submitted, I do not propose, so far as my vote is concerned, ever to yield that security which the Government now has in the power of amendment and repeal. I shall vote for no part of this bill that will result in that. While we hold that security we are comparatively safe. Part with it, and if any one can see safety he can see farther than I can.

see safety he can see farther than I can.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I concur entirely in the views expressed by the Senator from Michigan who has just taken his seat. So far as I am concerned, I certainly have no other desire than that the companies controlling this great thoroughfare shall be protected in all their rights and that the whole country shall receive the benefit of the great channel of communication which it affords. But experience has taught us that the power of alteration or control of the charter of a great corporation of this kind should never be yielded. charter or a great corporation of this kind should never be yielded. So far as the substitute, the Railroad Committee's bill, is concerned, I shall vote against it; for any amendment tending to perfect it and make it fairer, to bring it into the best possible condition, I shall vote; but when perfected, unless it conforms substantially to the terms of the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, I shall not support it.

Section 7 of the Railroad Committee bill, as it is termed, recognizes the right of the railroad companies to accept the terms of this bill and thus to make them a party to a contract; and the provisions of this section, if it should be adopted, would constitute a contract in the nature of an accord and satisfaction, which would take away the power of Congress to legislate upon this subject. For one, with the Senator from Michigan, I shall never consent to that. If an amendment is not inserted, the power of repeal, as I understand it, would be taken away from all the acts affecting this corporation. I have no doubt that under existing legislation Congress possesses the power to alter and amend this charter in the respects contemplated by the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee. Having that power, they have the right to impose this legislation upon the companies, whether or not they accept it. In that condition let us leave this bill; and as the measure proposed by the Judiciary Committee seems to me to be reasonable, and only a security to the Government to protect itself against the loss of the indebtedness accrued from these railroad com-against the loss of the first and the panies to the Government, it is certainly not only reasonable to duty of Congress to enact it.

I shall therefore support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan to the bill of the Railroad Committee, and, so far as I am concerned in doing so, it cannot be construed as unfavorable to this great railroad passing through the country.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, I have seldom taken up the time of the Senate, either at this session or at any other; but, after hearing the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] who last spoke upon this bill, I cannot refrain from saying a word or two to explain my opposition to it. The Senators upon this floor who oppose the bill of the Railroad Committee are charged with bitter hostility against these great corporations. That is not my feeling. I pose the bill of the Kaliroad Committee are charged with bitter hostility against these great corporations. That is not my feeling. I have no reason for any such feeling whatever; but I happen to have a constituency; I happen to recollect that there are in this country many millions of people who have hard work to pay their taxes and get a living; I happen to recollect that their money goes into the Treasury of the United States and that any largess that is made by the bounty of Congress to these great corporations comes out of the pockets of the people. I cannot help believing that this bill, however it may be represented, is sheer robbery of the people. I stand here on behalf of my constituents to oppose it. I stand here to oppose it because I believe it to be wrong, and because I see thronging these corridors the same men, the same lobbyists, who on former occasions have imposed upon this people and upon Congress bills similar to this in their character, the effects of which and the evil provisions of which we are now seeking to get rid of. Gentlemen who talk of hostility to these corporations should remember that some of us think we have constituents; and on behalf of those whom I represent upon this floor, I protest against a bill like this, the passage of which is urged by the lobbyists of these corporations by all means in their power, and which is a bill that they at least seem to think is for their especial benefit cial benefit.

I have had but little opportunity, in the duties which have pressed upon me, to examine the provisions of this bill. There are one or two, however, which strike my attention. There is a provision at the end of the third section-

That all Government freight and transportation west-bound, destined for points between the Missouri River and the Pacific coast and on the Pacific coast, and from said coast, or any point east thereof, east-bound, shall be sent by the said railroads until the aforesaid claims of the Government on account of bonds advanced to the companies are fully paid and satisfied, whenever such freight can be so transported to its place of destination at rates not exceeding the cost at which such freight can be carried by any other means of transportation.

Considering the legislation of the past, I say we have good reason to suppose that this bill, framed in the interest of these railroad comto suppose that this bill, framed in the interest of these railroad companies, as it seems from their efforts to procure its passage, will impose upon this Government the liability, the duty, of doing its business over these railroads at such prices as they may fix, whenever those prices are less than the cost would be of doing the same business by other means than railroad transportation. I see in that clause and in other clauses of the bill new germs of new lawsuits, new germs of trouble, new grounds upon which at some future day the people of this country can again be robbed.

These companies are not entitled to any peculiar sympathy from this country can again be robbed.

These companies are not entitled to any peculiar sympathy from Congress or from the American people. The bills which have passed Congress have been in their interest. Those bills have been passed as drafted by the friends of the corporations; and the people of this country have found an interpretation put upon those bills which if the full purport of it had been known at the time would have prevented their passage. Now it is proposed to pass a new bill for their benefit, and it is proposed that Congress shall have no power to alter or amend the bill. No matter how many new robberies may be concealed under the bill, no matter what construction may be put upon it in the future, the Congress of the United States is to have no power to alter or repeal it in any respect whatever. I will not vote to tie the hands of Congress in respect to a bill the passage of which is urged by the lobbyists of these corporations in the way that we see this bill urged.

this bill arged.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, there have been some rather harsh and, it occurs to me, uncalled-for expressions used by Senators on the floor, some contending that Senators who entertain one opinion are endeavoring to oppress the railroads; others contending, in the choice language of the Senator who has just spoken, that those who entertain a different opinion propose to rob the Government. The Railroad Committee, of which I have the knonor to be chairman, had this matter intented to those law the senator of the Senator and the Senator. ter intrusted to them by the command of the Senate, and the Senator who has just taken his seat should not lose sight of the fact that this subject was brought to the attention of Congress by the executive department. If we are discussing and thinking of this measure, we have warrant for it in the recommendation of the late Secretary of the Treasury, a man who is so much honored by the constituency of the honorable Senator who last spoke. Does the Senator forget that this matter was brought to the attention of Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury and upon all the responsibility of his office?

I hold in my hand his recommendation to Congress to do the very thing that the Railroad Committee has reported that you ought to do and might do. Yet we are told that this bill is brought here by the railroad company and that they have a lobby here! Very likely they have, but the bill was brought here by somebody else, and that somebody else was your Secretary of the Treasury. Remember also that this communication from the Secretary of the Treasury was laid before us prior to the decision rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States. The proposition was entertained by the Secretary; and he, with his knowledge of law and with his construction of the acts, saw the danger that we were running upon and recommended as to adopt this course. us to adopt this course.

Mr. McMILLAN. Did the Secretary recommend this bill?

Mr. WEST. I will read what he recommended:

It seemed to me, however, that it was desirable to reach an adjustment whereby the vexations differences which had long perplexed the Government, and largely affected the credit, if not the prosperity, of the companies should be finally com-

"Long perplexed the Government." He appeals on behalf of the Government.

In reaching such a result it is obviously for the interest of both, and especially the Government, that an arrangement should be made by which a fixed amunal or semi-annual sum should be paid by the companies, so that when the principal of the debt becomes due the Government may hold in its Treasury a large sum applicable to the extinguishment of the debt. How and by what means, in what sums, and at what periods, this fund should be obtained and applied, is for Congress to determine; but it was and is my opinion that it would be a wise precaution to place the corporations under a definite and binding obligation, with their causent.

to set apart from their semi-annual earnings and deliver to the Government a reasonable and fixed sum, so that their managers might constantly feel the pressure of this duty upon themselves, and not be permitted to treat it as a matter to be looked to in the distant future or by a succeeding board of officers.

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

And now, Mr. President, the only difference between the two propositions that are here, one from the Judiciary Committee and one offered by the Railroad Committee—and whatever imperfections they have are subject to modification and adjustment by the Senate—is that the Judiciary Committee propose to do this thing without the consent of the railroads and the Railroad Committee propose to do it with their consent. That is all. It was our duty in such a presentation of the case and in such a reference of the subject to the Committee on Railroads to perfect the bill that they have brought forward. I do not think it is exactly in good taste to impugn their motives on such an authority as I have cited.

Mr. DAWES. I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. WADLEIGH] a single question, as he said he could not sit still [Mr. WADLEIGH] a single question, as he said he could not sit still [Mr. Wadleigh] a single question, as he said he could not sit still after he heard my remarks. I want to ask him if he understands that I am opposed to the provision being put upon this bill or any other bill reserving the right on the part of the Government to alter, amend, or repeal any act that may be passed? If he so understood me, I failed to be understood. I said I was for it; I wanted it; and why the Senator should have been so disturbed by my remarks and say that now it is proposed to take away that right, I cannot see.

Mr. McMILLAN. Did I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DAWES. No. The Senator from Michigan has got a double-barreled amendment and my friend from Minnesota will understand that there are two distinct propositions in it. One of them I desired to strike out. And in saying that I desired to strike out that provision of his which took away from these railroad companies any voice in to strike out. And in saying that I desired to strike out that provision of his which took away from these railroad companies any voice in this new arrangement, I desired to retain that other part of the bill which preserved all the rights, whatever they are or ever have been, of the United States to alter, amend, or repeal any of these laws.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether recognizing the right of these parties to accept this provision would not be held to be a legislative construction of former laws that Congress has no right under the power to alter or amend to pass such a provision #

Mr. DAWES. Followed by another section, I do not think it would. I think it would be a declaration that the people of the United States might approve; I do not know that they would after the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the business of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the business of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the business of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the business of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the business of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the business of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the business of the Senator from New Hampshire; but that the people of the Senator from New Hampshire; but the Senator from New H ness men of the country might approve, that it was an effort on the part of the Government to see whether by the co-operation of these railroad companies we might not possibly enter into such an arrangement as would secure the final liquidation of the debt and at the same time secure us against all uncertainties and expense and the harassing nature of litigation.

Mr. MORRILL. Then the Senator from Massachusetts, as I understand him, regards this provision in the nature of a contract binding stand him, regards this provision in the nature of a contract binding upon the railroads but not binding upon Congress.

Mr. DAWES. What provision is Mr. MORRILL. The provision in relation to the acceptance on the part of the railroad companies.

Mr. DAWES. I do not quite understand my friend from Vermont; but I will tell you what I do understand. I am not in favor of the bill as it came from the Railroad Committee and have never said that I was. I have always said that there were provisions in it that I did not approve; but I wished to be understood as trying to ascertain whether there was not some ground very much like that proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] by which we could get a sum paid in yearly that would, when the bonds become due, liquidate them; and I thought if we tendered this to the railroad companies and required that before it came into operation it should have their assent, there would be the end of all litigation, and I would add to it to prevent any conclusion such as that which the Senator from Michigan and the learned Senator from Minnesota say it would be open to, a provision that nothing in this act shall be construed to take away or impair in any manner whatever the right of the United States away or impair in any manner whatever the right of the United States to alter, amend, or repeal this or any other act.

Mr. McMILLAN. But if such a provision as this were inserted would it not be in the nature of a contract between the Government and the railroad companies, which could not be affected, although an and the railroad companies, which could not be affected, although an express power of repeal were reserved? Would the power to interfere with a contract exist; or would not the interference with that contract at any subsequent time be interfering with a vested right? The Senator will observe that the section provides that this shall be a final settlement; and here is a disputed claim between the railroad companies and the Government of the United States, the settlement of which is a final consideration for any contract and the right arise. of which is a final consideration for any contract, and the right arising out of such settlement would be a contract which could not be interfered with, whatever express power might be reserved in the bill.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Minnesota unconsciously concedes more to the argument that I submitted here the other day than I should myself claim for it, that there are certain contracts made by the United States with corporations—

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to correct the Senator. I do not concede anything of that kind.

Mr. DAWES. I know the Senator the moment he sees the appliation that is about to be made shrinks from it himself.

Mr. McMILLAN. The misapplication, if the Senator please.

Mr. DAWES. I submit that it is precisely what I urged feebly upon the Senate a few days ago, and which upon reflection by one of the ablest judicial minds in this Senate he has unconsciously yielded to, that there were contracts entered into by the United States with these railroad corporations that the existence of this clause reserving to Congress the right to amend, alter, or repeal did not permit the Congress of the United States to change. That was what I claimed. I claimed that the United States had entered into a contract, and that this was like writing anew across that contract new terms, and the learned Senator from Michigan said they had that power. Now the Senator from Minnesota says that it is a contract for a valid consideration that even with this reserved power expressed in the bill can-not be altered. Do I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. McMILLAN. Does the Senator contend that the rights claimed by the railroad company must be valid before their cession would constitute a consideration for this contract proposed in section 7? certainly did not concede that the railroad company had any right of contract which could not be interfered with by the Congress of the United States, and I do not propose that they shall have.

Mr. DAWES. Then, Mr. President, it will be true that if the railroads accept the provisions of this bill there will be no contract that with this reserved power expressly in the bill the Government cannot control. I think that the Senator from Minnesota is too able a judge and too clear a logician not to see that the logic of the whole thing rests right there; and it is just what I stated a few days ago, that for a proper consideration the Government of the United States could for a proper consideration the Government of the United States could enter into a contract with these parties that that phrase in the law did not give them the power after it had been accepted to interfere with. Now the Senator says that this section of the bill provides that if this be fulfilled on the part of the railroads it shall be a final settlement with the United States. I want to ask my friend if he is not willing to agree beforehand, I do not mean to say in the terms of the Railroad Committee hill but more some terms by which if they be Railroad Committee bill, but upon some terms by which if they be fulfilled and those terms are such that when these bonds become due fulfilled and those terms are such that when these bonds become due there shall be in our hands enough to liquidate them, whether he is not willing to stipulate on the part of the Government that when that is done it shall be a final settlement of the case?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not willing to make any agreement on the part of the Government with the railroad company which recognizes them as having any rights of contract under this bill. I am in favor of asserting the right of the Government to legislate upon this subject in such manner that the interests of the Government will be fully exerted and that the Covernment is delay as shall not enter into protected and that the Government in doing so shall not enter into any complication which will cripple her right to legislate upon this whole subject upon the charter of these railroad companies in any manner she pleases or at any time subsequently to the legislation manner she pleases or at any time subsequently to the legislation passed at present.

Mr. DAWES. Then I understand the Senator to say that he is unwilling to legislate upon any principle that recognizes any other rights in this country than those of the Government. I understand the Senator that when any other element enters into the legislation upon this subject than that the Government has now and shall ever have the right to treat this solely in regard to its own interests without reference to the rights of other parties, it will receive his opposition; and so I construed the spirit of the Judiciary Committee's bill that so commends itself to the Senator from Minnesota.

Now, sir, with the same desire to protect the rights of the Government that I think animates honestly the Senator from Minnesota, I have a kind of lurking idea that justice requires the recognition of the rights of other parties. I may be mistaken about this; but I have been led along in this view. Whether or not there are any rights of other parties except the Government to be considered, I may be mistaken; but waiving that question and not desiring to enter into any discussion of it further, admitting it to be just as the Senator from Minnesota claims, it is still a question of interest to the United States; and having under consideration for the moment no Senator from Minnesota claims, it is still a question of interest to the United States; and having under consideration for the moment no other element than what the United States may deem its own rights, without regard to the rights of others, I claim that upon no such principle as is enunciated can we ever secure in 1898 or 1900 the liquidation of our obligation beyond the accident of a contingency, of the vicissitudes of the future over which we have no control. We may legislate as guardedly as we can, follow and pursue the companies year after year and session after session with supplemental bills, and chase them around the earth with them, and upon the principle enunciated it will be a vain pursuit. You cannot deal with the world upon any such ground as that. You may complain about it, and you may say that the world is unreasonable and that this part of the world is worse than all the rest, totally depraved; but you have got world is worse than all the rest, totally depraved; but you have got to accept the world as it is; you have got to legislate upon the conditions of things actually existing; and I submit to the Senate that, supposing it to be true that nobody else has any rights that the Government of the United States is bound to respect, still it is wise for ernment of the United States is bound to respect, still it is wise for us to pay some regard to them.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, if I had never heretofore believed in the doctrine of total depravity the Senator from Massachusetts would have convinced me of its truth. A few days ago when a bill was under consideration that proposed to enforce a contract upon these railroad companies, nothing more, the Senator from Massachusetts said that the clause reserving the right to alter, amend, and repeal did not give us such a power. To-day he tells us that we may come to an agreement as two contracting parties, one proposing and the other assenting, and that agreement may be changed under the power to alter, amend, or repeal.

to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is laboring under a mistake. I made

Mr. BOOTH. I suppose then I am mistaken. It is my misfortune often to misunderstand the Senator from Massachusetts, for since the days of Talleyrand no man has so perfectly understood the art of saying what he does not mean and meaning what he does not say.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I hope nothing has passed between the Senator from California and myself that justifies any such remark as that at his hands. The Senator from California shall understand from me that nothing shall fall from me that would justify any such remark from him. I have dealt as well as I knew how in my feeble way with the subject presented. I have yielded to every Senator upon this floor precisely what I claimed for myself, entire sincerity in what I have said; and if the Senator from California thinks he is justified in setting himself up here as censor over me and pronouncing to the Senate that I do not mean what I say and do not say what I mean, the Senator from California should understand that that is a mission to which he at least has not been assigned by this body.

I tried to state as well as I knew how that the Senator from Michigan in the state as well as I knew how that the Senator from Michigan is the state as well as I knew how that the Senator from Michigan is the state as well as I knew how that the Senator from Michigan is the state as well as I knew how that the Senator from Michigan is the state as well as I knew how that the Senator from Michigan is the state as well as I knew how that the Senator from Michigan is the state of the gan the other day argued with some force that there might be an implication from the absence in this bill of the express reservation of power to alter and amend. I tried to say that, while I felt the force of that argument, I did not desire to have it left to uncertainty, and I did desire to preserve all the rights that Congress could have over any of its legislation, as well that which is past as that which it is about to make, and that, therefore, I did desire to co-operate with the Senator from Michigan in having that provision inserted; and the Senator from California feels justified in announcing to the Senate that I say what I do not mean. I may be unfortunate in the way in which I express myself; I doubtless am. I may not be able even to make Senators understand what I desire to say; doubtless I am in which I express myself; I doubtless am. I may not be able even to make Senators understand what I desire to say; doubtless I am not. I am not used to this Chamber; but there is another thing I am not used to: I am not used to being told that I do not mean what I say.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts expressed surprise that I should feel myself called upon to respond to the remarks which he made previous to my speaking. Sir, the reason why I did so was this: The first act in favor of the Pacific Railroad Companies, as I understand it, was passed in 1862. That act imposed certain conditions upon the railroad companies and provided that the credit of the Government should be given to them for a large amount of bonds, some $54,000,000, I think; that those bonds should be paid by them, it not being a gift but a loan; and I say here boldly that the understanding of the country was that the interest on those bonds was to be paid by the companies as it came due, when they were able to do it. A different construction has been put upon that. If any member of the House or any member of the Senate, when that bill of 1862 was passed, had announced that the Government had got to wait till the year 1900 or thereabout for the payment of any interest, not a man in either House would have dared to record his vote for that bill. Yet that construction has been put upon the bill. It has been put upon it by the courts. It is a construction which the people did not expect and at which, I believe, they are very indignant.

Under that construction these railroad companies are bound to pay these bonds and interest at maturity. That is their duty. It is the right of the Government to have them do so. In that bill of 1862 there was a provision in substance that Congress might amend, alter, or repeal the act, with due regard to the rights of the companies. What was the right of these companies in the act of 1862 with reference to the payment of what they owed the United States? It was that they should pay the debt due from them according to the contractive of the active what the debt severage to the legislation. struction of the courts, when that debt comes to maturity. Any legislation compelling them to do what it is their duty to do, and what it lation compelling them to do what it is their duty to do, and what it is the right of the Government to make them do, is not in disregard of their right. The legislation proposed by the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee simply provides that. It is not in derogation of any right of theirs under the law of 1862, because under that law their right was to pay this debt at maturity, and that is all that the bill from the Judiciary Committee provides.

But in 1864 they came to Congress and procured the passage of another act giving them extraordinary privileges against the Government. That act as well as the first was an enormous largess to these ment. That act, as well as the first, was an enormous largest to these corporations from the pockets of the people. That bill contained the express provision that Congress might at any time amend, alter, or repeal the act. According to the decisions of the courts that act fastened itself upon the previous act, and they must both be considered as one; and I believe that under the well-settled construction of the courts, under the act of 1864 as well as under the act of 1862, of the courts, under the act of 1864 as well as under the act of 1862, Congress has the right to amend, alter, or repeal any of these acts passed with reference to these Pacific Railroads.

Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee's bill simply provides that these companies shall pay money into a sinking fund so that when their debt matures they can pay it. Every member of the Senate knows that without this provision they cannot pay it, and it never will be paid, but will be lost to the people of the United States. The bill simply provides, not in derogation of their rights but to compel them to fulfill their duties, that they shall put themselves in a position where they can pay the debt to the people; and that is all.

What does the bill which is brought here as a substitute for the bill of the Judiciary Committee provide? It provides that on payment of a sum less than the annual interest, much less than the principal, at the end of a certain time they are discharged from all ment of a sum less than the annual interest, much less than the principal, at the end of a certain time they are discharged from all obligation. It gives to these corporations, already loaded by the munificence of this Government, another enormous bounty. It takes from the pockets of the people of the United States millions upon millions of the money of the people which these companies are bound in law, in honor, in justice to pay. I am opposed to such legislation as that, here and everywhere else. I am in favor of their meeting their obligations, and that is all the Judiciary Committee ask. They are able to do it, as their annual reports show; there is no reason why they should not do it; and yet everything proposed on this floor is met by lofty harangues about the rights of these corporations under the contracts which they have made.

I ask, Mr. President, if the people of this country have no rights; I ask if bills are to be passed here over and over again upon which new and strange constructions are put, under which the Treasury is, as I believe, robbed for the benefit of these corporations? I undertake to say that legislation such as this will not meet the approval of my constituents or of the American people. I do not believe in it.

my constituents or of the American people. I do not believe in it. I believe that these companies, which have been enriched by the generosity of this Government, whose work was of no such great magnitude as it is here represented to be, these corporations which out of the munificence of this Government have accumulated enormous of the munificence of this Government have accumulated enormous fortunes, these corporations in whose train all schemes of plunder have crowded, should be called upon to do what? Not to submit to any injustice, not to submit to any wrong; no, Mr. President; simply to provide the means of carrying out what they agreed to do, to provide the means of paying to this Government what they justly owe; and when that is the proposition before the Senate, I submit to this Senate, and I submit to the people of the country, here is neither the time nor the place for long declamations upon the rights of these corporations, when all that is asked of them is simply to do what every honest man does; and that is, pay their debts as they are perfectly able to do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong this discussion, and I certainly would not rise to say a single word but for the very extraordinary statement which has been made by the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat. The honorable Senator asserted that if during the discussion prior to the passage of the Pacific Railroad bill any member of Congress had announced that the Pacific Railroad bill any member of Congress had announced that the Government was expected to pay the interest due on these bonds prior to their maturity, no member of Congress would have been found so hardened—that is not quite the word he used, but that is the idea—so lost to all sense of honor as to have voted for that bill.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I said no such thing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I probably used a little stronger expression than the honorable Senator employed, but the idea conveyed by his remark was that the understanding by Congress and by the country when Congress passed that bill was that the Government was not to pay the interest on those bonds as it accrued. I think I am correct in that.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, then, I undertake to say that the whole discussion prior to the passage of that bill is full of expressions exactly to that extent and greater. I read the other day several extracts from speeches during that debate which prove what I say now, and I will read one extract which exactly covers the case the Senator has made. It is from the speech of Mr. Wilson, of Massachusetts, on the 17th of June, 1862:

In my judgment, we ought not to vote for the bill with the expectation or with the understanding that the money which we advance for this road is ever to come back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him and call his attention to a motion made in the House of Representatives that these companies be required to pay the interest as it became due, by Mr. White of Indiana, and absolutely voted down.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir, that was exactly true, I am aware.

Mr. Wilson, though, said further:

I vote for the bill with the expectation that all we get out of the road—and I think that is a great deal—will be the mail-carrying, and the carrying of the munitions of war and such things as the Government needs, and I vote for it cheerfully with that view.

Now I will read another extract. Mr. McDougall, of California, in the same debate used the following language:

It is the business of the Government to pay the interest, because we furnish the transportation.

Mr. President, I remember to have seen somewhere a pamphlet, the title of which was Does Protection Protect? I think that anybody who is familiar with the legislation of this country for a few years past in regard to the Pacific Railroad can write a pamphlet on the question whether "economy economizes," and with very good reason. We can go on as we have done for years past, legislating on the false basis that the Pacific Railroad has stolen something from this Government which it is our duty to recover, and we can pass the bill reported by the honorable Senator from Ohio, and what shall we do? We shall inangurate a new series of expensive extensive and never reported by the honorable Senator from Ohio, and what shall we do? We shall inaugurate a new series of expensive, extensive, and neverending litigation. That will be the result of it. Look at our legislation of last session, a fair specimen of the legislation in which we have been indulging for several years past. What was that? Why, certain reformers, certain economists, discovered and announced to us that the Pacific Railroad had been overmeasured; that the companies had received bonds for a length of road that was never built; and they said we must examine this matter, "we must investigate this matter," we must recover back to the Government the bonds that have been fraudulently issued;" and what did we do? Why, sir, we passed a bill for economy's sake to provide for the remeasurement of the Pacific Railroad, and it was remeasured under the direction and control of the Engineer Department of the United States Army. control of the Engineer Department of the United States Army.

Mr. WEST. At an expense of $10,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What was the result? They discovered the truth. They discovered the fact that the Pacific Railroad had been Mr. WEST. defrauded by the Government out of bonds for between two and three miles, which they had never received, and the Government is called upon to pay up the bonds which are due to the Pacific Rail-road; and the result of the economy is one hundred or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars' expense to the Government. That is a fair specimen of this much-vaunted economy.

specimen of this much-vaunted economy.

Mr. President, fifteen years ago the American people was engaged in a desperate effort to maintain its national territorial integrity. Nearly half of our territorial possessions were in the hands of an armed, organized, powerful rebellion. We had no means of communication by land with our golden possessions on the Pacific coast. We were threatened with a war with the greatest maritime power in the world. That war would have destroyed absolutely all communication with our Pacific coast and would ultimately doubtless have lost to us those possessions. Congress saw the danger; the country saw the danger; the world saw the danger; and Congress passed the act of 1862 and offered inducements to the patriotic capitalists of this country to provide a remedy by building a railroad across the concountry to provide a remedy by building a railroad across the con-tinent and establishing land communications with our possessions. What followed? The inducements were great, the proposition was liberal, but the undertaking was gigantic; the enterprise was surrounded with such perils, such uncertainties that no capitalists of the country were found brave enough to undertake it. What then? Congress in 1864 passed another bill offering still more liberal induce-Congress in 1864 passed another bill offering still more liberal induce-ments. What followed then? The capitalists of the country ac-cepted those inducements. We know the rest. With a courage that never faltered, with a faith that never wavered, with an energy that never rested, they carried out that enterprise to a glorious consum-mation seven years before the time that they were expected and re-quired by the act to do it. Think of the perils, think of the risks, think of all the doubts and uncertainties of that enterprise. Two thousand miles of railread wave to be built through a savere country. thousand miles of railroad were to be built through a savage country, much of the way without wood and water, a portion of the way over rugged mountains, all, all the way in the face of a savage foe. What then followed? Our Pacific possessions were saved; they were bound to us with bonds of iron. More than that, an empire equal to the possessions on the Pacific coast was opened to us in the center of the continent. The cost of transportation for the mails and supplies for the Way and Indian Department of the Continent. much of the way without wood and water, a portion of the way over rugged mountains, all, all the way in the face of a savage foe. What then followed? Our Pacific possessions were saved; they were bound to us with bonds of iron. More than that, an empire equal to the possessions on the Pacific coast was opened to us in the center of the continent. The cost of transportation for the mails and supplies for the War and Indian Departments of this Government was reduced from eight or ten millions per annum to a few hundred thousand, and that, too, to be indorsed on the railroad debt. And what followed if the way over rugged mountains, all, all the way in the face of a savage foe. What then followed? Now I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he believes there is any restriction or qualification binding upon the Government if this phrase should be in the bill; and if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will tell me just where the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I should like to ask him if he has any more objection to saying the line is, if he can do it without consuming too much time, I shou then? Grave lawyers at once took their books and sat down to see whether there was not a legal way for this nation to absolve itself from its obligations to the men who had wrought that great work; men with a mathematical turn of mind began at once to figure whether they could not have built that road cheaper; men who were very careful not to risk their pocket-books and their precious carcasses in building it themselves sat down to see whether if they had risked them they could not have done it cheaper. That was the feeling, that was the result; and day after day this country has listened to the denunciations of the men who carried out that glorious enterprise, because forsooth possibly they might have made a dollar!

Mr. President, this American nation is a great, a just, and a generous nation. I believe that the Pacific Railroad was one of the grandest peaceful triumphs this world has ever seen. It was a triumph of this nation, and I for one deny that we, their servants, are called upon to dim the glory of that triumph by an act of bad faith toward the men who won it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I stated yesterday that I was exceedingly auxious to have a vote upon this bill to-day and proposed to press for a vote before the adjournment; and having that wish, whatever might be my purpose otherwise, I shall refrain from saying anything upon the bill.

I have no doubt in the world that the building of this railroad was a great enterprise. As has been said, I think there were it." There is one question by millions in it." There is one question, however, as I understand the pending proposition, that I propose to present to the Senator from Massachusetts and get his answer to see if I understand it. I understand the Senator from California to have moved originally to add to the bill a section reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal. He withdrew section reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal. He withdrew that and thereupon the Senator from Michigan proposed to strike out the sixth and seventh sections of the substitute and insert substantially the amendment proposed by the Senator from California. That amendment pending, the Senator from Massachusetts moves to strike out so much of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan as would take from the bill as it stands now the sixth section; and therefore the amendment as he now proposes it, and as he says he is in favor of it, would be to strike out the seventh section and put in place of it the amendment of the Senator from Michigan thus leave. in favor of it, would be to strike out the seventh section and put in place of it the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, thus leaving the sixth section to stand. In other words he proposes to leave the sixth section to stand as it is in the bill or as it may be amended as proposed by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Chaffee;] but whether amended or not he leaves the sixth section in the bill and proposes to say, instead of the seventh section, that Congress shall have the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Now what I want to present to him is this, I do not know but that the Senator from Minnesota presented the same inquiry, but I present it in this way: Suppose you pass this bill with this amendment reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal, and the railroad company shall accept the proposition contained in this act, do you think you could interfere in any way in the world with their acceptance and what is included after they have accepted it, and does this power to amend, alter, or repeal amount to anything in the world? Would there be anything left which could be amended afterward?

Mr. DAWES. I will tell the Senator plainly what I think about it, and of course the Senator will be as willing to respond to any interrogatory of mine. I think the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act is always under the restriction that it cannot interfere with an executed ways indeed the resolution of the contract, that it cannot interfere with a contract entered into by the Government with an individual upon a sufficient consideration moving from that individual, like the undertaking of this great work. I do not think, for instance, that after these people had accepted the conditions of the original acts of 1862 and 1864 and had gone on one hundred and fifty or three hundred miles into the open plains with their road, the right to alter, amend, or repeal would have authorized the Government to repeal that statute and drop them right there. Therefore I think that this provision, whether the sixth section be in or ort, would always be under such qualification as I have stated.

I have understood the Senator from Michigan and all the Senators who suppose that the Judiciary Committee's bill is within the power of Congress, to nevertheless admit that there were certain qualifications and restrictions to it; but I have understood that they assert and maintain that those qualifications and restrictions were simply that you could not undo a right vested in a third person. Now what I desire is that any arrangement entered into, any provision for a sinking fund, should have the sanction of the companies for the reasons I have stated. I desire that Congress shall have all the power over this or any other act to alter, amend, or repeal that they can possibly have. I think in this, and no more than in any other, it possibly have. I think in this, and no more than in any other, it would be qualified by the fact that one party have accepted a solemn contract.

Now I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he believes there

Senator reports almost every day bills for the relief of individuals who have claims against the Government, in which he inserts "that this allowance shall be a full and final settlement." I ask the Senator this allowance shall be a full and final settlement." I ask the Senator therefore if in a bill that meets his approval as to its terms and conditions, if fulfilled on the part of these corporations, he will not be willing to say beforehand it shall be a final settlement?

Mr. WRIGHT. I am very sorry indeed that my friend after having talked so much does not answer my question. I supposed that he would undertake to answer it, but he has not answered it yet. I asked him the plain question, if you retain the sixth section, and reserve the right in Congress to alter, amend, or repeal, and the railroad companies shall accept the proposition under this bill, what value the reserved right to alter, amend, or repeal will amount to?

Mr. DAWES. Just as much value as it would without. I think I

Mr. DAWES. Just as much value as it would without, I think I have answered.

Mr. WRIGHT. Just as much as it would without? Now, suppose the sixth section not in?

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator if he believes there would be no power to alter, amend, or repeal if the sixth section and the section offered originally by the Senator from California were in ? Does the Senator from Iowa mean to say that with the sixth section in and the provision offered by the Senator from California in, that the Congress would have no power to alter, amend, or repeal?

Mr. WRIGHT. I suppose the Senator would be bound to hold that.
I could not differ with him if I held as he does on this subject, that if this sixth section is retained and the railroad companies accept the proposition under it, then he will be bound to maintain that that is proposition under it, then he will be bound to maintain that that is a concluded contract; and then this provision reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal is a mere blind, and nothing else.

Mr. DAWES. I was interrupted when the Senator commenced. Does the Senator hold that as his opinion?

Mr. WRIGHT. I say that if I believed and entertained the doctrine the Senator does with reference to the powers of Congress and the Government under the Constitution, and under what he claims is a contract, and this company accepted the proposition, and it became a concluded contract with them—if it was a valid contract such as that they would have a right to stand upon after it was concluded—the reserved right in Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this law would be a blind, and nothing more.

law would be a blind, and nothing more.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will pardon me. I did not ask him whether he believed as I did. The Senator having asked me what my conclusions were, I thought he would take it kindly, as I know he

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly I do. Mr. DAWES. If I should ask him what his own opinion was, not

Mr. DAWES. If I should ask him what his own opinion was, not what mine was. Now, that there may not be any mistake between the Senator and me, I ask him, with the sixth section in and a section in these words, "Congress shall have the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act," whether in his opinion, not in mine, Congress would have a right to alter, amend, or repeal?

Mr. WRIGHT. I should say most certainly not, if the contract was concluded between these parties as is proposed here, unless you have some such reserved right. But that is a very different thing from the Judiciary Committee's bill, a very different thing from the legislation as it stood heretofore; for here you make an offer to the companies, and they enter into a contract, and make an agreement for such panies, and they enter into a contract, and make an agreement for such panies, and they enter into a contract, and make an agreement for such a consideration, to pay such and such a sum of money, and then you say you reserve the right to alter or amend it so that you can abolish that contract. Now the Senator attempts to get me upon a different ground entirely from what I have ever proposed to stand on. He himself, I say, by this very proposed amendment, is at war with the whole argument that he has made here as against the Judiciary Committee's bill and in favor of the bill reported from the Committee on

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator to say that, if Congress proposes these terms, the terms of this bill, to these railroads and they accept them, he does not think Congress would have the power after that acceptance to alter, amend, or repeal this bill, although they that acceptance to alter, amend, or repeal this bill, although they reserved the express right?

Mr. WRIGHT. So far as the contract is concerned.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senator will answer me categorically.

Mr. WRIGHT. I said so far as the contract was concerned.

Mr. DAWES. So far as the contract was concerned, they would not have the right to alter, amend, or repeal the concluded contract.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator entirely, and it was because I was of that belief that I supposed after we had offered the terms to these companies upon which, if they complied with them, if they built these railroads twenty miles by twenty miles, we on our part would furnish them bonds of a certain denomination and a certain amount, payable on a certain day, principal and interest, and they accepted it and concluded it by performing their work—it was because I agreed with the Senator from Iowa in the conclusion that that contract could not be altered and they could not be made to pay contract could not be altered and they could not be made to pay those bonds or the interest on those bonds at any other time or in any other manner than as provided in the contract itself, that I shrank from the bill of the Judiciary Committee and sought some way by the co-operation of these companies to accomplish what the Judiciary Committee wanted to accomplish. I know the Judiciary Committee have an answer to that: that we do not require these parties to pay these bonds before 1898; we only take the money of the corporations and hold it thus in our own Treasury till 1898, and then apply it to the payment of the bonds. I know that is the answer; but it is not an answer that satisfies me.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Inasmuch as the Senator from Mussachusetts has referred to what he supposes to be my argument and has endeavored to show that there is some inconsistency in it, I propose to say a few words upon that subject. While I hold that all other incorpora-tion acts as well as these acts in relation to the Pacific Railroads, when made expressly subject to the power of amendment and repeal, may be amended and even repealed so as to reserve vested rights as a que tion of power, yet I have never contended, and it is not very likely that I ever shall contend, that an act containing a great number of provisions may not be so drawn that the intention may clearly appear in some of its provisions that it shall not be altered, but that it pear in some of its provisions that it shall not be altered, but that it shall be final and conclusive, and it would not be subject to that power of repeal at all; but when the courts should take up that statute for the purpose of construction they would say, looking over all its provisions, "Here is a provision of the statute which on its face is of that nature which clearly indicates the legislative intent that it shall not be repealed, notwithstanding this general provision." That is just the position in which this case would stand by leaving in it the sixth section and then attaching the power of amendment and repeal. That is all. I see no inconsistency whatever in it. I do not see that the argument applies at all to the act of 1862 or the act of 1864 in relation to these railroads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE,] which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It was proposed to strike out sections 6 and 7 of the bill and in lieu of those sections to insert:

Congress shall at all times have power to alter and amend, as well as to repeal, this act.

It is proposed to amend section 6, proposed to be stricken out, by inserting, after the word "same," in line 6, the following proviso:

Provided. The said companies shall faithfully comply with the provisions of this et and shall not be in default in any of the installments when due.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on inserting the words last read by the Clerk.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 20. Mr. CHAFFEE. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEST. I am sure there can be no objection to that amend-

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it seems a little singular that no one can rise here in the Senate and claim any rights or privileges on the part of the United States under these various railroad acts without being charged with possessing some animus against the railroads, some ill-will, some personal spite. I do not understand that there is a Senator here, I know of no one, who entertains any spite against this railroad; but there are Senators here who believe that the United States still have some rights in spite of any decision of the Supreme Court. I do not understand the Supreme Court to have decided that Congress may not amend, alter, or repeal these railroad acts, nor do I understand that the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that the net earnings of 5 per cent shall not be annually applied to extinguish both interest and principal of their debt, nor have they decided that the half earnings for service on behalf of the Government shall not be annually applied to the extinguishment of interest and principal. Yet here is a bill which proposes not only to extinguish the annual interest that we pay out for the Government, but the entire principal, by paying one-half, or about one-half, of the amount of the annual interest that is being paid by the

If that is not the very "necromancy of arithmetic," I do not understand it; and yet the Senator from Louisiana claims that his bill differs in no particular from the bill reported from the Committee on differs in no particular from the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary except that it places it in the power of the railroad companies to accept or reject it as they please. I should like to know whether there is any Senator here who has authority for saying that the railroad companies would accept any of these bills where this provision is inserted. If they will not, then we are left to the conclusion that they will reject any proposal that is made here, unless they stand in some apprehension that a bill in character like that reported from the Judiciary Committee will ultimately pass and force them to accept the provisions as presented by that committee. If they are willing to accept, and I do not think they would reject an offer that wipes out more than one-half of their debt, then I see no occasion for asking their consent. But I am opposed not to giving them fair terms, but to asking of the railroad managers to give validity to acts of Congress by a proclamation of their assent.

I do not understand that the bill of the Judiciary Committee proposes to do more than to make the debt when it matures of some value to the United States, and all of the other propositions that are proposed let these companies off with a much smaller amount than roposed let these companies off with a much smaller amount than they are obligated to pay to re-imburse the United States for the loan of their credit. Let us look at the position of one of these great corporations, once weak but now strong. The Central Pacific Railroad, as I understand, is owned to-day by less than a hundred stockholders. The gross receipts of that company are over $14,000,000 per annum.

The amount of operating expenses reduces it so that they have left The amount of operating expenses reduces it so that they have left between eight and nine million of dollars. After paying the interest on their first-mortgage bonds, they have left in round numbers $6,000,000 to be divided among less than a hundred men, that is to say, about $60,000 each; and yet the Senate of the United States are called upon to say that rather than reduce the income of these men from this railroad from sixty thousand to fifty thousand dollars per annum the Government of the United States shall continue to pay between three and four million dollars per annum without any in-terest for the next thirty years. Even the proposition of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] proposes to extend the time when this debt shall mature for seven years, that is to say, from 1898 to 1905. These propositions are not for the interest of the United States, but they are gratuities to the railroads.

I must say that while I have no sort of feeling hostile to these roads or to any man who is a stockholder or director in them, I cannot sit here and see the interest of the United States wholly sacrificed by the bills as reported from the Committee on Railroads. I adhere to the letter of the law, and the letter of the law provides that 5 per cent of the net earnings shall be annually applied and that the half of transportation services shall be also annually applied. I have not a shadow of doubt that if Congress shall see fit to change, alter, or amend at any time as they have reserved the full power to alter, amend, or repeal, the Supreme Court will accept and interpret the law precisely as Congress shall accept and interpret it. Nor do I believe that it would be against the interest of these roads to make the debt due to the United States good at maturity beyond all question. These roads ought to be made to be perpetually good, good not only in 1900, but in the year 2000, and yet to allow them to go on without any amendment of the statute with their interpretation that they will pay nothing at all, it is perfectly obvious that these debts may be so augmented by accumulated interest that the road itself must finally go into bankruptcy.

Therefore, Mr. President, while I would be willing to moderate the terms of the Judiciary Committee bill in some respects to make it less onerous, I cannot persuade myself to accept of scarcely anything that is proposed in this proposition from the Railroad Committee. Their bill is a complete surrender. The Senator from Louisiana claims that the bill of the Railroad Committee does not differ from that of the Judiciary Committee except in the provision to allow the railroads permission to accept or reject the proposition.

Mr. WEST. I did not say that in detail they do not differ; I said in their object.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the second section of the bill of the Judiciary Committee to see how widely different it is in its scope and purpose from any proposition contained in the Railroad Committee's bill.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator desires to do that for his own satisfaction I have no objection, but he misconstrues my language. I said that the object of either committee was to get a settlement, not that the bills which they reported agree in their details.

Mr. MORRILL. Ah! If the Senator only means that they differ in degree and not in principle, I cannot imagine why this amount of hostility that is manifested should exist against the report of the Committee on the Judiciary. Then the Senator means to say nothing more than this: that the bills do not differ essentially in principle; it is only in the amount of burden that is imposed upon the

Mr. WEST. The Senator must not make me say what I do not say.
Mr. MORRILL. I was merely going to call the attention of the Senate for a single instant to show the wide difference there is in the scope of the Railroad Committee bill from the second section of the bill of the Judiciary Committee, which provides that for the services rendered to the Government there shall be retained by the United States one-half, one-half thereof to be presently applied and the other half to go into a sinking fund.

I did not think of saying anything on this subject again after the remarks I submitted a day or two ago, but it seems to me perfectly clear that these provisions in the original act must be obeyed, and they are as follows:

And to secure the repayment to the United States-

Does it not mean that every dollar that is advanced by the United States shall be repaid to the United States ! as hereafter provided, &c.

Then take the next page. The law says:

And all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid.

Then again it says:

And after said road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid, at least 5 per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof.

I think, Mr. President, we need not, in advocating these propositions in favor of these railroads, undertake to take shelter behind the Supreme Court. They never have made any decision overturning the points which I have read in the original charter of the roads, and, so far as I am concerned, I propose to stand by the charter.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, in considering this subject in the Committee on Railroads we tried to look at it in a practical business point of view. What did we find there? We found that these two railroad companies had received from the Government bonds to the amount of about $54,000,000, due twenty-two years hence. We found that the Supreme Court of the United States had unanimously dethat the Supreme Court of the United States had unanimously decided that the interest upon those bonds was not due from the companies until the maturity of the bonds, that is, twenty-two years hence. This interest would then amount to about $90,000,000. That, added to the principal of the bonds, amounts to about $145,000,000 due from these two companies to the Government twenty-two years hence. In my simplicity I had no thought or belief under this decision of the Supreme Court that there could be any contrivance by which these companies could be compelled to pay their interest or which these companies could be compelled to pay their interest or any part of the principal before the maturity of the bonds. Look-ing at it in that light I saw that these companies would at that dising at it in that light I saw that these companies would at that distant day be indebted to the Government in the enormous sum of $150,000,000 more. I concluded and the Committee on Railroads concluded that it would be an impossibility for these roads to pay that sum at that time; and as the Government had only a second mortgage upon the roads, there being $54,000,000 of prior lien, making over $200,000,000, we thought it for the interest of the Government, if it could possibly be done, that these companies should begin to pay this debt now, and continue to pay it until by a certain time they should have paid enough to extinguish the debt and interest.

Senators seem to talk here as though there were some way to comselators seem to talk here as though there were some way to compel these corporations to pay this interest, notwithstanding the decision of the court. I wish there was. If I could see any way to do that I should not favor this bill at all; but, as I believe that the Government will ultimately lose every dollar of this debt unless some arrangement is made by which these companies can fund the debt gradually, I am in favor of such a measure, a measure that shall be just to the Government and one that the corporations will accept.

just to the Government and one that the corporations will accept.

Much is said here about compound interest. Suppose I owe to my friend, the Senator from Vermont, $100,000 payable in twenty-two years, without interest. That is exactly what this case is, as I understand it. These corporations twenty-two years hence will owe this Government $150,000,000, or thereabouts, and this interest should be reckoned, or may be reckoned for all practical purposes, as principal to-day, for they are not compelled, according to the decision of the courts, to pay a dollar of it until these bonds mature. If I owed my friend, I say, $100,000 and if he held my note due in twenty-two years from date, without interest, and I desired to begin to pay him now, would he not be willing to accept $3.000 or $5.000 a year and now, would be not be willing to accept $3,000 or $5,000 a year and allow me interest on that up to the time the note was due? Would not that be right; would it not be just; would it not be according not that be right; would it not be just; would it not be according to business principles?

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will permit me, I will state what I consider business principles and what I consider too to have been the decision of the Supreme Court. The decision of the Supreme Court goes only to the extent that we cannot make the principal of the debt or the interest until the bonds mature; but it does not decide that we may not apply the 5 per cent. net earnings or one-half of the amount received for services performed by the roads for the Government.

Mr. CRAGIN. I want to say to my friend that I wish to compel these roads to pay more than 5 per cent. of the net earnings annually. I want them to pay a sum which, put out at interest, would, at the maturity of these bonds or at a day certain, amount to the principal and interest.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know what my friend wants to do, but he advocates a bill paying about one-half of the amount that we pay out for annual interest and proposes that that shall extinguish twice as much interest and the entire principal at the end of thirty years.

Mr. CRAGIN. On the ground that this interest is not due, it is a part of the principal, and the country will find it so in the end. If the Government shall take what money is authorized to be paid under this bill (or if it is not enough let us make it more) and grad-nally buy no the 5.20 bonds upon which we are paying 6 per cent. under this bill (or if it is not enough let us make it more) and grad-nally buy up the 5.20 bonds upon which we are paying 6 per cent. interest, and if that process is continued for thirty years and the in-terest is constantly made to work for the Government, I ask the Sen-ator from Vermont if in the end it will not come to the same identical thing? Will they not save the entire amount of this money? Let me illustrate the principles of this bill. If, instead of paying this money into the Treasury of the United States, these corporations were required to deposit $2,000,000 in a savings-bank, and annually there-after pay $1,000,000 each into the savings-bank, and it was allowed to accumulate and interest to be added semi-annually, as is done in savings-banks all over the country, I say to the Senator from Ver-mont that at the end of this time the amount of money in the savings-bank, with the interest and principal accumulating, would amount to bank, with the interest and principal accumulating, would amount to the principal of these bonds, and with the interest that the Govern-ment would be compelled to pay. A friend near me thinks that that big amount would break almost any savings-bank, and I agree with big amount would break almost any savings-bank, and I agree with him. The Government is paying interest on these bonds to-day, and it may take this money and apply it to the extinguishment of the bonds and the saving of interest.

I do not say that the provisions of this bill are what they should be in all particulars. It may be that these companies ought to pay more annually. I should be glad if they could pay enough annually to extinguish the debt at the maturity of the bonds, both principal and interest; but the principle upon which this bill goes I advocate under the circumstances that this interest is not due until the maturity of the bonds, and is a part of the principal. I do not expect to live twenty-two years; but I make the prediction here to-day that, unless some provision similar in its character to this bill is made for funding this debt, my constituents who may be alive twenty-two years hence will find that the Government will get nothing from these corporations.

rations.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire one or two questions so that I can understand his argument better than I do now. Does he understand that the 5 per cent. upon the net earnings and the one-half of the amount of the Government transportation in each year go as a credit to the company against the interest which the Government pays each year I in other words, suppose that these two sums amount to $500,000 annually for each company, is that $500,000 in making up the account against each railroad taken from the sum that the Government pays for interest annually, leaving the remainder of the annual interest due to the Government. nually, leaving the remainder of the annual interest due to the Government from the companies

There is no interest allowed by the Government upon these $500,000 annual payments, because when they are paid they are due to Government and are in no sense a sinking fund. The Government of the United States, after thirty years, or at the time the debts become due, will have had the use and benefit of these $500,000 annual payments, instead of having them go into a sinking fund for the benefit of the companies. Therefore, when the Government of the United States gives up its right to retain one-half the amount that is due to the railroad companies for its transportation, and 5 per cent. upon the net earnings of the roads, and receives in lieu thereof the annual payments proposed by the Railroad Committee bill, it gives to railroad companies all the accrued interest on the amounts represented by the 5 per cent. net earnings and half the Government transportation account, whereas the Government should have the benefit of the accrued interest.

The Government of the United States should have the advantage of these 5 per cent. and transportation payments during the thirty years that the debt is maturing. By the Railroad Committee bill they work to the advantage of the companies and against the United

A fair calculation will show that annual payments of $500,000 from each company, placed in a sinking fund by the Government of the United States, would at the end of thirty years produce a large sum of money, which would belong to it and not to the railroad companies. Now, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States does not say that none of the interest shall fall due for thirty years; I believe it only meant to say that so much of the interest as shall not have been paid by 5 per cent. of the net earnings, and one-half of the money due from the Government to the companies, is not due for thirty years; or, in other words, that so much of the debt as the companies cannot pay under provisions of the bill as it now stands shall not fall due for thirty years. I do not know whether I make myself understood or not.

Mr. CRAGIN. The Senator's question has expanded into a speech

Mr. CRAGIN. The Senator's question has expanded into a speech which I do not propose to answer. I will only say to the Senator that unless this bill puts the Government in a better position than that in which it now is, I am opposed to it; but I believe it does place the Government in a better position.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The reason that I am opposed to the bill is that it does not place the Government in a better position than it now holds. At the same time I am not disposed to vote for the bill of the Indicious Committee and I am not disposed to vote for the bill of the Judiciary Committee, and I am not ready to vote for any act, no mat-ter what it is, which will in the slightest degree oppress these railroad companies, or bear upon them harshly in any degree. had some experience in the management of railroads, and I know how they are often harassed by Legislatures composed of men who were as honest in their intentions as Senators on this floor.

I would under no circumstances attempt to make these companies, if they demurred to it, pay one single penny for thirty years beyond the 5 per cent. of net earnings and one-half the Government transportation. If they choose to stand upon that, I would agree to let them stand there. For that reason I would not vote for the Judiciary bill, and for that reason I failed to vote for the amendment of the Senator from California.

As to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, I am free to say that I think it would be very unwise indeed for Congress to give away a right which the Government of the United States now holds; that is, the right to alter and amend. There is no object in giving it away. There is an object in trying to treat these companies with perfect fairness and trying to impose upon them no burden which they cannot bear. I think the bill of the Judiciary Committee does impose upon them a burden which they cannot bear, therefore I cannot vote for it; neither can I vote for the bill of the Railroad Committee, because I do not think it is fair to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Chaffee,] the Clerk will call the roll. As to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, I am free to FEE, 1 the Clerk will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALCORN, (when his name was called.) On this, as on other amendments to this bill, I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. Morton.] I should vote against the amendment, and he would vote for it, perhaps, if he were here.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsiu, (when his name was called.) On this bill and upon all the amendments thereto, I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. Sharon.] I will decline to vote upon the amendment, not knowing how he would vote if he were present.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. Bayard.]

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 30, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnum, Elaine, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hitchcock, İngalls, Kelly, Logan, McDouald, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Spencer, Stevenson, Teller, West, Whyte, and Wright—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Harvey, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christianoy, Conkling, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Morton, Paddock, Ransom, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, and Windom—33.

So the amendment of Mr. Chaffee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Christiancy] to strike out sections 6 and 7 of the substitute of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON, ] and insert:

Congress shall at all times have power to alter and amend, as well as to repeal, this act.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The amendment just adopted in no way obviates my objections to sections 6 and 7, and therefore I hope that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I moved an amendment some time ago to that of the Senator from Michigan, to strike out the words "and sixth," leaving the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to strike out the seventh section and insert the repealing clause. That would leave section 6 stand as part of the bill and strike out the seventh section, which provides

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The proposition of the Senator from Michigan, if agreed to, would strike out that section and insert in place of it a power to alter, amend, and repeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which is to perfect the part of the bill proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The amendment now proposed leaves the objection which I had to section 6 to stand in full force. It will be at least to some extent repugnant to the section which I propose, containing the whole power of amendment and repeal, because upon its face it will bear the construction that it was the intention of Congress to make a final and conclusive provision not subject to the power of repeal; and the courts might then very well hold that the power of repeal would extend to all other portions of the bill except to this. I do not say that that would be my construction; but I say it would leave the courts to the adoption of that construction, and therefore I am opposed to leaving section 6 in the bill at all, because it does conclusively strike out the power of amendment and repeal.

Mr. DAWES. My amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, if I may be allowed to state it again, is this: Senator's amendment proposes to strike out two sections and insert one; I propose to amend his amendment so that it will strike out only one section and insert one; that is, strike out the last section, and put in place of it his repealing section, to which I do not object. What I object to is to striking out the sixth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment by retaining the sixth section so as to strike out only the seventh sec-

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were here he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs, Allison, Barnum, Blaine, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, Logan, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Spencer, Teller, and West—25.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Christiancy] to the substitute reported from the Railroad Committee.

Mr. WEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out sections 6 and 7 of the pending amendment, and insert:

Mr. WEST. I should like to have the Secretary read the sections proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The sections proposed to be stricken will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the following

SEC. 6. That if this act shall be accepted by the said companies within four months from the date of its passage, by votes of the directors and stockholders at regular meetings duly called, the same shall be deemed and construed to be a final settlement between the Government and the company or companies so accepting the same, provided the said companies shall faithfully comply with all the provisions of this act and shall not be in default in any installments when due; such acceptance to be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 7. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

And in lieu of those words to insert:

Congress shall at all times have power to alter and amend as well as to repeal this act.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) As I have already stated, I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] I think he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) As before stated, I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were here he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to state that I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] Not knowing how he would vote I refrain from voting.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. Booth] to amend the substitute by striking out section 5, which will be reported.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

That each of said companies shall be entitled at any time to anticipate any or all of the semi-annual payments provided for in section 2 of this act by the payment to the Government of the then present value of such semi-annual payments, discounted at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; but the sum so paid shall not be less than $1,000,000 at any one time.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I understand the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Harvey] does not desire to press his amendment at this particular time, that he is willing to have that incorporated hereafter on any bill that the Senate may determine upon.

Mr. HARVEY. The Senator from Louisiana misunderstood me. I desire to have it incorporated in this bill but not in connection with The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was stricken out.

Mr. WEST. I understand now, Mr. President, that the Senator from Kansas waives his amendment, subject to the action of the Senate on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison.]

Mr. HARVEY. What does the Senator mean by "subject to the action of the Senate on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa?" Mr. WEST. I mean that, if that amendment is adopted or declined by the Senate at this time, you will let your amendment come in.

Mr. HARVEY. I shall ask the consideration of the Senate to my amendment, let his be adopted or not.

Mr. WEST. Yes; that is what I mean.

Mr. WEST. Yes; that is what I mean.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas is the pending question, and must be disposed of either by unanimous consent or the action of the Senate. Is it with-The amendment of the Senator drawn ?

Mr. HARVEY. No, sir; I ask for its consideration.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas,

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senator from Delaware to allow an executive session for a moment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARVEY. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORRILL. I will for a moment.

Mr. HARVEY. I wish to ask that the amendment which I offered be read, and I desire to call attention to the fact that in the RECORD of the 15th instant it is not correctly printed. I ask that it be compared and the necessary correction made, so that it may be printed in the permanent edition of the RECORD as it was offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest it is not necessary that it be read for that purpose. It may be printed in the RECORD on a copy being furnished.

Mr. MORRILL. Allow it to be printed in the RECORD without being read. That will accomplish the Senator's object just as well.

Mr. HARVEY. I simply want it to be printed correctly, as it was

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. MORRILL. Then you have only to have it again printed. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS. To what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the printing of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas in the RECORD. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

The amendment is as follows:

That no provision contained in either the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal and military purposes," approved July 1, 1862, or the act amendatory thereto, approved July 2, 1864, or in any act of Congress granting lands in aid of the construction of any railroad or wagon-road, shall be so construed as to exempt from taxation by State anthority lands which any of the companies in said acts mentioned, or its successors, shall have carned by the construction of its road or parts thereof: Provided, That such road or parts thereof shall have been first accepted by the United States in the manner in said acts prescribed; and taxes assessed either before, or, such as may be assessed, after the passage of this act, upon lands carned by said companies, or their successors, or any of them, shall be valid as against any claim or title of the United States in or to such lands.

Sec. — That if any company entitled to said lands or parts thereof, as aforesaid, shall fail to pay the costs of surveying and selecting the same, or the land-officer's fees where such payment is required by any of said acts, the purchaser of any of said lands at tax sale may pay such costs and fees due upon the lands by him purchased to the proper officer; and thereupon letters-patent shall issue to such company conveying said lands to it, but subject to the legal rights and title of such tax-sale purchaser: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as enlarging any grant of lands heretofore made to any of said companies.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the printing of amendments is going on regularly now at the Printing Office, and I suggest to the Senator from Kansas to have his amendment printed, so that we may see it in the regular form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the amendment I offered last night be printed; and I desire to modify it by substituting what I send to the Clerk's desk for section 5, as it is in my first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa desire

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa desire his amendment to be read?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; it is to modify section 5 as originally offered by me, and I desire to have it printed as modified.

Mr. BLAINE. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask is there any question before the Senate except the motion to go into executive session? Is that motion not pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is withdrawn.

Mr. SARGENT. I understood that it was withdrawn for a moment. I wish to make this remark to the Senators who are concerned in this bill—I hardly know what particular Senator has charge of it—that they stated that their purpose was to press it to a vote to-night. That seems to have been abandoned, and a motion is now made to go into executive session, and usually when we go into executive session at this hour of the day, we soon find ourselves without a quorum and are compelled to adjourn without transacting any further legislative business. I now desire to inform the Senate that we have the Printing Office in operation and as the appropriation bills will be printed, the Committee on Appropriations will consider it a duty they owe to the country to urge those bills upon the attention of the Senate no matter what other business may be pending.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WRIGHT. In answer to the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] I will say that I said I proposed to press this bill to a vote to-night, and I stand here prepared to do it, and want the Senate to remain here until we shall dispose of the bill. I ask the Senate to vote down the motion for an executive session and continue the consideration of this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Clerk to read the modification of section 5 which I propose.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the proposed amend-

The motion was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

justice to myself that, in the excitement of debate and as I thought under some provocation, I used some words in relation to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] the offensive meaning of which I desire to withdraw. It was not in my mind to say that—

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that the Senator from California will accept any remark from me; but will he wait until the doors of the Senate are opened, so that the statement may be made publicly?

Mr. MORRILL. The reporter is here.

Mr. BOOTH. Certainly I retract all that I have said.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will oblige me, I do not know anything of the purpose of his rising now, nor do I desire to interfere with the purpose he may have. I do not know that it is proper for me to ask this of the Senator, but it is a favor that I venture to ask of him under the circumstances, that, if he has any statement to make in reference to what has been said, he should do it in open Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Saturday, February 17, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 16, 1877.

The House re-assembled at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on War Claims, for consideration at this time, the bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under act of Congress of March

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that bill should go to the Committee of the

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If not acted upon pretty soon it cannot

Mr. WILSON, of lowa. If not acted upon pretty soon it cannot get through during this Congress.

Mr. EDEN. The bill ought to be acted on speedily by the House; otherwise the Senate will not have time to act upon it. These are claims that have been favorably reported on by the commissioners, and under the law of 1871 the faith of the Government is pledged to the payment of such claims as are allowed by the commissioners. If the matter goes over to the next Congress many claimants will doubtless have to sell their claims at a sacrifice. Nothing can be gained by deferring the matter to the next session.

by deferring the matter to the next session.

The SPEAKER. The usual practice in reference to this bill is to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. If the point of order, however, is raised, the Chair must rule that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to have this bill acted upon to-day. I desire to look into it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] objects to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object to its being made a special order for some future day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] that he ask unanimous consent that the bill be made a special order for a future day.

Mr. EDEN. I endeavored in the last session to get the bill through in that way, but I did not succeed. If I can get the floor on Monday, I will endeavor to have the bill passed under a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot promise to give the gentleman from Illinois the floor on Monday for that purpose, for the reason that there is a long list of gentlemen who desire to move suspensions of the rules, and the Chair feels compelled to take them in the order of their application. The Chair would again suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that perhaps he may get unanimous consent to make the bill a special order for to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. EDEN. I make that request.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. The title will be again read.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. GOODIN. I shall object unless it be made after the morning hour.

hour.

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I object if the bill is to take precedence of the special order in which I am interested.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the bill being made a special order for Tuesday, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the proposition in that form: that this bill be made a special order for Tuesday after the morning hour, not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. EDEN. I am afraid that the centleman from Indiana will have

Mr. EDEN. I am afraid that the gentleman from Indiana will have appropriation bills in the way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rule that this would come up immediately after the appropriation bill was disposed of.

There being no further objection, the bill was made a special order for Tuesday next after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of, not to interfere with the general appropriation bills.

PUBLICATION OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

On motion of Mr. DURHAM, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS FOR SOLDIERS OF THE MEXICAN AND BLACK HAWK WARS.

Mr. CAMPBELL, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, concerning pensions for soldiers of the Mexican and Black Hawk wars; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR 1876-

Mr. CUTLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 192) for printing the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1876; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT GLASGOW.

Mr. KEHR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 4342 a bill (H. R. No. 4669) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Glasgow, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, not be brought back on a motion to reconsider, and ordered to be printed.

DENVER A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. KEHR also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the memorial of the Board of Trade of Denver, Colorado, asking that Denver be made a port of entry; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4670) to amend section 2990, chapter 7, title 34, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. HARTZELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department be permitted to print any or all testimony taken before that committee during the present session.

Mr. HARTZELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of H. C. Wood, J. M. Toner, and J. R. Chadwick, a committee representing the American Medical Association; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. LEVY, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, relative to building the levees of the Mississippi River; which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Select Committee on the Mississippi

The memorial is as follows:

Joint resolution asking aid of the National Government to rebuild and repair the levees in the State.

Whereas the levees upon the Mississippi River are at present in such condition as to afford no protection to the alluvial lands of this State, and repairs necessary to be made in order to prevent the utter ruin of all classes residing in those parishes subject to inundation are beyond the means either of the State of Louisian a or of the Louisiana Levee Company, and beyond the reach of private enterprise in the present impoverished condition of the people of those sections; And whereas another inundation of the alluvial lands of this State, with which we are now threatened, would reduce a large portion of the population thereof to a condition of want and penury appalling to contemplate, and would compel their abandonment of the most productive and fertile region of the State: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That this General Assembly hereby memoralizes the Congress of the United States for the assistance of the National Government to rebuild and repair the levees of the State.

That the governor of the State be requested to forward copies of this memorial to the Senators and Representatives for this State, and to request them to present the same to their respective Houses.

LOUIS BUSH,

LOUIS BUSH,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

LOUIS A. WILTZ,

Lieutenant-Governor and President of the Senate.

FRANCIS T. NICHOLLS, Governor of the State of Louisiana.

A true copy.
WILL. A. STRONG,
Secretary of State.

S. O. HEMMINGWAY.

Mr. GAUSE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee of Accounts:

*Resolved**, That S. O. Hemmingway be paid $200 out of the contingent fund of the House for services as messenger for the months of October and November, 1876.

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, presented the resolutions of the State Grange of Missouri in respect to cheap transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THOMAS P. WESTMORELAND.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4671) for the relief of Thomas P. Westmoreland, for compensation for mail service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be

HENRY SOLOMONS.

Mr. RAINEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (II. R. No. 4672) for the relief of Henry Solomons, postmaster of Kingsbee, South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING OF TONNAGE TAX.

Mr. SWANN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back the Senate bill (S. No. 994) to amend section 2931 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to allow the repayment by the Secretary of the Treasury of tonnage tax where it has been ex acted in contravention of treaty stipulation, with an amendment, and to ask immediate action upon the same. It is a very important meas-ure and has received the concurrence and approbation of every genthe and has received the concurrence and approbation of every gentleman who has heretofore been adverse to its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the bill is before the House for consideration.

The bill was read.

It provides that the provisions of section 2931, of chapter 6, title 34, It provides that the provisions of section 2.31, of chapter 6, title 34, of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to cases of payment of tonnage tax on vessels when the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that the exaction of such tax was in contravention of treaty provisions, and he may draw his warrant for the refunding of the tax that was illegally exacted as is provided in section 3012½ of said statutes, provided that said payment took place during six years preceding the passage of this act, or shall hereafter

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the proviso at the end of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is not hereby authorized to refund any tonnage duty that may have been paid before the 14th day of July, A. D. 1862.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the bill before the House now?

The SPEAKER. It is by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not after it was reported. The Chair has not asked for unanimous consent since it has been reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the bill was before the House, but will revoke his decision if the gentleman desires to object.

ject.
Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to hear a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury touching this matter. It is a bill involving a large amount of money and I wish to see what the present Secretary of the Treasury recommends in regard to it. If he recommends it I shall not object

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] to state that the bill came from the Committee on Foreign Affairs with a unanimous report in its favor. Mr. HOLMAN. It is a question of much more importance to the Treasury Department than to the Department of Foreign Affairs, and unless we can have some explanation from the Secretary of the Treasury I certainly do not wish the bill to be acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no option, the bill being objected to, except to rule that it is not before the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

An act (H. R. No. 4576) to provide for changing and fixing the boundaries of certain property ceded to the Government of the United States by the city of Memphis, Tennessee.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 1265) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase of official postage-stamps for the Treasury Department for the current fiscal year.

TAX BILL FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill of the House No. 4554, with the Senate amendments thereto, for the support of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes. No objection being made, the bill, with the Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BANNING. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at twelve o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.

This being Friday, the business in the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a private nature, the call resting with the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that, inasmuch as the last objection day was lost, to-day may be considered as objection day.

Mr. BANNING. I hope the gentleman will allow us to have the morning hour for reports of a private nature from committees.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will withdraw my motion for the present.

DAVID DE HAVEN.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported adversely Senate bill No. 932, for the relief of David De Haven; and the same was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

W. A. H. ALLEN.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4673) for the relief of Passed Assistant Engineer W. A. H. Allen, of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire. I ask that this bill may be now considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections to its present consideration will be in order.

The bill provides that Passed Assistant Engineer W. A. H. Allen, of the United States Navy, shall receive the increased pay of his present grade from the date that he completed the term of sea service regrate from the date that he completed the term of sea service required by law in the previous grade, according to the laws and regulations in force at the date of the vacancy which he now fills, in the same manner as though there had been no delay in his examination and the subsequent issue of his commission; provided the delay was not due to any fault on his part and he was found qualified on the first examination subsequent to the vacancy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM L. SCRUGGS.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back, with a favorable recommendation, House bill No. 4418, to pay William L. Scruggs, late minister at Bogota, from October 10 to November 21, 1876, and ask that it be considered by the House at the first sidered by the House at this time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay William L. Scruggs, late minister of the United States of America to Bogota, United States of Colombia, the sum of $854.17, the amount which would have been due him as minister from the United States of America from October 10, 1876, to November 21, 1876, the time he was actually and necessarily detained in Bogota after his recall by reason of the siege of the city by the revolutionary troops.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think all these bills should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BANKS. This is a claim justly due and the payment of the money is recommended by the Secretary of State. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will withdraw his objection to its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is a report let it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred House bill No. 4418, to pay William L. Scruggs, late minister resident at Bogota, $854.17, salary for the time during which he was necessarily detained in Bogota after his recall by reason of the siege of the city by revolutionary troops, report that in the judgment of the committee the claim is just and should be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a general thing I think all these claims involving expenditures, especially where they concern salaries—
The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the bill—
Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to finish my statement.
The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects that is sufficient.
Mr. HOLMAN. I withdrew my objection, and I was stating my reason for doing so.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. CALHOUN.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4674) granting a pension to George W. Calhoun; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SHIP-CANAL, LAKE GEORGE, FLORIDA.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I am directed by the Committee on Railways and Canals to report back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 4456) to authorize William A. Dorner and others to construct a ship-canal at the head of Lake George, Florida. Mr. EDEN. I make the point of order that this is not a private

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will rule on the point.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. A point of order has been raised by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Eden.] Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point?

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear the point.

The SPEAKER. The point is that this is a public bill, and not entitled to be reported at this time.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to say that although this bill is somewhat of a private nature it contains a grant of power to certain individuals to perform a public work which concerns all those who are interested in the commerce and navigation of the Saint John's River. We have therefore been petitioned to report the bill, which contemplates a great public benefit.

The SPEAKER. In reference to what constitutes a private bill it has been the practice to hold—

Mr. CONGER. Will the Chair hear me a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to be heard before the decision on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to be heard before the decision on the point of order?

Mr. CONGER. That is necessary if my remarks are to have any effect, provided the decision is likely to be against the point.

The SPEAKER. The Digest states that such bills are to be considered private as are "for the interest of individuals, public companies or corporations, a parish, city, or county, or other locality."

"To be a private bill, it must not be general in its enactments, but for the particular interest or benefit of a person or persons." The Chair finds that this bill provides for the collection of tolls generally from the public, and that it also provides for the punishment of individuals in the courts of the United States. These provisions, in the opinion of the Chair, bring the bill within the objection that "a private bill must not be general in its enactments." Therefore the Chair rules that the point of order is well taken. The bill must be returned to the gentleman, as it is not in order to be reported to-day.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to add that the bill appropriates to a private company a public navigable tide-water river of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is much obliged to the gentleman for the additional suggestion, which confirms the propriety of the ruling.

UNION AND CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom was referred a petition of the leading business firms of Cincinnati against abuses of the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies in rates imposed for the carriage of freight and praying for relief, have instructed me to report back the same and to move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

HORACE WOODMAN.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Patents, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1202) authorizing the extension of the patent granted to Horace Woodman, August 1, 1854, for a new machine for stripping cards; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EDWARD A. LELAND.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, also, from the Committee on Patents,

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, also, from the Committee on Patents, reported back, with a recommendation that it be passed, a bill (S. No. 691) for the relief of Edward A. Leland.

The bill was read. It directs the Commissioner of Patents to grant a rehearing of the application of Edward A. Leland for the extension of letters-patent granted to him on the 14th of August, 1860, for improvement in paint-cans, and to revive and extend the letters-patent for the further term of seven years from the 14th day of August, 1874, if, in his judgment, the patentee was the original and first inventor of the invention described in the letters-patent, and the invention is useful, and the patentee has failed, without neglect or fault on his part, to obtain from the use and sale of his invention a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, labor, and expense betowed upon the same and the introduction thereof into use; and the letters-patent, when so revived and extended, are to have the same effect in law as if they had been originally granted for the term of twenty-one years.

been originally granted for the term of twenty-one years.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I call for the reading of the re-

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

On the 14th of August, 1860, letters-patent were granted to Mr. Leland for an improved paint-can. The letters-patent expired on the 14th of August, 1874, and have not been extended.

In the opinion of the committee the improvement patented is valuable. The petitioner has expended considerable time, labor, and money in perfecting his improvement and in making efforts to introduce the improved can into use. He was able to procure about twenty-five hundred of the cans to be made, which were sold at a small profit. He has not been able to realize any adequate remuneration for his time and expense in making the improvement and endeavoring to introduce it into use. This has not been his fault. It has arisen mainly from his want of means to manufacture the cans himself and from his inability to procure parties who had means to engage in their manufacture and sale.

The petitioner did not apply for an extension of his patent in time, owing to sickness and poverty.

He believes that if his patent is extended he has made arrangements for the manufacture and sale of the cans by which he will be able to realize a moderate compensation for the invention and expenditures.

The committee recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be granted, and that the bill herewith reported back be passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time. The question being taken on the passage of the bill, it was not agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I did not suppose that there would be any opposition to this measure. In order that I may be heard on the question, I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. This man Leland is very poor—
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it in order to move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has been recognized and is on the floor to speak to his motion. The Chair would have recognized an opponent of the bill to make the motion to lay on the table if the motion had been made in time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think that the ruling of the Chair is correct.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. The bill before the House proposes only to give this man the time now allowed by law. He has had his patent, which has run for fourteen years. The existing law allows a patent to run for seventeen years. This man is very poor; and in addition to that he is a cripple. He has only been able to realize from his invention about $28. It is said to be useful. It is for an improved paint-can. It is a matter which I think cannot be detrimental to the interests of the people, but rather in fact to the in-

The bill only enables the inventor to go before the Commissioner of Patents to apply for extension, and I surely think the House of Representatives of the United States of America will not refuse to this poor man a boon so small asked at their hands. If he had received a great sum of money perhaps gentlemen might have reason to object to it, but he has not received enough to re-imburse him for the outlay in securing an original patent from the Patent Office. the outlay in securing an original patent from the Patent Office. I sincerely trust the House will enable this man to go before the Commissioner of Patents in order that he may apply and see whether it is proper his patent should be extended.

It seems to me there is an unnecessary prejudice against patents in this House, and I say it respectfully. The country is greatly indebted to the Patent Office system for the development of its re-sources. If it had not been that the country had rewarded genius and labor and thought, we would be back now to the old reap-hook instead of the splendid reapers by which grain is gathered upon the widely extended harvest fields of this country. By rewarding genius we have had the telegraph and various other improvements.

It seems there is an unnecessary prejudice in regard to the extension of patents. The Committee on Patents have examined this matter carefully, and while we have determined not to advocate monopolies yet there are some instances where patents ought to be extended. In this case we thought the patent of this poor man ought to be extended sufficiently to enable him to be put upon an analysis of the three tests to the contract of the patents.

equal footing with other patentees.

I have been asked why his patent cannot be extended under the law now. It is because his patent expired before the present law was passed. By adding three years to his time he will have his patent for seventeen years, and that is only the time provided in the existing law.

If the Congress of the United States want to crush a poor man they have an opportunity here to do it. He has had only about twenty-five hundred of these paint-cans made. Is there any danger to he country in that? Is there any monopoly here? I think not. I yield now for a moment to the gentleman from Michigan.

Ma. CONGER. This is a simple little paint-can invented by a

Mr. CONGER. This is a simple little paint-can invented by a man too poor even to manufacture them. There are some two or three hundred kinds of paint-cans in the world, and it cannot therefore interfere with any other, or increase the price of any other, to allow this patent to be extended. This man was entitled to twenty-one years, under the law which existed when his patent was granted, by an application for renewal at the end of fourteen years. Ignorant of the law, or through some fault of friends, he failed to make the application on the day required by the law. He asks that may be remedied and he may be allowed to ask for an extension. The committee was willing to give him an additional number of years, making seventeen as provided in the present law. It is a matter of little public importance, it is a matter of little private importance, except to this poor man, and the committee felt they were doing nothing but giving him a privilege he was entitled to under the law when his patent was granted. It is a simple thing, and I do not think the House can find fault with the committee for reporting things which their judgment would not approve. I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. NEAL moved to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

vote by which the bill was rejected.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 80.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The motion of Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected was agreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused, and the yeas and nays were refused.

The bill was passed.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS M. STRONG AND THOMAS ROSS.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Patents, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4397) for the relief of Francis M. Strong and Thomas

Ross with an amendment.

The bill, which was read, provides that Francis M. Strong, of Vergennes, in the county of Addison, and State of Vermont, and Thomas Ross, of Rutland, in the county of Rutland, and State of Vermont, have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the letters-patent numbered 24161, granted to them for an improvement in weighing-scales, of date the 24th day of May, 1859, for the term of seven years from and after the expiration of the original term of fourteen years for which said letters-patent were granted; such application to be made in the same manner as if the same had been filed not less than ninety days before the expiration of the original term of said patent; and upon such application. the aforesaid original term of said patent; and upon such application so filed, the Commissioner of Patents shall be authorized to consider and determine the same in the same manner as if the original term of said patent had not expired; provided that no persons shall be held liable for the infringement of said patent, if extended, for making use of said invention since the expiration of the original term of said patent, and prior to the date of its extension.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "the expiration of the original term of fourteen years for which said letters-patent were granted," and in lieu thereof insert the words "the date of such extension."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. I ask for the reading of the report. This is a very simple matter, and when it is understood by the House I think they will pass the bill. The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Francis M. Strong and Thomas Ross, for an extension of letters-patent for improvements in weighing-scales, submit the following report:

The evidence submitted in this case shows that Francis M. Strong, of Vergennes, and Thomas Ross, of Rutland, Vermont, are the joint inventors of certain improvements in weighing-scales, for which letters patent were granted them May 24, 1839 Within ample time, as prescribed by law, these inventors placed in the hands of the Brandon Manufacturing Company a signed petition for the extension of said letters-patent, that it might be forwarded and filed with the Commissioner of Patents. Fearing, however, that some mistake might occur they forwarded to their attorney at Washington a duplicate petition, with instructions that he should file it in case it was not filed in time by other parties. This attorney made frequent inquiries at the Patent Office, and was at length assured that the petition had been filed. The event proved, however, that the clerk in charge was in error and that the petition was not filed, as stated. The mistake occurred through the filing of another application by the same parties for the extension of another patent of the same date. But the error was not discovered until too late to rectify it under the statute, and for this reason the petitioners pray for the passage of an act to enable them to make application, as they certainly would have done if not misled by the information given their attorney at the Patent Office. In view of these facts, the omission to act having arisen by no fault of the patentees, but by the inadvertence of a Government employé, this committee recommend the granting of the prayer and the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. I hope the gentlemen who are opposed, gen-

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. I hope the gentlemen who are opposed, generally speaking, to the extension of patents have given heed to the reading of the report in this case. This is one of the most simple reading of the report in this case. This is one of the most simple cases the Committee on Patents has ever presented here. These applicants simply apply to have an error committed by a clerk in the Patent Office rectified. Under the statute they were entitled to seven years' extension of their patent. They placed their petition in the hands of the Brandon Manufacturing Company, expecting them to file their petition. Fearing that these parties might fail in filing their petition, they sent a duplicate of the petition to attorneys in Washington. Those attorneys made application to the Patent Office and were informed by a clerk in the Patent Office that the petition was properly filed. The clerk was in error, and the consequence was that the time passed for the filing of the petition and the opportunity passed for obtaining an extension. This is as just a case as was ever presented to Congress, and I trust that those gentlemen who are honest opponents of the extension of patents will see that this is an exceptional case.

ceptional case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I believe the proper thing to be done by Mr. WILSON, of lowa. I believe the proper thing to be done by the Committee on Patents is to report an amendment to the patent laws which should be general in its operation. I do not like the idea of one man coming here and getting an extension of his patent when a hundred other citizens who may have just as good a case do not get extensions. If a man has had the use of a patent for fourteen years, that is a good while. A great many of those patents are got on inventions made in other countries, the results of other men's genius. It is true as a general proposition that the men who operate machinery make the necessary improvements and then share fellows finding make the necessary improvements and then sharp fellows finding these out come to Washington and get patents on them.

When a man invents anything useful or original I would not for a moment oppose his getting a long lease of the benefits arising from it. But that is not the way in which the patent system works. I know, for example, in regard to agricultural machinery—reapers, mowers, cultivators, &c.—that the men who make valuable suggestions for the improvement of these machines are the men who use them in the But the manufacturing companies send out circulars, invite recommendations relative to improvements, and send agents around, and when they have got suggestions from the men who toil in the fields with their machines, then they come here and, having got a patent, first get the benefit of the law as far as it goes and then lobby for an extension of it through Congres for an extension of it through Congress.

Now I believe this Committee on Patents is perfectly honest. I do not believe you could approach any of them in a corrupt manner. But I believe the system is wrong. When a man has got the benefit of the law, let him abide by that. If he gets all the advantages the law gives him, let him be satisfied. As a general proposition the benefits of those patents go to manufacturers who have bought up the rights of the original inventors who only get some small, miserable pittance out of them. I am opposed to the whole principle of extension; where it does one man justice, it does a thousand men an injury.

Mr. CONGER. I am surprised to hear a gentleman who claims to be the only representative of the farming interest in the House—

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not claim any such thing. I claim, however, to be about the only farmer in the House.

Mr. CONGER. Who represents himself to be the granger of the House, finding fault with inventors who have made the agricultural House, finding fault with inventors who have made the agricultural interest of this country what it is and its prosperity a possibility f Why, sir, the gentleman would go back and would go down on his marrow-bones and reap with the old sickle instead of the machine marrow-bones and reap with the old sickie instead of the machine for which we are indebted to the system of patents the gentleman is now condemning. But the gentleman had occasion to say, and must say probably for his own sake and that of his own constituents, what he has against inventors and improvements. That does not apply to this case. Under the law, these men had a right upon application to an extension of seven years. They sent their application to the Patent Office for that extension. An officer in the Patent Office, misled by the number, informed their attorney that the application was already on file. That was a mistake; the application sent by these men was not filed within the proper time, and therefore no extension could be granted. There are gentlemen upon our committee who are more opposed in principle to any extension of patents even who are more opposed in principle to any extension of patents even than the gentleman from Iowa, who has that hobby very fully developed, and yet there was not a man of them but what admitted in a moment the propriety of correcting an error in the office and giving the citizen his rights. Whatever may be said about other cases, this House has never yet failed to pass bills correcting an error in the conduct of its own officers for the benefit of its own citizens. It is to correct an error of its own officer and permit a citizen to have the benefit of the application which he sent to the office, but which the officer told his attorney had already been filed and therefore it was not necessary to file another. That is the sole purport of this bill.

bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to say one word. The gentleman from Michigan does me injustice in supposing that I condemn machines or inventors. I have no such idea. I condemn the principle which steals from inventors, and if there was any way by which I could do it in a parliamentary manner I would condemn the men who help them to do it. I cannot agree with the policy. I think it proposes to give advantages to one that cannot be given to a thousand others.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman mean that if one man makes an invention that a thousand others are entitled to the benefit of it?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No, sir; but I say that one man can get an extension where a thousand cannot.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No, sir; but I say that one man can get an extension where a thousand cannot.

Mr. CONGER. I do not think it necessary to defend the honor and integrity of the committee from the assault of the gentleman from Iowa; let him go on.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have not made an assault. I do not do such things. I was afraid some one might make an assault upon them, and I think so much of that committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and of the gentleman from Michael when the committee and gentleman from Michael when the committee and gentleman from Michael when the committee and gentleman from Michael when the gentleman f igan that I prefaced my remarks with a eulogy upon the committee, and at that very time I had the gentleman from Michigan in my mind's on Patents, that it is simply their duty to revise the laws, I wish him to understand that nine-tenths of the business before that committee consists in applications for extensions of patents, and they are generally complicated and difficult cases to understand; and that the committee report nothing but what they deem meritorious and proper. The committee would have been glad at an early period in the session to have been relieved of this business. The House forces this committee to attend to the business referred to them, but when a report is made it is generally rejected. I now yield to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. JOYCE.]

Mr. JOYCE. I do not understand that this bill seeks to amend the patent laws of the United States, or anything of the kind. I understand that the bill seeks to give the right to these men that they have lost in consequence of an omission or mistake on the part of the officers of the Patent Office. I understand that these gentlemen had a right under the law to have an extension of their patent for seven years; that they made the necessary application; that they sent it here to Washington to the Patent Office; and then after waiting a sufficient length of time and in superabundance of caution they drew up another application, sent it to their attorneys in this city, and desired that they should go to the Patent Office and inquire there to know whether the original or first application they sent had been filed for an extension of their patent. Those attorneys, living here in the city of Washington, went to the Patent Office, they made that inquiry and were told by the officers or clerks in the Patent Office that the original or first application had been filed, made a mistake and that the original or first application had not been filed, and consequently the time had passed by within which these centlemen could and that the original or first application had not been filed, and consequently the time had passed by within which these gentlemen could make their application to the Patent Office asking an extension of their patent.

Now these are the simple facts. I know both of these gentlemen; I know them to be men of truth; I know them to be men of integrity; I know them to be good men. They come here in good faith and ask this of Congress because it is their right, not to amend the patent laws, not to give them rights that are denied to other men, but simply to give them the right that they had under the law, and which they lost in consequence of the mistake or neglect of an officer in the Patent Office.

It seems to me that there can be no doubt in regard to this matter at all, and I certainly hope that the House will pass this bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that to-day be considered as objection day, as we lost the last objection day.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Bright] to withdraw his motion for the present, until I can report from the Committee on the Judiciary sundry bills for the removal of political disabilities. I think it will take but a few moments to dispose of them.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will withdraw the motion if the bills do not lead to debate.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the bills being reported, but I must reserve the right to object to their consideration at this time until after they have been read.

Mr. KNOTT accordingly, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 3654) to relieve William S. Russell, of Florida, of political disabilities; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4552) to remove the political disabilities of James Austin McCreight, of Alachua County, Florida.

The petitions accompanying the bills were read, and the bills were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof. thereof thereof.

Mr. KNOTT, from the same committee, also reported the following bills; which were read a first and second time:

A bill (H. R. No. 4675) to remove the political disabilities of Henry H. Lewis, of Maryland;

A bill (H. R. No. 4676) to remove the political disabilities of Henry B. Tyler, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4677) to remove the political disabilities of William W. Mackall, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4678) to relieve Charles H. Levy, of the State of Louisiana, of his political disabilities.

The petitions accompanying the bills were read, and the bills were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof. in favor thereof.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA 3.65 BONDS.

Mr. HENDEE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4679) to prevent default or delay in the payment of the interest on the bonds authorized by the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 429) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following A bill (S. No. 457) authorizing the restoration of Charles E. Boggs to the active list of the Navy.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 234) to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg;

An act (S. No. 805) relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California;

Au act (8. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the do-nation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850; An act (8. No. 993) for the relief of the late Admiral Charles Wilkes;

and

An act (S. No. 1251) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting his annual report; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting his annual report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this report will be referred

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought so, but he was requested by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to have it referred to

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it is referred to that committee it cannot be reported to the House this session, perhaps, unless it be by unanimous consent. I think it should go to the Committee on Printing. If the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. CALDWELL, ] is not present, I will move that this report be referred to the Committee on Printing. I think it must be apparent to every one that that is the proper reference. The House has passed a resolution to print extra copies of the Agricul-Thouse has passed a resolution to print extra copies of the Agricultural Report, and has instructed the Committee on Printing to so report, and the committee has been waiting for some time for this report of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it should go to the Committee on Printing, but at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture he suggested that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture when he made that request could have had in mind the necessity for immediate action by the Committee on Printing.
Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama.

I desire to have it referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It would be better to refer it to the Comnittee on Printing, because that committee would have authority to report at any time.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. The House has passed a resolution providing for the printing of extra copies of this report.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But the Committee on Printing cannot act upon that resolution until they have the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture before them. If this report is referred to the Committee on Printing then they can report upon it at any time.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I will have no objection to its reference to the Committee on Printing, as that committee has the right to report at any time.

Accordingly the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture was referred to the Committee on Printing.

No. 1185) to ratify an agreement with certain bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians and also with the Northern Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians, an amendment was adopted on motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] to come in after the word "confirm" in the ninth line, referring to the printed bill. The amendment should really come in after the word "confirm" in the sixth line of the engrossed bill, by which the clerks are governed in the location of amendments. There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

I ask unanimous consent that this be considered "objection day."

Mr. BANNING. I suggest that the call of committees becontinued until all reports of a private nature have been received.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order unless the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] yields the floor for the purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee that this be considered "objection day."

Mr. BRIGHT. The gentleman's objection will avail nothing, because we can lay aside by a majority vote every bill which may obstruct our going through with the Calendar.

may proceed with other bills on the Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know the gentleman's reason for asking that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. BRIGHT. With the indulgence of the committee I can state my reasons. This bill has had the consideration of the Committee of the Whole during a part of last session, and also during this session on every private bill day which was not "objection day." It has for two sessions blocked the legislation upon the Calendar. I think it has had its day in court; and I am unwilling that it shall occupy further the time of the House during the present session.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman's objection did not go further, I would not have a word to say. But when I objected to his request that this be regarded as "objection day," I understood him to say that he would move to pass over every case where there was any question in reference to a claim. That being the case, I must interpose objection to any such course of proceeding.

NEWPORT BARRACKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1055) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of New-port, Kentucky, the grounds at the confluence of the Licking with the Ohio River, in Campbell County, Kentucky, known as the Newport barracks.

Mr. BANINNG. When this bill was reported Newport barracks had not been abandoned. But now I think there is no desire to have the bill passed. I move, therefore, that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be not passed.

The motion was agreed to.

COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No.

2462) for the relief of the College of William and Mary, in Virginia, for property destroyed during the late war.

Mr. BRIGHT. I observe that this bill was reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] who is not now in his seat. In order that he may be present when it is considered, I move that it be postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

RE-IMBURSEMENT TO CITY OF BALTIMORE.

The bill was read. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,500, which sum, due the mayor and city council as interest from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, was collected from the company illegally as an internal-revenue tax by Joseph J. Lewis, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on the 19th day of January, 1864.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. THOLMAN. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the gentleman any letter from the Secretary of the Treasury?

of the Treasury?

Mr. THOMAS. I have not; but I have two letters from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which I think will satisfy the gentleman from Indiana.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the committee will indulge me in a short explanation all will be satisfied of the justice of the claim provided for in this bill and the propriety of paying it. The bill comes from the Committee of Ways and Means with unanimous recommendation the Committee of Ways and Means with unanimous recommendation for its passage. The facts are these: Under the internal-revenue law of 1862 a tax of 3 per cent. was levied upon the interest due on all securities of railroad companies; and under that law it was also provided these railroad corporations should reserve the amount of the tax from the interest and pay it directly to the Government. The city of Baltimore held a mortgage on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to secure the payment of the principal and semi-annual interest as it accrued upon $5,000,000 loaned to that company by the city in aid of the construction of its work. This 3 per cent. tax was assessed on the interest due on that mortgage, and after some resistance on the part of the corporation of the city of Baltimore, and also on the part of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, the railroad company reserved and paid under protest the tax of 3 per cent. on six quarters' interest which had then accrued. That was paid in 1864, on the 19th of January. By a subsequent act, the act of 1864, this 3 per cent. rate of tax was raised to 5 per cent. and a demand was made on the corporation of the Baltimore and Ohio Raildemand was made on the corporation of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to reserve and pay to the Government the 5 per cent. tax due on this mortgage held by the city of Baltimore. The company resisted it, the city of Baltimore resisted it, and the Government instituted a suit in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland for its recovery. That suit was decided in that court against the Government, and the case was brought by a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the judgment below was sustained.

The court decided that it was a tax imposed, not upon the debtor, but upon the creditor, and inasmuch as the creditor was the city of Baltimore, and as the city of Baltimore was a municipal corporation and one of the agencies of the State in the administration of its government, its municipal revenues were not liable to taxation. And so it was declared as the bill alleges that this tax was illegal and improperly exacted from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

To reclaim this sum of $13,500 exacted under the act of 1862, this bill is now introduced. I have a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recognizing this as a just and proper claim and one which ought to be refunded to the city of Baltimore. I ask the Clerk to read the two letters in the order in which he will find them marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, January 18, 1877.

SIR: Your favor of this date is received. The inclosures, consisting of a draught of a bill for the relief the mayor and city council of Baltimore, a memorial from F. C. Latrobe, mayor of Baltimore, and other papers relative to the subject-matter of the bill, are herewith returned.

The facts appear to be that this office considered the question of the liability of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to withhold and pay over the tax on interest paid to the city of Baltimore, and required the company to pay over such tax to this office. The records show the receipt of $13,500 on the 20th of January, 1864, from that company on account of tax on interest paid to the city of Baltimore.

I am satisfied that this tax was improperly, exacted in view of the subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court. (See Buffinton vs. Day, 11 Wallace, 113.)

I would add, however, that in the various claims and compromises which the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has had before this office, an allowance may have been made to it for this tax, which allowance would give the city of Baltimore a right of action against the company for recovery of the same.

I would like further time for examination of this point and will give the matter immediate attention.

Respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Hon. P. F. THOMAS, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Washington, January 19, 1877.

Washington, January 19, 1877.

Sig: An my letter to you yesterday, in relation to the petition of the city of Baltimore to have refunded the sum of $13,500, I stated that I would have a further search made to determine whether the amount named had been refunded or entered into the settlement of any compromise between this office and the city of Baltimore or the Baltimore and Ohio Ratiroad Company.

I have to state that the claims and compromises above referred to have been examined, as far as discovered on the files of this office, and no evidence has been found that the sum withheld from the city of Baltimore, amounting to $13,500, has ever been returned to the city or the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, or allowed in any compromise between this office and either of the corporations named.

Respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM.

Mr. THOMAS. It will be seen, in addition to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the suit against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in the name of the Government, reported in 17 Wallace, the officer having charge of the Internal Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department tells this House this claim is just and ought to be paid. As the tax was improperly exacted I move the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it

JAMES J. WARING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 776) for the relief of James J. Waring, of Savannah, Georgia.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to James J. Waring, of Savannah, Georgia, the sum of $890.01 in gold, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, on account of said amount having been paid by the said James J. Waring on a portion of the steamplow machinery imported by him, which was ordered when the same was duty free, but a portion of which did not arrive in the United States until after duty was established on the same.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The report was read, as follows:

It is a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to James J. Waring the sum of $590.01, gold.

The committee find, after careful examination of the case, that Mr. Waring went to Europe to examine there certain steam-plow machinery, used for the cultivation of the soil, with a view of importing the same to this country, should he find it to be as represented.

In 1872 Congress passed a law (United States Statutes at Large, page 273, section 7) that for a term of two years from date steam-plow machinery, adapted to the cultivation of the soil, might be imported by any person for his own use free of duty.

the cultivation of the soil, might be imported by any person for his own use free of duty.

On the strength of this and on the faith of the Government that no duty would be exacted, Mr. Waring purchased one of these steam-plows, and ordered it shipped to his address at Savannah. The manufacturers completed part of his order and shipped it to him, which Mr. Waring received and entered free of duty.

By a series of unexpected delays, for which Mr. Waring was in no way responsible, the remainder of the machinery to complete the steam-plow, and without which the first consignment was wholly worthless, did not arrive till after the expiration of the time allowed by law for free entry thereof; therefore Mr. Waring was compelled to pay duty on last shipment, which he did under protest, in order to be able to complete his steam-plow.

The committee are, therefore, of the opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and that the bill (H. R. 776) authorizing such relief should be passed.

Mr. THOMAS. I send to the desk to be read a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the collector at Savannah in regard to this subject.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

Washington, D. C., September 18, 1874.

SIR: Your communication of September 14 instant, inclosing protest and appeal 813 C of Mr. J. J. Waring from your assessment of duty on a certain importation of parts of a steam-plow is received.

The limitation of the laws imposing duties, and particularly of the law under which for two years from June 30, 1872, steam-plow machinery was entitled to admission free of duty, affords no opportunity for extension of the time or for consideration of equitable questions in relation to shipments ordered but not received within such limit.

The Department therefore regrets its inability to afford the relief sought, but would cheerfully recommend legislation for that purpose.

Very respectfully,

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, Savannah, Georgia.

Custom-House, Collector's Office, Savannah, Georgia, November 24, 1874.

I certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the original letter on file in JAMES ATKINS, Collector. [SEAL]

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MISSION LAND PATENTS IN OREGON, ETC.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 631) providing for the adjudication and issue of patents in mission-land cases in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana.

The bill was read, as follows:

631) providing for the adjudication and issue of patents in mission-land cases in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas, by the act organizing the Territory of Oregon, passed August 14, 1848, Congress granted the tract of land, not to exceed six hundred and forty acres of land, or one section, settled upon and occupied by sach missionary station among the Indian control of the several religious societies to which said stations, respectively, the properties of the several religious societies to which said stations, respectively, the properties of the several religious societies to which said stations, respectively to the several religious societies of the forest said station among the Indian tribes of said Territory prior to August 14, 1848, and also wherever there existed such a station on March 2, 1853, in the same Territory. SEC. 7. That all suits or proceedings in equity for any land under the provisions of this act shall be commenced within five years from the date of its approval, or be forever barred.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would inquire of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr.

LANE] who has reported this bill, whether it was reported by a unanimous committee

Mr. LANE. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that this bill received the careful consideration of the Committee on Public Lands of the House and was unanimously reported by the committee. The bill makes no grant whatever. It simply provides for an adjudication in the case of conflicts. And had a law of this character existed before this time the trouble that arose relative to the Saint James mission claim, which was so elaborately considered here a short time ago, would not have arisen. I ask now that the report accom-panying the bill may be read. I cannot conceive that there will be any objection to it at all.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

This bill provides for the adjudication and issue of patents in mission-land cases in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho and Montana. The first law upon which these particular mission lands are founded is embraced in the actorganizing the Territory of Oregon, passed August 14, 1848, which is in words as follows, the same being a proviso to the first section of said act:

"And provided also, That the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said Territory, and improvements thereon, be confirmed and established in the several religious societies to which said missionary stations in what is now the State of Oregon, buildings had been crected and improvements made. The services of the missionaries were of great value, and were properly appreciated by the act referred to. Upon the organization of the Territory of Washington, the following provision was made:

"Provided further, That the title to the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said Territory, or that may have been so occupied as missionary stations prior to the passage of the act establishing the territorial government of Oregon, with the improvements thereon, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the several religious societies to which said missionary stations severally belong."

These laws unquestionably conferred a title upon missions occupying lands at that time within the limits of said Territory. It certainly conveyed a title as against the United States; but upon examination of these acts it will be found that there is no provision for the issuance of patents. There is title, but, anomaly in law, no muniment thereof. Can there be a better title than that established by legislative enactment? Why, then, should the ordinary evidence thereof be withheld? Why should there be difficulty in obtaining the same? In the case of a conflict u perfections were developed. In an opinion rendered in that case May 27, 1864, (Opinions, volume 11, page 47,) Attorney-General Bates thus referred to the matter:

"I do not wonder that legal difficulties should arise in attempting to execute an act of Congress so vaguely and incautiously expressed. With this class of land titles—direct grants by act of Congress, with no provision for after-examination by commissioners of courts—I have been forced to be somewhat familiar. The act of June 13, 1812, (2 Stats., 7, 8), granted many lots of land to persons inhabiting divers towns in Missonai, upon the single condition of inhabitation, cultivation, or possession prior to December 20, 1803, and both the local courts and the Supreme Court of the United States have uniformly held that the act itself is a perfect title when the required facts are found by a jury.

"Under this act the General Land Office declined for a long time to issue patents, seeing that the act itself was a perfect title and that in its terms it did not require a patent to issue.

"But the act of December 22, 1854, (10 Stats., 599.) makes it lawful to issue patents upon such statutory grants. This act, however, does not require the issuing of a patent in any case, but only permits it, makes it lawful, and thereby leaves it to the discretionary judgment of your Department. I do not think any Executive Department (not yours nor mine) is the proper judge of a disputed question of this character, and I would decline to assume the jurisdiction by issuing a patent."

A similar bill to this, in fact in the precise words, was before Congress at the last session, No. 3388. The Secretary of War, in a communication to the House, recommended its passage.

It will be observed that this bill only provides for the extinguishment of the title of the United States to these lands in accordance with the acts referred to in the preamble. The rights of third parties or adverse claimants are well protected, being furnished with an easy and simple method of reaching the civ

I desire to say as a matter of good faith to the gentle-Mr. LANE. man from Washington Territory, [Mr. JACOBS,] that I consented that he should offer certain amendments which do not materially affect the bill, and which I shall not antagonize at this time. I shall consent, if it be in order, that he be permitted to present those amendments now.

Mr. JACOBS. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "thereof," in the twenty-third line of the second page, the words "or in case a patent has already issued for said land or any part thereof."

Also, strike out the word "therete," in the twenty-fourth line of the second page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to said religious society or church."

The amendments were adopted.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

S. T. MARSHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2695) for the relief of S. T. Marshall, of Lee County, Iowa.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to S. T. Marshall, of Lee County, Iowa, whatever sum may be found to be due him on account of beef-cattle furnished the United States for the use of the Indian Department in California in 1851, upon a fair and equitable settlement of his accounts (as assignee of G. M. Marshall) with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs accompanying the bill was read, as follows:

The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs accompanying the bill was read, as follows:

As the purchasing and disbursing agent of the commission which was sent to California in 1850 to make treaties with the hostile Indians in California, Reddick McKee made a contract with General Estill to furnish beef-cattle for the escort of United States soldiers which accompanied said McKee and party; that said Estill did furnish a large number of cattle under the contract, in which the claimant seems to have been interested. In December, 1850, at San Francisco, the accounts of Estill and Marshall were settled, and the agent, McKee, gave to them a certificate of indebtedness, showing that there was due them on the beef contract the sum of $6,598.49, which said McKee said, and still says, he had not the money to pay, in consequence of the appropriation for the service in California having been reduced much below what he supposed it would be. As evidence of said indebtedness, however, said McKee gave to G. M. Marshall a certificate of indebtedness. A copy, as sworn to by said McKee, is herewith submitted, together with the other evidence in the case. And, confirmatory of this, said McKee, in his official report to the Committee on Indian Affairs, states that this amount is due to said Marshall, but qualified by an indorsement in these words, "Subject to credit." But your committee have not been able to ascertain the amount of the "credit." to which said claim is "subject," nor on what account. Your committee are satisfied, however, that a part at least of this claim is just, and ought to be paid.

It may be, and your committee believe it is, true that the contract made by said McKee with Estill and Marshall to furnish beef to the expedition was made without authority of law; but the evidence shows very clearly that said McKee was the accredited agent of the Government, and that these parties contracted with him under the belief that he had authority to contract with them for and on behalf of the Government, and that he hi

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not notice in the reading of the report the date when this sale is said to have been made to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again read the portion of the report showing the date of the transaction.

The Clerk read as follows:

As the purchasing and disbursing agent of the commission which was sent to California in 1850 to make treaties with the hostile Indians in California, Reddick McKee made a contract with General Estill to furnish beef-cattle for the escort of United States soldiers which accompanied said McKee and party; that said Estill did furnish a large number of cattle under the contract, in which the claimant seems to have been interested.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a claim twenty-seven

Mr. FRYE. It ought to be paid then.
Mr. HOLMAN. Without a word of recommendation on the part of the Interior Department or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I move that the bill be passed over in order that business more modern may be considered.

Mr. McCRARY. The only objection that I understand the gentle-

Mr. McCRARY. The only objection that I understand the gentleman from Indiana to raise to the payment of this claim is that it has been due for a long time, if due at all. Being familiar with the evidence in the case, I desire to state to the gentleman and to the House that this delay is fully explained by the evidence. The claim was made very soon after it accrued. The papers were placed in the hands of parties here in the city of Washington for the prosecution of the claim. They were held by those parties for some time without the money being collected, the action of Congress being required. When the war broke out the persons who had possession of the papers and charge of the claim went into the southern army. The claim. and charge of the claim went into the southern army. The claimant has never been able to find them since, and his efforts to find those parties and the original papers have delayed him until within the last year or two, when he has procured duplicates from the original Indian agent himself, which are sworn to and filed in the evidence in this age. dence in this case

There is some little doubt as to the exact amount which is due to this claimant, as stated in the report. But that he furnished property to the United States for which he has never received a cent is entirely clear; and a fair settlement of his accounts at the Treasury Department will determine exactly what is due him. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not be passed over, but will be laid aside to be reported to the House

Mr. HOLMAN. My objection was not simply that this claim had lain over for some twenty-seven years, without any explanation, but it was based on the additional fact that there is no official statement from the Interior Department, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or from any other officer of the Government who might be supposed to be familiar with the transactions of the Government in past posed to be familiar with the transactions of the Government in past-years toward the Indians, upon which to predicate action on a sub-ject like this. Nor is there any explanation why this claim was not paid at the time, except that the appropriation was not such as the Indian agent had expected. I assume, sir, that where an Indian agent or any other agent of the Government enters into a supposed contract without authority of law it furnishes a case that ought to be very closely scanned. The fact of entering into a contract of this kind closely scanned. The fact of entering into a contract of this kind without having money with which to pay it would imply an undue assumption or exercise of authority on the part of the agent; in such a case there may be a reasonable apprehension that the whole transaction is tainted with fraud. Legitimate and proper claims against the Government are all paid except in extraordinary contingencies. Every case that comes to Congress is something out of the ordinary course of the Government, is some transaction having some degree of crookedness about it, and at least it should be made to appear with reasonable certainty that there is an equitable claim against the Government. And the presumption against a claim, coming up after a long lapse of time for settlement, ought to be repelled by a very careful statement on the part of the committee making the examination of it. I do not remember to have known a claim of this vague charof it. I do not remember to have known a claim of this vague character to have been passed through a committee, and ultimately through the House, as old as this one is, without at least a much more thorough explanation than is furnished here by this report, which is exceedingly meager. The committee believe that there was a sale of beef to this agent, and that he had no money to pay for it. But even the voucher seems to be lost, and this report is made upon an alleged sworn copy of the voucher. What became of the voucher? I see no explanation of that. How is it that there is no explanation from the Indian commission or from the Indian Bureau? I do not think any of these irregular claims, entirely outside of the proper administration of the Government, should be acted on except when the case is very satisfactorily made out; for, as I suggested, it must be borne in mind that all these claims brought here for adjudication are outside of the regular order of proceedings. The appropriations made to carry on the Government are generally ample, and the officers of the Government are limited to those appropriations in the expenditures which they are authorized to make. And when these irregular transactions come before us, when the conduct of an officer must be sanctioned, approved, and ratified, it seems to me that it should only be tioned, approved, and ratified, it seems to me that it should only be done when it is shown very satisfactorily that the officer was doing the best he could in the performance of his duty, that by some unforeseen event he had exhausted his appropriation unintentionally, and had not money to pay the claim. And I must insist that, without some explanation from the Indian Bureau, the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. BOONE. I desire to state, Mr. Chairman, that this bill did undergo a very close examination by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is true the report does not set forth all the evidence in support of It is true the report does not set forth all the evidence in support of the claim, and it is further true that this claim is an old one. But that is very easily accounted for. Now there can be no possible doubt about this case. These parties furnished the Government with beef which was consumed, and the Government got the benefit of it. It was furnished at the instance of an officer of the Government, Mr. McKee, who was the agent of the Government in California to treat with hostile Indians, and the reason he had not money to meet this debt arose from a misapprehension on his part as to what would be the appropriation.

the appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has this matter been considered by the Interior

Mr. BOONE. I do not think it has. This claim was put into the hands of attorneys in Washington City before the war. It dragged itself along here until the war came up, and then the claim was lost in the confusion of that time. The attorneys went away; some of the parties died; the balance became poor, and are now very old men. They were expecting that their attorneys would present their claims and get them allowed, because the agent of the Government (Mr. Mc-Kee) had in his official report of his transactions in California, which has been published, stated that this amount of money was due to has been published, stated that this amount of money was due to these parties. They supposed, therefore, that there would be no difficulty in getting the money. But the claim went along until the war came up, and then passed off with other business of the kind. After the war closed, not knowing how to proceed or where to go, these parties have been kept out of their money.

Now, Mr. McKee states in a written affidavit, as well as in his report, that in his transactions he was acting on the supposition that the appropriation by Congress would be sufficient to cover the necessary expresses of that expedition. He in good faith bought this meet sary expenses of that expedition. He, in good faith, bought this meat from these parties, supposing that upon the vouchers which he would furnish the claim would be paid.

The claim is a meritorious one, the case is perfectly clear. There is no doubt that the Government got the meat, and that it was furnished at the request of the agent, and that no extraordinary price was paid for it. He was acting under a misapprehension as to what would be the appropriation.

Now I submit whether or not it would be fair in that state of things for the Government to repudiate what the evidence shows to be a bona fide and honest debt, because it is nothing else.

Now I did not as chairman of the subcommittee on Indian affairs, Now I did not as chairman of the subcommittee on Indian affairs, who report this bill, think it necessary to incorporate in the report all the evidence on which my judgment rested. It is not usual to do so, but I feel satisfied that the claim is a just one, and ought to be paid, and the fact that it has slept so long ought not to be a conclusive reason against its payment. We all know how such things are managed, and especially when the amounts claimed are small, and belong to men not familiar with parliamentary proceeding and the prosecution of claims at the Capitol. I think there can be no doubt about the justice of this claim, and that this old man ought to have this money, and ought to have had it years ago.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is still no explanation why the claim rested without any action for ten years. It seems to have originated in 1850. This Government between the years 1850 and 1860 was quite 1850. This Government between the years 1850 and 1860 was quite prompt in the adjustment of claims against it. There were comparatively few claims against it. Officers very seldom then exceeded their powers in making contracts. Will the gentleman explain how it happened that ten entire years elapsed without any step being taken to place the claim before the Government? The gentleman lays stress on the fact that the war disarranged all the business of the country and that the claim agents having charge of these claims went away. That is satisfactory so far. But that covers a very small amount of time. It seems to have all the marks, judging from the explanation of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BOONE,] of some of those old familiar claims that have been rejected time and again for a quarter of a century.

Mr. BOONE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] that if he were to remain in Congress much longer this claim would be older still before it is paid; and perhaps that may account for its not having been paid before this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend can have the consolation, if it is any, that this claim will not be delayed much longer on that account. My impression is that these ancient claims should be allowed to rest some time longer.

Mr. WALLING. I am acquainted with all the parties to this claim. I knew them very shortly after the claim accrued, and I am familiar with the statements of those who knew about it at the time, and with the surroundings of the claim and its justice. The claim was presented before the Department and prosecuted for a long time, but unsuccessfully, probably for the reason that the parties did not understand how to present it. It is an old claim, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] states, but I have not the least doubt of its justice. I am familiar with all the facts, as they were stated to me by those who were with these parties in California where the service was rendered. I trust that no objection raised here will be sufficient to defeat a claim as honest as this is simple because if its article.

dered. I trust that no objection raised here will be sufficient to defeat a claim as honest as this is, simply because of its antiquity.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to direct the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Walling] to the fact that every year there are coming here from the Treasury Department claims against the Indian Department, some of which are audited and some are not. We had Department, some of which are audited and some are not. We had here the other day, while considering the deficiency bill, a large number of claims, some of them audited and some not; we could not tell which had been audited and which had not been. That is the general course in reference to this class of claims. Now I hold that it is right that they should be first passed upon by the Department; that is the general practice in regard to them. I would ask the gentleman if it is not right that the application should be made to the Department and the action of the Department had upon these claims, instead of their first coming before Congress in this manner. I do not say anything in regard to the justice of this claim; I am only speaking of the method of proceeding.

Mr. WALLING. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] I will say that the case which arose the other day, and to which he refers, embraced a large number and a great variety of which he refers, embraced a large number and a great variety of claims, all put in one amendment. It was entirely proper that this House and each member of the House should know for himself whether each item of those claims was correct or not.

But where only a single claim is concerned, the party having the claim against the Government has his election either to go the Department or to come to Congress. And if his claim is just it should be paid, whether the Department has passed upon it or not. The appropriation to pay the claim must be made by Congress; an act of Congress must give effect to the action of the Department. If the evidence is such as to satisfy a committee of this House of the justice of the claim, I do not understand why that should not be quite as satisfactory as evidence that would satisfy the head of a Depart-

Mr. BLOUNT. Would it not be wisdom on the part of the House to avail itself of information from a Department as well as information it may obtain from one of its committees?

Mr. WALLING. It is not justice on the part of the House to always defer the payment of a claim until the close of each Congress, and then raise an objection to it and in that way throw it over to another Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is another question.

Mr. BOONE. This bill does not appropriate any particular amount of money, but leaves it subject to the decision of the Department which is to investigate the claim.

Mr. WALLING. I am not familiar with the details of the bill, but

Mr. WALLING. I am not familiar with the details of the bill, but I know that the claim is a just one.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Boone] the bill does not pass upon the merits of the claim, but leaves it subject to the action of the Department.

Mr. BOONE. It authorizes the Department to pay whatever amount is found to be due.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I desire to say, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs having this bill under consideration, that all the facts which could have been presented to the Department were presented to that committee. The committee examined the evidence, and came to the conclusion set forth in the report made by the gentheman from Kentucky, [Mr. Boone.] Every gentleman on this floor who has had occasion to attend to matters before the Committee on Indian Affairs knows perfectly well how difficult it is to get anything through that committee of the character of the claim now under consideration. I can say for the information of all gentlemen upon this Boone,] who made this report, examined this claim with a great deal of care, and we came to the conclusion that it was a just and honest claim and ought to be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have here a statement which explains why this claim has not been paid; a letter from the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated in September, 1853. I ask the Clerk to read it. The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, September 22, 1853.

Sin: I have received your letter of the 19th instant, inclosing one from J. W-Rankin, esq., desiring certain information in connection with a claim, said to be pending in this Department, amounting to $6,688.47, on account of supplies furnished to the Government through R. McKee, late agent for the Indians in Cali-

In reply I have to say that it appears from a "schedule of debts due and payable at San Francisco, by the disbursing agent of the Department of Indian Affairs in California," forwarded by him to this office under date July 1, 1852, that G. M. Marshall holds his certificate for $6,598,47 for beef, and that it is qualified by the remark, "subject to credit." The late agent also states in same paper as follows: "I gave Marshall a letter to you submitting that, if equally convenient, his certificate might be paid at Washington. Circumstances have since made it proper that the payment should be made here, and I will thank you to refer him to this office for settlement."

Were there no objections of this character, however, the certificate of indebtedness could not be paid here, inasmuch as it forms one of a large class of claims contracted without authority by the late agents in California, for the payment of which no provision has been made by Congress.

Mr. Rankin's letter is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. MIX, Acting Commissioner.

CHARLES MASON, Esq., Commissioner of Patents, Washington City, D. C.

Washington, September 23, 1853.

Dear Sir: Your letter of the 25th August was referred by me to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have just received the foregoing reply.

Yours truly, CHARLES MASON.

J. W. RANKIN, Esq.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill seems to be for the relief of S. T. Marshall. Yet I find from these papers that the original claimant was James M. Estel. I ask the Clerk to read the paper I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, December 31, 1851.

This is to certify that in the adjustment of the account of James M. Estel for beef-cattle purchased in my late expedition through the Indian country, on the Klamath, there is due to G. M. Marshall as per within order of said Estel, dated 15th instant, the sum of $6,598.49.

At this time I have not funds in my hands applicable to this claim, but have confidence that Congress during its present session will provide the means for its payment at an early day, and, in my opinion, it should be paid out of the first moneys appropriated for such purposes in California.

REDICK MCKEE.

REDICK MCKEE, United States Indian Agent.

STATE OF IOWA, Lee County:

For value received, I. G. M. Marshall, hereby sell, assign, and set over to S. T. Marshall the above certificate or paper signed by Redick McKee, Indian agent, and he is authorized to collect, settle, and receipt for whatever may be obtained on the same in as full faith and authority as I could do in my own proper person, having sold and transferred said paper or evidence of indebtedness to said S. T. Marshall in the A. D. 1856, and the original having been lost, or placed in the hands of persons for collection and cannot be found; the foregoing being a true copy of original.

G. M. MARSHALL.

Done and subscribed in my presence this 3d day of January, A. D. 1876.
[SEAL.]

R. M. MARSHALL,

Notary Public.

Mr. HOLMAN. Everything pertaining to this transaction has now been read except the three papers which I hold in my hand, which do not seem to be of any particular practical importance; and although this claim is said to have originated in 1851, the earliest paper tending to establish the claim bears date 1857. The reason, then, why the claim was not paid when originally presented was that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs understood the claim to have no legal foundation. When the facts were all fresh in the knowledge of the Departments of the Government, the claim was rejected because it was without authority of law. That was the decision a quarter of a century ago when, if agents of the Government exceeded their authority and attempted to bind the Government by unauthorized contracts, the heads of Departments and bureaus rejected the claims promptly. It was such a practice which produced that wide-spread and universal subordination to law which characterized the history of our versal subordination to law which characterized the history of our country through so many years. But after a looser mode of doing public business has sprung up, it is deemed sufficient to bring in a few affidavits of recent date and copies of a few papers in the Department, upon which we are asked to pass the measure through without any explanation. There is no explanation why this matter should have rested from 1851 to 1861. I again call attention to the fact that in 1853 this claim was rejected by the proper officers of the Government because it was not made in conformity with law; it was not made under law: it was not made by authority of law.

evidence which satisfied them that the Government did receive the supplies for which payment is asked in this bill. The committee also had evidence that the supplies were actually necessary for the proper management of Indian affairs at that place and at that time. If this evidence presented to us is true, then the simple question is whether the Government will do justice or injustice. The lapse of time cannot possibly be allowed to defeat the ends of justice.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to a point of order. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule 63, which provides that-

No member shall speak more than once on the same question without leave of the House.

The CHAIRMAN.

The Chair sustains the point of order. Very good, sir. I move to strike out the last Mr. HOLMAN. clause of the bill.

Mr. BOONE. I call for the reading of the bill. Mr. HOLMAN. After the bill has been read I wish to be heard on my motion.
The bill was again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. This paper, bearing date in 1876, and the alleged copy of McKee's certificate, are the only foundation of this claim, with the exception of the affidavit of the claimant himself.

Mr. BOONE. I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. A complete answer to his inquiry as to why this matter was not pressed before the war is found in the fact which he himself states, that there was no appropriation; and it is confessed that the contract entered into was without authority of law. Consequently there could have been no allowance by the Department; the claim there could have been no allowance by the Department; the claim could not have been audited.

But that is not the question which this bill presents. The question is whether or not, when this Indian agent was in a foreign country, when he and the men with him were starving

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend whether he is correct in his statement that the Department could not examine this claim and audit it and transmit it to Congress without an appropriation having been previously made?

Mr. BOONE. I suppose the Department would not have examined a claim that had not its foundation in some law. I suppose that as soon as it was found that there was no law authorizing the claim, the Department would refuse to andit or investigate it. Consequently these parties were driven to the necessity of appealing to Congress to do them that justice which the Department could not do.

As I before remarked, the claim was put in the hands of attorneys; it slept till the war; when the war came the papers were scattered; the attorneys, so far as I know, have never been heard of since. These the attorneys, so far as I know, have never been heattor since. These claimants, knowing that they could not go to the Department and have their claim allowed, because there was no law authorizing its payment, yet knowing that the officers of the Government had bought and consumed their beef-cattle, thought it but justice that Congress should pay them a fair consideration for the provisions which they had furnished those men in a foreign country. Can the Government in honor refuse to pay a claim of this kind when the evidence shows that these provisions were furnished? The evidence does show it beyour all controversy. I feel that it would be an act of absolute injustice, if not repudiation, to say that these men shall lose all pay for the cattle which they furnished.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend state what evidence proves this

Mr. BOONE. There is a report of the Indian agent, McKee, of record and published in the official documents of the Department. In addition we had the written statement of McKee himself, who is alive and here to-day ready to make the same statement to the House.

alive and here to-day ready to make the same statement to the House. We have his written affidavit that he did buy these beef-cattle from this man Estill who was in partnership with G. M. Marshall, and that it was transferred to S. T. Marshall.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is evidence this man McKee violated the law and purchased, if at all, in direct violation of the law these beef-cattle. There is his certificate, there is the affidavit of the claimant, and there is the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs rejecting the claim. That is all there is about the matter. To put upon record all that there is of this claim. I ask the letter I send up may be read all that there is of this claim, I ask the letter I send up may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

public business has sprung up, it is deemed sufficient to bring in a few affidavits of recent date and copies of a few papers in the Department, upon which we are asked to pass the measure through without any explanation. There is no explanation why this matter should have rested from 1851 to 1861. I again call attention to the fact that in 1853 this claim was rejected by the proper officers of the Government because it was not made in conformity with law; it was not made under law; it was not made by authority of law.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has any information to show that the Government did not actually receive the supplies for which payment is now asked, and that they were not necessary for the maintenance of the Indian Department in California at that time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I very promptly answer that I have no evidence that the Government did not receive this property. But I think the reverse of the question should be presented. Have I any evidence that the Government did receive the property? This question I must answer in the regative, although I have looked over these papers.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I will say that the committee had before them

York, under an assurance from the Department that at the next session of Congress $100,000 more would be estimated for, and, no doubt, sent me by mail at San Francisco. Relying on this, we commenced operations, and were happily successful in restoring peace in the central part of our field. During the session of 1850-51, however, Commissioner Lea wrote me that the House Committee on Appropriations had cut down his estimate for the service in California from one hundred to seventy-five thousand dollars, and I must be governed accordingly. I obeyed instructions, made no contracts or engagements which I thought would exceed that sum, and none not absolutely necessary for the peace of the country. You can judge of our disappointment, especially my own, on finding that after all Congress appropriated for the service in the whole State but $25,500, and of this the Department sent me but $27,500! Of course I was unable to pay Marshall and other contractors, and had to resort to the issuance of certificates of indebtedness. By request of the Department I reported in February, and again in July, 1852, our remaining indebtedness in California, in both of which reports this claim of Marshall's is included. (Vide Senate Ex. Doc. No. 4, special session, 1853, pages 285 and 343.)

Mr. Marshall being anxious to return home, I gave him a letter to the Commissioner to the effect that if the appropriation had not been remitted to me he might be paid here. And hearing nothing further from either the claimant or the Department I took it for granted his claim had been settled. On Inquiry at the Department I took it for granted his claim had been settled. On Inquiry at the Department I now find it has never been paid; and as I know it to be a just claim, I hope Congress will pay it without any longer delay. If Congress shall treat Mr. Marshall as Colonel J. C. Frémont was treated in the settlement of his catile accounts, (Statutes-at-Large, vol. 10, page 804.) the interest will give the poor man some amends for being kept out of his

Subscribed and sworn, on this the 26th of January, 1876, before me, JOHN BAILEY, Justice of the Peace within and for the District of Columbia.

Hon. G. W. McCrart,

House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, here are all the facts upon which this claim is predicated except the affidavits of the claimant now before the committee. His affidavit was made last year, twenty-five years after the claim accrued. The claim was rejected in 1853. It now rests upon the statement before the committee. If it is desirable at this time to reverse the policy of former times and allow a claim made in violation of law, so public officers can be held to no responsibility, then very well; but if it is deemed best to return to the policy of older times, when the officer was held to strict accountability in the performance of a public duty and no authority was accorded to go beyond the expenditure of public money for which appropriation had been made, which in my judgment is the wiser and better policy, then this claim should be rejected.

Mr. McCRARY. I will say but a single word before the debate closes.

The objection that this claim has been a long time unpaid I think has been sufficiently answered. It could not be paid without an ap-has been sufficiently answered. It could not be paid without an appropriation, and all efforts to secure appropriation failed prior to the war and since then the papers have been lost.

The papers which the gentleman from Indiana has had read at the Clerk's desk, so far from furnishing any ground for voting down this bill, completely sustain the committee in the report they have made. There may be, and doubtless is, a technical defense on the ground these beef-cattle were furnished without authority of law. Possibly that might be a good tachnical defense, but here were the ground the second of the country of the c There may be, and doubtless is, a technical defense on the ground these beef-cattle were furnished without authority of law. Possibly that might be a good technical defense; but here was the agent of the United States in charge of our Indian affairs in the far-distant Territory of California under the necessity, having in connection with this expedition a considerable military force, of obtaining supplies for their subsistence. He had been directed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to do so. He had been informed the appropriation would be $75,000, and he acted in view of that information. He made these contracts. He obtained from this gentleman these beef-cattle. They were used for the benefit of the United States. It happened afterward there was some gentleman in the House of Representatives that day not unlike the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] always proposing to cut down every appropriation without regard to the public interest, and instead of $75,000 being appropriated, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had instructed him would be done, there was but about $40,000 appropriated. Contracts had been made, supplies had been furnished and could not be paid for because the appropriation had been cut down. The report of the Indian agent, which is part of the records of Congress, made in the report of the Department and referred to in the letter which has been read, shows some ten or twelve claims precisely like this of Marshall's which had been contracted for and could not be paid because the appropriation was not as much as expected. Every one of those claims except this one of Marshall's, and perhaps one of ther, has been paid except this one of Marshall's, and perhaps one other, has been paid by the Government.

There is no doubt of the equity of this claim, and though it may make my friend from Indiana very happy if he could keep this poor man out of the sum due him, I hope the House will pass the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa when he talks about keeping a man out of his money, how it happened, when these facts were all fresh, this claim was rejected by the Indian Commissioner? How did it happen the strong justice of the claim did not appear then as it appears to the gentleman now?

Mr. McCRARY. The claim was never rejected by the Indian Commissioner except in this way: He said it could not be paid without an appropriation; and all efforts to obtain an appropriation have, up Mr. HOLMAN. And with the facts all fresh how did it happen that Mr. HOLMAN. And with the facts all fresh how did it happen that the appropriation was not made?

Mr. McCRARY. That has been fully explained. The papers were placed in the hands of gentlemen to look after the claim. Those gentlemen went subsequently into the army and have never since been found. The papers were lost.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there was an interval of ten years.

Mr. McCRARY. That was mostly consumed in the effort to get the money from the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the bill be passed over.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 28, noes 95.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted; but inasmuch as I will ask a vote on this bill in the House I will not make the point.

The CHAIRMAN. Further count not being called for, the motion is not agreed to.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CHINESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2697) supplementary to the act entitled "An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and China, concluded on the 8th day of November, 1858, at Shanghai," approved March 3, 1859, and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in certain cases.

The bill was read, as follows:

and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in certain cases.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any person or persons, or body corporate, holding and making any claim upon the balance of the fund usually designated and known as "the Chinese indemnity fund," under the control of the Department of State of the United States, and now unappropriated, for losses sustained by the plunder and destruction, in the year 1854, of the bark Caldera, and property on board of said vessel, may, at any time within twelve months after the passage of this act, commence proceedings in the United States, for the same manner as other suits are brought, pursuant to and in virtue of the statutes of the United States and the rules of said court; and that the said Court of Claims shall have full jurisdiction to hear and determine such claim or demand, according to the principles of justice and international law.

Sec. 2. That, at the hearing or on the trial of any suit so commenced, either party, plaintiff or defendant, shall have the right to use, as competent evidence before the court, any records, documents, or papers relating to the said claim which may have been deposited in the office of the Secretary of State under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1859, entitled "An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and China, concluded on the 8th day of November, 1859, at Shanghai," or certified copies of such records, documents, or other papers; that, at the hearing or on the trial of any suit so commenced as aforesaid, either party, plaintiff or defendant, shall have the right to produce before the court any additional testimony or documents which may be relevant to and competent upon the issues joined between the parties; and that the proceedings, trial, decision, and judgment of the said court shall be had in the same manner as in all other cases before the said court of Claims, and have the same effect; and that either party, plaintiff or defendant, may appeal from the deci

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask for the reading of the report. The report was read, as follows:

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask for the reading of the report. The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of the Sun Mutual Insurance Company, the Mercantile Mutual Insurance Company, the New York Mutual Insurance Company, and the China Mutual Insurance Company, for relief in the matter of the bark Caldera and her cargo, respectfully report that the said companies are entitled to the relief asked for, and the committee hereby recommend the passage of the bill annexed to this report, giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction in the case, the facts of which appear to be as follows:

The bark Caldera, under the command of Mathew Rooney, an American eitzen, being laden with a cargo belonging to American merchants, sailed from the port of Hong-Kong, on the 5th day of October, 1854, bound to the port of San Francisco; and having been obliged to seek shelter from a storm in the port of Keolan, on the Chinese coast, was, while at anchor there and the crew employed at the pumps to keep the vessel free of water, boarded by armed bands of Chinese, who drove the men from the pumps, took possession of the vessel, and, after plundering her of all the cargo except granite in the lower hold, burned her, and she became a total loss.

The petitioning insurance companies paid insurances to the amount of $72.512, being a total loss of the whole sum insured, besides a considerable sum in addition, expended in an unsuccessful effort to recover the property.

The petitioners took all the necessary steps to establish a valid claim on the Chinese government for the amount of the loss, and Mr. Marcy, then Secretary of State, in a dispatch to Dr. Parker, fully recognized the justice of the claim, and directed its prosecution before the Chinese government.

In 1858, Mr. Reed, the then American minister, made a convention with the Chinese government, securing indemnity for this as well as other claims, and about $700,000 were paid by the Chinese indemnity fund. These commissioners hel competent tribunal for a final decision as to the justice of their claim. In a similar case, that of the Neva, also entirely rejected by the commissioners, the claimants were allowed a rehearing before the Attorney-General; but your committee are of the opinion that the Court of Claims, from the nature of its constitution, is better adapted to the hearing and decision of such claims than a single executive officer charged with other duties.

Your committee also submit the fact that if this claim be allowed in full by the Court of Claims, no money will be taken from the Treasury.

Your committee, therefore, unanimously recommend the passage of the bill accompanying this report, entitled "A bill supplementary to the act entitled 'An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and China, concluded on the 5th day of November, 1858, at Shanghai, approved March 3, 1859, and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in certain cases."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If the House has given attention to the reading of the report, it will scarcely be necessary for me to add any words of explanation. This bill authorizes American insurance any words of explanation. This bill authorizes American insurance companies, underwriters, to go before the Court of Claims and make good if they can the claim against the Chinese indemnity fund which is held by the Department of State. Therefore, it is not a claim against the American Government, but rather against a foreign fund which justice will require us to return to China after we have discharged all the claims that may be justly due to American citizens from it. It seems to me perfectly unnecessary to make any further explanation unless some member of the House requires it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last proposition of the gentleman from New York should not at all affect the consideration of this claim, for the reason that we have never returned such a fund yet, and I do not be-

York should not at all affect the consideration of this claim, for the reason that we have never returned such a fund yet, and I do not believe it is likely we shall, though on that point we might differ. But whether we should or not, it is clear that this fund, whether it belongs to the United States or to China, should only be subject to legitimate charges. It is to be regarded as a fund simply for indemnity of persons who sustained an injury in those transactions out of which the indemnity grew. I would ask the gentleman from New York, who, I have no doubt, is well informed upon the subject, whether these insurance companies did not go before the arbitration which was raised for the disposition of the fund, and whether their claims were not rejected.

Mr. HEWITT of New York. I will explain that to the gentleman were not rejected.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will explain that to the gentleman from Indiana. The report states that they did go before the commission; that 40 per cent. of the claim was allowed, and that 60 per cent. was disallowed on the ground of prior damage to the cargo. But there was no evidence before the commission of any such prior damage. There was no appeal from the award of the commission, but age. There was no appeal from the award of the commission, but through a misapprehension the commissioners informed the claimants that there was an appeal. The underwriters having no one to represent them, the 40 per cent. was allowed and the 60 per cent. rejected without evidence; and there is evidence to show it was unjustly rejected. Now they do not ask Congress to appropriate 60 per cent., but they ask to be allowed to go before the Court of Claims and show that the 60 per cent. was improperly disallowed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ordinarily, Mr. Chairman, where a party has been permitted to go into court and has had his claim fully presented, his right fully adjudicated upon, ordinarily that is the end of it. There seems to be nothing in this transaction that justifies us in going beyond that well-settled rule. "You have had your day in court" is always said to a claimant under such circumstances, "and that ought to be the end of this controversy." But where there is a public fund to be the end of this controversy." But where there is a public fund to be reached the rejection of a claim seems to amount to nothing.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman from Indiana will allow me to explain. The claimants did not have their day in court. Mr. Reed, the American minister, recommended that that claim should be adjudicated here, but in the mean time Congress passed the act organizing a commission in China. The papers in the case, which were in the State Department, were sent to China, but the insurance companies did not appear before the commission and they were not heard before the commission. One of the commissioners themselves, in a letter which I hold in my hand, and which, if the gentleman from Indiana so desires, I will have read, says the claim was not adjudicated at all upon the merits of the case, but that there was a compromise between him and the other commissioner as to the liability of the Chinese government upon this claim. The commission had no right to pass upon liability. That had been settled between the United States Government and the Chinese government, and the commissioners assumed to do a thing they had no right to do.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman explain how it happened that this matter rested so long since that arbitration took place?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Perhaps I can answer the gentleman from Indiana. In answer to the gentleman as to why this matter has remained unsettled so long, I will say I am reminded of the fact that I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for a number of years. That committee reported unanimously in Mr. Reed, the American minister, recommended that that claim should had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for a number of years. That committee reported unanimously in favor of the payment of this claim for at least two successive Congresses and without one dissenting voice, and the only reason that the bill did not pass the House was that when it was reported from the committee some one gentleman, not conversant with the true facts of the case, objected to its consideration.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I would like to state that this is a similar case to that of the Neva, which was rejected in toto by this commission, and they then came to Congress and got their case referred to the Attorney-General, Evarts. Mr. Evarts reported that the claim was a just one and should be paid out of the fund, and in doing so reversed the action of the commission in that case. I think

I can enlighten the gentleman by reading a letter from Mr. Roberts, one of the commissioners

Mr. HOLMAN. Still I would be glad, before the letter is read, if the gentleman would explain why this matter has rested so long. Mr. HEWITT, of New York. My colleague [Mr. WOOD] has just stated that

Mr. HOLMAN. O, that is no answer at all.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg your pardon; I think it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I state that that is no answer at all. Sooner or later a claim of this kind would have been called to the attention of the Government. These great corporations are never slow in pressing their claims against the Government or against any foreign government through this Government. How does it happen that during ing their claims against the Government or against any foreign government through this Government. How does it happen that during such a long series of years this claim has never been able to arrest the attention of Congress and receive its approval?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman that at every Congress since this money was paid into the Treasury these insurance companies have presented their claim and that every Committee on Foreign Affairs has reported favorably upon it; and as I am told, for I have no personal knowledge of the matter, it failed to pass at one time because it was supposed that it might establish a principal at that would affect the Alabama claims.

failed to pass at one time because it was supposed that it might establish a principle that would affect the Alabama claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why does it not?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Because the Alabama claims have been disposed of by the award of the commission, and Congress has passed all necessary laws in relation to them.

Mr. HOLMAN. How does it not involve the principle that was involved in the other claims upon the Alabama claims fund?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly I think it does not involve any such principle.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly I think it does not involve any such principle.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It merely involves this principle: Shall a claimant whose claim has been presented to a foreign government from whom money has been received to pay such claims and who has received only 40 per cent. of his claim under an error in fact and law have a right to go before the Court of Claims for that court to decide whether he has been wrongfully dealt with? That is all that is involved in it: and it seems to me that every American cities. that is involved in it; and it seems to me that every American citizen ought to have his claim passed on by a proper tribunal, and especially where it takes no money from the Treasury but is to be paid from a fund paid to us by a foreign government for the purpose of paying claims like these.

The question was taken upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, and on a division there were—ayes 94, noes 18.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted, but I will not make that

So the motion was agreed to.

CHARLES MASON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2830) for the relief of Charles Mason.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $105 to Charles Mason, formerly deputy collector of internal revenue for the third division of the second district of Indiana, to re-imburse him for revenue-stamps stolen in the year 1872.

Mr. COCHRANE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles Mason, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The Committee or Chains, to whom was reterred the petition or Charles alson, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

That said claimant was deputy collector of internal revenue for the third division of the second district of the State of Indiana in the year 1872; and that, while in the performance of his duties he had abstracted from a small carpet-bag two hundred and ten eigar-stamps of the denomination of one hundred to the box, and of the value of $105. That he kept said stamps in his office in an iron safe, inclosed in a small carpet-bag, which he placed on his table when transacting business, and it was from this bag, he thinks, the papers were stolen while his back was turned in serving his customers.

That he missed the stamps and discovered the loss within two or three days, and immediately notified the collector of his district and also made diligent search for said stamps, and, also, all reasonable efforts to detect the thief and recover the stamps. That he subsequently placed upon all stamps of the denomination and description above mentioned private marks before selling the same, and kept up his efforts for more than one year to recover the stamps. That said claimant stated before the subcommittee that he had a person suspicioned of the theft arrested soon after the loss of the stamps, and that, from this fact and other circumstances connected with his efforts to recover the stolen property, he is of the opinion that the thief destroyed the stamps to prevent the discovery of his theft. Judge Mason has supported his character and standing by letters from Hon. William E. Niblack, exmember of Congress, and also a statement from Hon. Bekont S. Fuller, the member of this House from the district in which the claimant resides. These gentlemen give him the best of character for truth and veracity. He is also sustained in his statements by the letter of the collector of his district, certifying to his efforts for the recovery of the stolen property. Mr. Mason su

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 1,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for 1876, for the use of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

Mr. BALLOU moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening, for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me until I can submit a privileged report.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES

Mr. KNOTT. By direction of the select committee on the powers, privileges, and duties of the House in connection with counting the electoral vote, I report to the House the testimony taken by that committee, and move that it be printed for the use of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

TIMBER LAND IN ALASKA.

Mr. WALLING. I desire to submit from the Committee on Publica Mr. WALLING. I desire to submit from the Committee on Public Lands a report to accompany House bill No. 4560, authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Territory of Alaska upon paying the Government price therefor, and for other purposes. I desire to say that the committee do not expect action upon the bill at this session, but they desire to have the report printed in order that the facts it contains may be before the next Congress.

Mr. HURLBUT. I have no objection to its being printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. WALLING. That is all that I ask.

The report was accordingly ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

The report was accordingly ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, and, under the law, referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That 10,500' copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1876 be printed., 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,500 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages shall not exceed 500, and that there be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: Mr. ODELL, until Wednesday next; and To Mr. MacDougall, for five days.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, required to transmit to this House a statement of the amount of the fund which had been set apart in the Treasury of the United States by virtue of the fourth and fifth sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Interior Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1849, and for other purposes," approved July 24, 1848, and which was transferred by the act of March 3, 1875, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to be applied under his direction to the payment of the costs, charges, expenses, and liabilities attending the litigations by which the eastern band of the Cherokee Indians recovered a tract of land in North Carolina, and that he state each and every payment made from said fund from the date of such transfer (March 3, 1875) to the present time, giving the date and amount of each payment, to whom paid, and for what purpose, and on account of what service rendered. Also to report the amount of such fund now subject to requisition of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HURLBUT. Does this resolution come from any committee for the secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HURLBUT. Does this resolution come from any committee ? Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. It does not. Mr. HURLBUT. Then I object.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SINGLETON, from the Committee on Printing, reported adversely upon the (bill H. R. No. 4482) making an appropriation for the preparation of a report on immigration and public lands; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed. Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of Henry Holt, in reference to his publication of an abridgment of the Congressional Record; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BOARD OF HEALTH, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back to the House the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and to move that the request of the Senate for its return to that

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 1,000 extra copies of the report of the board of health of the District of Columbia for the year 1876 be printed for use and distribution by said committee.

The motion of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, was agreed to.

POSTAGE-STAMPS FOR THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations Senate bill No. 1265, making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase of official postage-stamps for the Treasury Department for the concurrent fiscal year.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening, for the further consideration of busi-

Dewey, of Groton, Connecticut, for compensation for the use and destruction of their property by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 17, 1877-10 a. m.

The Senate resumed its session.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce that he has received from the president of the commission a communication, being a decision in the Louisiana case. Shall it be submitted to the Senate? The Chair hears no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1877.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February II, 1871.

SIR: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the Senate that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral votes from the State of Louisiana, and herewith, by direction of said commission, I transmit to you the said decision, in writing, signed by the members agreeing therein, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses according to said act. All the certificates and papers sent to the commission by the President of the Senate are herewith returned.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,

President of the Commission.

Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY,

President of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the pleasure of the Senate? Mr. HAMLIN. The commission on electoral votes having notified the Senate that they have arrived at a conclusion and decision on the electoral vote of Louisiana submitted to them, and having communicated that decision to this body, I move that a message be sent to the House of Representatives informing that House that the Senate is now ready to meet with the House and to proceed in the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

Mr. WITHERS. Before the question is put I would inquire of the President of the Senate whether it is competent for the Senate as a body to meet the House without the presence of a quorum of this body The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is to be a notification to the House, not a proposition to go to the Hall of the House at this time. Mr. WITHERS. The motion embraced also the statement that the Senate is now ready to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAMLIN. I submitted the motion upon the usual parliamentary assumption that a quorum is present. We who are here and run our eyes over the body of course know that the fact is not so. It is a simple notice to the House. If an objection be made to acting upon it, of course we cannot act. I did not suppose that we would repair to the House with any less number than a quorum, and I supposed a quorum of the body would be here by the time that communication was made to the House, and we should have received a communication in turn from the House that they were ready to receive us. When we receive that communication, of course it will require a majority of this body to comply with it.

sions, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: The petition of letter-carriers, the postmaster, and the officers and directors of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, for an increase of the pay of letter-carriers, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HATCHER: Concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri, protesting against the removal of the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of Justin Shapley, William P. Raley, and 50 other citizens of Eagle Harbor, Michigan, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. JACOBS: The petition of citizens of Washington Territory, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. MACKEY: The petition of Selmar Seibert, for an appropriwithout a quorum. If the Senator does not object the Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will give the notice

Mr. WITHERS. I presume, in consonance with the ruling of the Chair on a previous occasion, no legislative or other business will now be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No legislative business is in order.

Mr. KELLY. Is it in order to make a personal explanation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would not be in the nature of legislation. Is there objection to the Senator from Oregon proceeding?

Mr. KELLY. I wish to make a personal explanation, but I desire to make it in a fuller Senate than we have now.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M.
Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:
A bill (H. R. No. 4676) to remove the political disabilities of Henry B. Tyler, of Virginia;

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for 1876.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION-OREGON ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. KELLY, (at eleven o'clock and fifty minutes a. m.) Mr. President, I desire to make a personal explanation upon a question that has attracted some notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon states that he desires to make a personal explanation. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLY. I ask the Clerk to read a paragraph from the Evening Star of yesterday, which is marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SENATOR KELLY AND THE WANTING ELECTORAL VOTE IN OREGON.

The disclosure before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the interpretation of the cipher dispatches which passed between Tilden's friends in New York and Senator Kelly, of Oregon, in reference to the purchase of an electoral vote, has been a topic of much comment among Senators. The views expressed indicate that some formal notice of the action of Senator Kelly will be taken by the Senato. It is intimated that a resolution of expulsion will be submitted, but whether with the sanction of the committee or upon individual authority has not been determined. The feeling is such that a proposition of that kind would in all probability be acted upon promptly and decisively. The part played by Senator Kelly in the programme of the democratic managers in securing the lacking electoral vote will form a conspicuous feature of the report upon the Oregon electoral question.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, it was my desire a day or two ago as soon as the alleged translation of these telegrams was made public to make an explanation. I was dissuaded from doing so by a number of my friends who thought it would be better to wait until the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections should be made. I deferred to their judgment, and even this morning a number of my warm represent the Lebesgue thought it rather premature that Lebesgue the land and the land of the land personal friends have thought it rather premature that I should make the explanation now; but in this matter I intend to rely upon my own judgment rather than the advice of friends, however well intended that advice may be. It may be necessary for me to state the circumstances at some length so that the Senate will understand fully the part that I have had in this matter.

I had been down to San Francisco sometime previously to the 28th of November, but for certain reasons thought it prudent or best to return to Oregon before coming East. I reached Salem on Monday the 27th day of November. I staid there a day and then in the afternoon took the cars for Portland. While at the depot at Salem a gentleman learning my name introduced himself as Mr. Patrick, stating that he was authorized by a member of the national democratic committee to come to Oregon and look after such matters as were necessary to ascertain whether Mr. Watts was duly elected an elector. We had some little conversation on the way down from Salem to Portland; and reaching there in the afternoon and both went to the same hotel. Soon after arriving in Portland I went out into town to Portland; and reaching there in the afternoon and both went to the same hotel. Soon after arriving in Portland I went out into town to see Mr. Bellinger, the chairman of the democratic State committee, and had considerable talk with him about the matter of this election. He stated to me that he had partially employed a republican firm of lawyers to defend any proceedings that might be commenced against the democratic elector or against the governor and secretary of state in order to insure the count of the vote for Mr. Watts. He said the bargain had not been fully made, that they had asked $5,000, but finally had agreed to take $3,000 and attend to all the business; that is, to prosecute or defend in any writ of mandamus or other proceed. finally had agreed to take $3,000 and attend to all the business; that is, to prosecute or defend in any writ of mandamus or other proceeding that might be brought in the circuit or supreme courts of the State in regard to the election of Watts. He said that he had written to several gentlemen to make up this fee, if possible, in different counties and found it slow work. We talked over matters of this kind for a few minutes. I mentioned to him that a gentleman by the name of Mr. Patrick had been sent out or stated to me that he had been sent by Dr. Miller, of Omaha; that Dr. Miller was a member of the national democratic committee; and that that committee, from headquarters in New York, but telegraphed to Dr. Miller to go from headquarters in New York, had telegraphed to Dr. Miller to go to Oregon, but, not having time or finding it inconvenient, he had suggested to this gentleman to go. I stated this to Mr. Bellinger and we went down to make a call on Mr. Patrick. We went into his room and talked over these matters and about the employment of this and talked over these matters and about the employment of this firm. I stated again that I thought the fee was altogether too high, that we had quite a number of democratic lawyers who would attend to it for nothing; but for particular reasons it was thought advisable by Mr. Bellinger still to have this firm employed, to which myself and Mr. Patrick consented, or rather advised. We talked over the matter as to what would be the result of the matter. Mr. Bellinger said that it was generally believed the governor would issue a certificate to Mr. Cronin, although the governor was very reticent and no information could be had from him, but somehow that seemed to be the general belief. He said the republicans were of the same opinion and that they said if the certificate was issued to Mr. Cronin the other two republican electors would not recognize the governor's act, and we talked over the matter as to what could be done in that event. In talking about the fee that was to be paid and the expenses to

In talking about the fee that was to be paid and the expenses to be incurred, either Mr. Bellinger or myself said we could ill bear the expense; that it would be difficult to collect the funds necessary for expense; that it would be difficult to collect the funds necessary for that purpose; and that indeed was one of the principal reasons why I was opposed to the employment of the firm. Finally it was either stated by Mr. Bellinger or myself that the national democratic committee ought to bear these expenses, to which Mr. Patrick readily consented, saying, "I came out here fully authorized to transact all such business, and I have full authority to make that arrangement;" and so it was arranged. Hereupon we separated. That was perhaps five o'clock in the afternoon. Quite late in the evening, perhaps three or four hours after that, Mr. Patrick came to my room. He had in his hand a cipher dispatch. I did not look at it, but I was satisin his hand a cipher dispatch. I did not look at it, but I was satisfied it was a cipher dispatch, written, I think, on two sheets of telegraph paper, or, perhaps, three. As near as I can recollect his language, he said: "I have prepared a telegram which I am about to send to Colonel Pelton, the secretary of the national committee, asking him, or the committee, to deposit with my banker or bankers in New York the sum of $10,000, to be used for the payment of the necessary expenses incurred in these legal proceedings and to pay lawyers' fees." That was the substance of the dispatch, as I undertend his lawgrage. He furthersaid "If the money is not used or if lawyers' tees." That was the substance of the dispatch, as I understood his language. He further said, "If the money is not used, or if any portion of it is not used, it will be returned in a few days, as soon as this matter is settled." He then said to me, "I wish you would indorse it, because you are known as a public man, the committee are acquainted with you, and we will more readily get the money." On that suggestion I said to him that I would. Now, here perhaps

On that suggestion I said to him that I would. Now, here perhaps was my fault.

I took his word for what it contained. It was impossible for me to read it. It was impossible to decipher it except by taking a great length of time. At all events I indorsed it in these words: "I fully indorse the above." I think that was written upon it. I believed from that day until the translation appeared in the public prints that it contained what was represented. I do not know now whether the translation is a correct one or not; it may be or it may be not; I never verified it; I supposed it was simply requesting a deposit of $10,000, to be used, and that we could use what we wanted, what was necessary, and return the balance.

The next day came back a telegram without signature; I do not know what it is, but I take it for granted that the translation may be correct. Perhaps I had better read the translation of the first one, the one that I indorsed without a full knowledge of its contents. It is in these words:

**PORTLAND, November 28, 1876.**

-That is the day it was sent I know.

PORTLAND, November 28, 1876.

To W. T. PELTON, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

To W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramerey Park, New York:

Certificate will be issued to one democrat. Must purchase republican elector to recognize and act with the democrat and secure vote, and prevent trouble. Deposit the $10,000 to my credit with Kountze Brothers, 12 Wall street. Answer.

J. N. H. PATRICK.

That was the one I indorsed; not the translation but the cipher dispatch. The next day, November 29, came back the answer; I did not see it, but was told that it was a refusal to give anything. I see by the translation it is this:

NEW YORK, November 29, 1876.

To J. N. H. PATRICK, Portland, Oregon:

No. How soon will governor decide certificate? If you make obligation contigent on the result in March, it can be done, and slightly if necessary.

[No signature.]

Then Mr. Patrick, I presume, sent another; and here is at length what purports to be a translation, whether correct or not I cannot

W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

PORTLAND, OREGON, November 30.

W. T. Pelton, 15 Gramerey Park, New York:
Governor all right without reward; will issue certificate Tuesday. This is a secret. Republicans threaten if certificate issues to ignore Patrick's claim and fill vacancy, thus defeating action of governor. One elector must be paid to recognize democrat to secure majority. Have employed three lawyers, editor only republican paper as one. Lawyer fee, $3,000. Will take five thousand for republican elector. Must raise money; can't make fees contingent. Will sail Saturday. Kelly and Bellinger will act. Communicate with them. Must act prompt.

[No signature.]

This is dated the 30th. He had come there on the 28th, and was going away, on Saturday the 2d of December, from Portland to San Francisco.

rancisco.

Kelly and Bellinger will act. Communicate with them. Must act prompt.

[No signature.]

This I knew nothing of, except a statement to the effect that he had telegraphed for $8,000. In answer to that this came. There is a dispatch wanting somewhere, according to my recollection; or at least if there is none wanting he certainly stated that in answer to this he could get $3,000. I will say here that a number of telegrams passed back and forth in relation to this matter, showing that the money could not be used at all. It was deposited with Kountze Brothers, but they had no agents in Oregon, no person there to act for them, and consequently it amounted to nothing.

It is further alleged that Mr. Patrick received a telegram from New York, as follows:

York, as follows:

NEW YORK, December 1, 1876.

PORTLAND, December 1, 1876.

Can't you send special messenger and convene Legislature by Tuesday and elect the elector Necessary expense would be paid. See proceeding other States telegraphed you. Consult governor and Senator. Answer.

To which a dispatch purports to have been sent in these words:

To W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Park, N. Y.:

To W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Fark, N. J.:

Not time to convene Legislature; can manage with $4,000 at present. Must have it Monday, certain. Have Charles Dimon, 115 Liberty street, telegraph it to Busch, banker, Salem. This will secure democratic vote. All are at work here; can't fail. Can do no more. Sail morning. Answer Kelly in cipher.

[No signature.]

To that came back this:

NEW YORK, December 2, 1876.

To Hon. JAS. K. KELLY:

Telegraphed P. last night and to-day. Have no reply; has he left † Answer. [No signature.]

This dispatch I answered, and it is the first one I did answer. The key was left with me, or rather with Mr. Bellinger and myself, in Portland, by Mr. Patrick when he went away, and this is the first telegram that I sent; although I have a faint recollection that there may be one in my handwriting of no particular account, which happened in this way: Mr. Patrick came to my room one night and said, "I want to have either you or Mr. Bellinger transcribe this in a good hand; I am tired of writing, and I will read it off," as it had been penciled and interlined—"I will read it off and you can write it down." I do not know whether Mr. Bellinger or I wrote it. So there may be one in my handwriting, although I do not know that there is, and even if there is I do not know its contents. The first I sent was this: was this:

PORTLAND, December 2, 1876.

W. T. PELTON, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

Impossible to convene Legislature-

I had received one asking the same question-

Impossible to convene Legislature. P. left before telegraph arrived. Can't draw the eight. Deposit Charles Dimon, 115 Liberty street, to order Burch & Ladd, Salem. Must have it Monday. * * *

That was myself for Patrick. I found we could not get the money at all. We had pledged this firm of republican lawyers that we would pay the fee at the time we had engaged them; it had passed several days and they were anxious for the money; and by the way on Monday it was ascertained that there would be no legal proceedings before the courts, as we had expected when they were employed. One or two of our friends rather desired to repudiate the fee or a portion of it, because there were not to be such proceedings; but I made this statement to them, "No; I was opposed to their employment in the first instance, but you insisted on it, and the agreement was made; and now I insist that it shall be fulfilled to the letter although they have not rendered the service expected;" and it was to get the means to pay this fee that we desired to have the money placed with Charles

Dimon; but finding that impossible I telegraphed them this, at least-this is the translation and it seems to me it is correct as nearly as P remember it:

PORTLAND, December 3, 1876-6.30 p. m .--

This was Sunday, the day after Patrick sailed-

PORTLAND, December 3, 1876-6.30 p. m.

W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

P. will be at Grand Hotel, San Francisco, Monday. Be at Salt Lake City three days thereabout. Have to furnish money on my individual responsibility in trust you can replace.

I had then resolved to place no reliance upon getting the money elsewhere than at the bank by giving my individual note indorsed by a number of gentlemen, which I did on the next day. To that I received an answer, alleged to be as follows:

Hon. JAMES K. KELLY:

NEW YORK, December 3, 1876.

Telegraph Emestic. Go ahead. You shall be re-imbursed. Do not fail—all im-

Now this is the sum and substance of all that I had to do with it. I desired exceedingly to have a portion of that money to fulfill the agreement that we had made. I drew a check myself, that is, having deposited my own note I drew a check for $3,000 gold coin and delivered it to the firm of lawyers whom we had employed. I drew another check for $200 to pay the expenses of sending a messenger for Mr. Lasswell, who lived about three hundred and fifty miles distant, and who was one of our candidates for elector. We did not know but that he would be the candidates for elector. know but that he would be the candidate on the democratic ticket having the highest vote, instead of Mr. Cronin, because the returns had not been opened. We desired to have him at Salem. So we sent an express messenger and brought him down at an expense of sent an express messenger and brought him down at an expense of $200. This was all the money that was paid before I left Oregon for the East, and amounted to $3,200 in gold.

Now I call the attention of the Senate to this fact: when Mr. Patrick was about leaving he said that $4,000 was all that would be wanted, and it was all, because $4,000 in currency at that time was equivalent to between $3,500 and $3,600 in gold. We had to pay everything in coin. So we considered that that would be enough for our wants and sufficient to discharge our obligations.

If I had had any desire to have anyone of the republican electors. It

If I had had any desire to buy anyone of the republican electors, I

If I had had any desire to buy anyone of the republican electors, recrtainly could have raised the money to do so on my individual note indorsed as it was. But I will say this, and the republican electors will bear witness to my statement when I say that I never spoke to them; that I never authorized any person to speak in my behalf to them or either of them about receiving money to influence their conduct; and further, I am satisfied that they would say that no man in Oregon ever proffered to give them $1 or $5,000 or any other sum in order to get them to recognize Mr. Cronin as one of the electors.

It may be asked how came Mr. Patrick to make these statements, that the governor would so and so decide? I have my own belief about the matter, and I may be doing him wrong, but I think he came there with the idea that he was to so manage affairs that he was to be virtually the elector of a President; that is, he was to so arrange matters there that Oregon would cast the vote that would determine the result of the election. It is my belief that he came there considering that it was an important mission upon which he was sent, and not only that, but he desired it to be believed in New York that he had achieved many things which really he did not do.

had achieved many things which really he did not do.

I call attention to one thing to show that he was sending dispatches that were not authorized and could not be true, or else there is a mistranslation. I call attention especially to what purports to be a telegram from "governor" to Governor Tilden, reading thus:

December 1, 1876.

I shall decide every point in the case of post-office elector in favor of the highest democratic elector, and grant certificate accordingly on morning of 6th instant. (Signed)

Before the Committee on Privileges and Elections two or three experts were called who testified that this dispatch was in the same handwriting as that one of Mr. Patrick which I indorsed; that if one was Patrick's the other was his also. And yet it is charged that it was the governor of Oregon who sent this dispatch. But the governor of Oregon to my certain knowledge was not in Portland during the time I was there or while Mr. Patrick was. I am as well satisfied of that as that I am standing on the floor of the Senate now; yet it purports to come from the governor and through the cipher dispatch of Mr. Patrick. My own inference is that he desired Governor Tilden to believe that he was instrumental in having this thing settled favorably to him; that he wanted to proclaim his own great services, so that he might look to future reward in case Governor Tilden should be inaugurated President of the United States. This is of course a conjecture. rated President of the United States. This is of course a conjecture. I am certain, however, that the governor of Oregon never sent that dispatch, because, as I said, he was not there, and last evening I received a telegram from him which I will request the Clerk to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SALEM, OREGON, February 16, 1877.

Hon. J. K. KELLY, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Deny that I sent any telegram to Tilden. I never sent a cipher in my life.

L. F. GROVER.

Mr. KELLY. I have no doubt of the perfect truth of what the governor says, because he could not have had the cipher, or at least it would seem an impossibility that he and Mr. Patrick should have the same cipher. It is in my judgment also true that Mr. Patrick sent it without authority from the governor of Oregon, and I can conjecture no other purpose than that he expected to receive some reward in the future for what appeared to be great services rendered to the democratic party. This, as I said, is only an opinion and may be unfounded. be unfounded.

Now, Mr. President, all I have to say in conclusion is this: that no particle of evidence will show or can show that I encouraged in the least any one to pay money to either of the republican electors; that I ever spoke of it or ever thought of it. I never asked any person to contribute a cent for that purpose, and would not have given anything myself. But it is possible, barely possible, that some one may have had this in view and suggested it to Mr. Patrick.

I make this explanation for the reason that it was due to the Senter as well as to reveal that any folse impression should be corrected.

I make this explanation for the reason that it was due to the Senate, as well as to myself, that any false impression should be corrected. I have been here six years, and I shall soon leave the Senate, and I desire to have the character that I had before. I do not think it is undue vanity in me when I say that I am confident this explanation will be satisfactory to the people of Oregon. I have lived with them for over a quarter of a century and through all the vicissitudes of life I am quite sure that I have won their confidence for at least integrity and truth, and not with the democratic party alone, but the republican party as well. I have no fear of the result where I am known, not the slightest. A reputation for truth, of course, is desirable, and a good name is better than great riches. It is for this reason that I desire to maintain the reputation I have acquired where I have been longest known. Not only that, but it is due that I should make this statement here in the presence of the Senate. Senators here have known me for nearly six years, and it would be inexpressibly painful to me now if I should go out of this body with a cloud resting upon my reputation. I do not wish to be covered by obloquy and reproach when I know it is undeserved.

And above all, I do not wish the fair fame of the State which sent me here, to be tarnished in the least by any act that I have done. So far at least as one of her Senators is concerned, it is my desire that I may leave here with an untarnished and a stainless name.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President I do not think the Senator from far at least as one of her Senators is concerned, it is my desire that I may leave here with an untarnished and a stainless name.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Oregon could address an audience more willing and anxious to believe in the entire sincerity of his defense. We have known the Senator for a great many years, nearly a full senatorial term; and until this thing occurred I know we were all accustomed to regard him as strictly honorable in the discharge of his duties as a Senator. It will be exceedingly fortunate for the Senator if the country is disposed to take as favorable a view of the defense which he makes as posed to take as favorable a view of the defense which he makes as we out of our friendship are willing to do. Our association with each other from year to year leads us to understand and appreciate each other; and often there are statements which go to the public at large concerning transactions on this floor, or with reference to Senators, that we knowing all the facts and the individuals know to be totally unfounded; and therefore they have very little effect upon our minds as casting reproach upon the person who may be assailed. It is very rarely, however, that a circumstance so grave as this which has just been called to the attention of the Senate is a matter of consideration here. Anything that affects the honor of a member of this body to a certain extent lowers the tone of the whole body; and therefore we deeply regret it. I do not wish to remark, and I will not remark upon the defense which has been made by the Senator from Oregon so far as relates to himself. I only wish to say that I think he does right to do all that is in his power to free his name from the stigma that must attach to every person who had part in the nefarious transac-tions in the State of Oregon. We find that the confidential agent of the highest authority in the democratic party is sent to the Pacific coast with undefined powers, and communicates with his associates at coast with undefined powers, and communicates with his associates at home, going into the very family of the democratic candidate for the Presidency, and proposes that money shall be furnished to them to buy a republican elector.

Why, sir, if there could be any act more dishonorable than another committed by any man whatever anywhere upon all God's broad footstool, it would be for an elector, a man selected in a college of electors to cast his vote for the succession to the Presidency, taking the brief moment of power thus given to him by a confiding people to betray that people and the principles which he was supposed eminently to represent, and for sordid gain to cast his vote for the other side. We have lived through a centennial and that has not occurred. We have not lived through a centennial however, without seeing it. We have not lived through a centennial, however, without seeing it attempted, ay, and sanctioned by the chief authority of a great political party, for we are told in the reply that if this can be done contingently upon its success, if the money will not be called for until the 4th of March shall show that the treason has succeeded, then it will be sanctioned and the sinews of war will be furnished at that time.

I say the Senator from Oregon does right, if he can, to clear his name from any participation in a transaction like this. He owes it to the honor of this body of which he is a part. He owes it to the dignity of human nature as well as to himself.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, is it settled that we are not at liberty to offer petitions?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No legislative business is now in

Mr. SHERMAN. I have quite a number of petitions in my charge. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot receive them.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that the House of Rep resentatives will be prepared at eleven o'clock a.m. on Monday to receive the Senate in the Hall, for the purpose of proceeding under the provisions of the act to provide for and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice-President.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. MAXEY presented the credentials of Richard Coke, elected by the Legislature of the State of Texas a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1877; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. NORWOOD presented the credentials of BENJAMIN H. HILL, elected by the Legislature of the State of Georgia a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1877; which were read and ordered to be filed.

ELECTORAL VOTES-FLORIDA.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, while I concur in part in what was said by the Senator from California [Mr. Sargent] in condemning any attempts at fraud which may have been made in reference to the presidential election in Oregon, yet I am not willing to remain silent in my place and permit him to place the democratic party before the country as the only one guilty during the recent election of what the whole world will condemn. I wish it distinctly understood further that I am opposed to fraud in every form, in every shape, and for all purposes, be it political or private.

But, sir, the country knows and there is abundant evidence before the world to establish the fact that efforts at fraud were not confined to the State of Oregon or to the democratic party. We all know what efforts were made immediately after the election to make it appear that the election in Florida had been in favor of the republican party. There may be no legal evidence to insure conviction before a party. There may be no legal evidence to insure conviction before a court of this fact; but if there be a moral sentiment left in this nacourt of this fact; but if there be a moral sentiment left in this nation, that sentiment will for all time to come be convinced that great frauds were perpetrated in the State of Florida by the republican party, to rob it of its vote; frauds having their inspiration from the very highest quarters in the city of Washington. We all know that frauds were perpetrated in the State of Louisiana, and we know that the fraud perpetrated in both these States have resulted, unfortunately for the country and for the good name of the nation and for republican institutions for all time to come, in a great success for the party who repretrated them the party who perpetrated them.

Therefore, I am not willing as an humble member of the democratic party that it should go forth to the country and be written in history that it should go forth to the country and be written in history that this party in the State of Oregon alone was guilty of fraud. I censure it, I condemn it unqualifiedly. My course through life will show that I condemn fraud and dishonesty in every shape and form. But there is more than one kind of fraud. There may be frauds so garnished over with the coating of apparant formality and legality as to pass current. But, sir, they are like the painted sepulchers spoken of in the Bible, fair without, but within as corrupt as hell and filled with dead men's bones.

Sir, I wish what I here say to go to the country as my understand.

Sir, I wish what I here say to go to the country as my understanding of the frauds that were committed during this presidential election. The result which has been secured by fraud will forever remain a blot that time itself will never efface on the history of the main a blot that time itself will never efface on the history of the late canvass and its result.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, before the recent tribunal the republican party took the position that, the proper authorities of the States having determined what was the true vote and sent up through the legal, constitutional, authorized channels that result, there was no power on the part of Congress to go behind that State action, to go to the bottom of the poll. Taking that position, it was inconsistent with their argument to discuss the character of the testimony which would be revealed in case the tribunal became a general returning board and endeavored to probe the polls to the bottom. This disadvantage of position, so far as the latter consideration was concerned, was readily taken advantage of by their opponents to shout "fraud," "fraud," "fraud," and that cry was kept up during the whole discussion of the matter by the democratic attorneys and has been repeated elsewhere throughout their papers. My friend from Missouri comes in now this morning and again takes up that old burden. I wish to say to him, however, that after a month's sojourn Missouri comes in now this morning and again takes up that old burden. I wish to say to him, however, that after a month's sojourn in Florida—examining hundreds of witnesses in the presence of an able and scrutinizing minority of that committee, every facility being given to him to prove the democratic side or disprove the republican side, every courtesy extended to him, as he has taken pains on a number of occasions to remark to me as the chairman of the subcommittee—it is my deliberate conviction from the evidence—and I would be almost willing to submit the evidence to a Senator as prejudiced as my friend from Missouri and rely upon his judgment—that there was not proved in Florida, that there could not be proved in Florida, the existence of fraud on the part of the republican party, stimulated from Washington or originating there, and on the other hand there were gross frauds committed by the democratic party in a number of the counties of that State. Before that tribunal the democratic party never proposed to go back of the county returns. They proposed to take certain papers, fair on their face, in that they were made without erasures, showing certain results, the work of officers of the democratic party, which covered up the frauds that were beneath them. They never proposed to penetrate beyond that fictitious surface and to go down to the bottom of the polls. They never proposed really to pressigned Alachya County or Lackson County were beneath them. They never proposed to penetrate beyond that fictitious surface and to go down to the bottom of the polls. They never proposed really to investigate Alachua County, or Jackson County, or Hamilton County, or any of the other counties where there were frauds piled up by the hundreds of votes by the democratic party, by stuffing the ballot-box, by substituting votes that were not cast for those that were cast, by driving republicans away from the polls or refusing their votes on the most frivolous and illegal pretexts, by taking men and hanging them by the neck until they swore that they would leave the republican party and join the democratic party, and drove them up to the polls to carry it out.

These things they did not propose to go into. I propose to go into a single class of frauds, like ballot-box-stuffing, which would have shown that the vote which purported to be cast for Tilden was corrupt; that a considerable percentage of it should have been counted to the republican party properly. Take the precinct of Campbellton, in the county of Jackson. It was agreed on the morning of election between the republican and the democratic parties—I am speaking of evidence of which there was no dispute, no controversy, no one challenges it—that the voters should vote alternately, hour by hour, one hour being given to the democrats, and so on.

Mr. COOPER. Will my friend read that evidence?

Mr. COOPER. Will my friend read that evidence?

Mr. SARGENT. I have it not with me on my desk.

Mr. COOPER. You will find the division was between colors, and Mr. COOPER. You will find the division was between colors, and not politics.

Mr. SARGENT. The division, as stated by the evidence, was that the democrats and republicans should vote alternately.

Mr. COOPER. No; the colored men voted one hour and the whites one hour; a very different proposition.

Mr. SARGENT. I state it as I recollect. If the Senator has the testimony he can read it. But it would make no difference even in that view, I contend, no perceptible difference at all, because the colored men voted there under peculiar caution taken by themselves to see that they got the republican ticket. Among the other means of stealing republican votes devised in that county was a spurious ticket headed, "Republican ticket," with a flag upon it, as the republican ticket had, there being none upon the democratic ticket, with the names of the democratic candidates upon it, and they tried their best to get that into the hands of the colored voters. The colored voters, learning that such was the fact, went to their head-men and had their tickets compared and would not receive any tickets except the one which contained the republican names, and marched to the boxes, putting that ticket in. When the ballots were being counted out, there was found only one of the spurious tickets with a flag in the box, therefore showing that the fraud in that respect did not succeed. The colored men voted the republican ticket right straight through, as was proved by abundant testimony. straight through, as was proved by abundant testimony.

I say they made this arrangement in reference to alternate voting.

I say they made this arrangement in reference to alternate voting. After the democratic vote gave out at noon and they could not vote in the afternoon except five or six of them, because they did not have any more to vote; but the republicans kept on voting, and it was shown by actual count and by memorandum kept on the ground and clearly proved that seventy-six republicans voted in the afternoon. Now when they came to count the ballots at night they did not tip the box over and mix the votes up—that was distinctly shown—but the inspectors took from the top of the box the tickets until they got clear to the bottom, and the first seventy-seven tickets taken out were republican, and after that they did not find a single republican vote in the to the bottom, and the first seventy-seven tickets taken out were republican, and after that they did not find a single republican vote in the box in layers as they should have been, a layer of democratic and then a layer of republican tickets, and then a layer of democratic and then a layer of republican tickets; but the seventy-six tickets that were voted in the afternoon and one more were found on the top of the box and the rest were all democratic to the bottom, and it was distinctly proved that there were many more republicans who voted in the forenoon than in the afternoon. What became of the republican votes cast in the forenoon? They were eliminated from that box how? During the noon recess they put the box in a room to which there was access by two doors, one through a store. They all went off to dinner. They had a poor unfortunate colored man on the board of election, and it is just as easy to cheat a colored man as it is to lie; they can cheat him almost before his eyes in these matters. The idea of the old fable of the lamb muddying the water of the wolf is repeated when you talk about the negroes in the presence of white men, educated, intelligent as these are, cheating a white man. It cannot be done. I say they put this box where there was access from two doors, and democrats were seen to go into that room during the noon recess, and they were heard walking about and whispering in there. Then they proceeded with the voting in the afternoon, and the result was very nearest. Then they proceeded with the voting in the afternoon, and the result was very natural. At night they found that all the republican votes cast in the forenoon had been taken from the box and democratic tickets substituted instead of them, and all the votes of the result was that were found were those cast in the afternoon. publican party that were found were those cast in the afternoon. Talk about frauds! Was there anything of that kind alleged to exist in the republican party in Florida? Nothing of the kind. How did in the republican party in Florida? Nothing of the kind. How did they vote? They voted through a window seven feet high above the ground, so that men had to pass their tickets away up, and they were handed to a democratic inspector, handed by him to another democratic officer, and then put into the box. The people could not see how their tickets were put into the box. There was no show for republicans to see that there was fair play. That was a single precinct, but may be taken as a specimen of democratic proceedings. Then take the precinct of Friendship Church, in the same county. There a democratic supervisor took charge of the polls, and the officers drove away the republican supervisor appointed under the United States laws and given the power to be within the polling-place to see that there was fair play—they drove him out of the room at the point of the pistol and compelled him to stay out of it. Unless they intended some fraud, where was the objection to this man being they intended some fraud, where was the objection to this man being in there, he being appointed under the law and by the United States judge for this purpose, not to handle ballots or anything of that kind? They drove him out of the room at the point of the pistol; and the

They drove him out of the room at the point of the pistol; and the other supervisor, being a democrat—for the court appointed one from each party in order that there might be fair play—they set to taking tickets at the window, showing that they had not a prejudice against United States supervisors, but only against United States republican supervisors. What was the result?

The box in this case was put away above the heads of the people and they could not see what became of their ballots. I mean that the window through which they voted was six and a half feet or seven feet high at this church, and they could not see what became of their tickets; and when the law expressly requires that the canyase shall tickets; and when the law expressly requires that the canvass shall be made then and there in that room, they carried off the ballot-box two miles and made the canvass in a private house, and then destroyed two miles and made the canvass in a private house, and then destroyed the ballots against the protest of the only republican there, the republican negro officer of election. He said, "No, the ballots ought to be put back in the box and sent to the county clerk's office;" but nevertheless against his protest they destroyed them and would not put them back. The record at that poll stood 145 for the democratic ticket and 44 for the republican ticket, and yet we identified and proved conclusively 67 republicans as voting. What became of the difference between the 44 and the 67, those we proved to have voted the republican ticket? If this system of manipulation could destroy 23 republican votes, as well could the democrats show 300 instead of 145. I have not the faintest doubt, after carefully examining the testimony given in reference to Jackson County, that the democratic party in these precincts alone counted 250 votes that belonged to the republicans.

republicans.
The Senator talks about Tilden having carried the State by 40 votes or 60 votes, and right in these very boxes at these two precincts, and we did not have time to look into others where the allegations were as bad, there were more than sufficient fraudulent votes to counterpoise that majority. I have no doubt that there was three times over on the votes of the polls a vote sufficient to give the State to the Hayes electors.

the Hayes electors.

Let us go into Alachua County. At Waldo precinct a railroad train having passengers from different States in the Union—some from Kentucky, some from Missouri, some from Illinois—was stopped, and the passengers who desired were allowed to go up and vote, a large majority of them voting the democratic ticket. Eight of them voted for Tilden and Hendricks, tearing off the names of the electors; that is to say, they supposed they had a right, and I presume it was under an impression of right on their part, although the officers of the election should have known better, to vote for them and not for the State officers; and, in their ignorance, they took the electors to be State officers, and did not know that it was necessary that they should vote for the electors in order to vote effectively for Tilden and Hendricks. What did the officers do when they came to count these votes? These eight votes were counted the same as the others for the Tilden and Hendricks electors. The republican officer at the poll obvotes? These eight votes were counted the same as the others for the Tilden and Hendricks electors. The republican officer at the poll objected all the way through to these votes, and finally prevailed so far as to have put on the back of the tickets the name of the person, the State of which he was a citizen; and that vote went to the county canvassing officers. The county canvassing officers refused to consider it, and the matter went to the State canvassing board, who threw out these votes in the canvass of the State; but under the sanctifying decision of the supreme court they were included, and go to swell the vote of the Tilden and Hendricks electors in Florida.

Mr. President I did not expect to be drawn into a debate on this to swell the vote of the Tilden and Hendricks electors in Florida.

Mr. President, I did not expect to be drawn into a debate on this matter, and I will be as brief as I can in my reference to these precincts. An attack was made upon Archer precinct No. 2 by the democratic party. There they allege frauds to have been committed and they have kept up the cry ever since. It has been repeated this morning in this Chamber by the Senator from Missouri. Archer No. 2 was a place where they say Tilden was terribly cheated, the place where republican genius was exercised for the purpose of creating an appearance of strength for the benefit of the Hayes electors and making false returns. We gave a special attention to Archer No. 2, and I say for one, if I could have detected that there were republican frauds there, I would have denounced them. Instead of that, it was my judgment that there was a democratic fraud there committed. The attack was made upon Archer No. 2 on account of its republican majority, and yet that majority was just about the same proportion which had been at previous elections right straight along, and there was no question of it that the democratic vote was enorand there was no question of it that the democratic vote was enormously greater than it had been at any previous election. The republican majority there was 263. The democrats claim that they cast at that poll 136 votes and the republicans 180 votes only, which would make a much less majority. We called before the committee the individual voters of the poll. Remember the democrats admitted only 180 republican votes. We called in three hundred and twenty-one republicans and each individually swore, and they gave their reasons—for they were questioned upon their knowledge—that they voted the republican ticket—180 republican votes conceded three hundred and republican ticket—180 republican votes conceded, three hundred and twenty-one republicans swearing that they voted that ticket; and with the utmost exertion that we could use we could find but twelve democrats who had voted at that poll. We could not find anybody who knew of more than twelve democrats who had voted at that poll. Samuel J. Fleming had been brought forward as their principal witness, who said that he took down the names of the voters who voted at that poll, and he himself could name but a dozen names that he thought could have voted the democratic ticket; yet there were 136 democratic votes found in that box. The democrats said the republicans only cast 180 votes and we found three hundred and twentyone individual persons who did actually vote the republican ticket there, and we found them at a season of the year several months after the election, when the crops were all gathered and the colored arter the election, when the crops were all gathered and the colored people were scattered over the country, some fishing, some hunting, some away from home to get a day's work wherever they could. We heard of many of that kind, and if we had staid we could have got them before the committee, though at very considerable expense both of time and money; but we burst the democratic case of fraud all to pieces by showing against their claim of 180 republican votes three hundred and sixty-one republicans who actually did vote.

Now, I should like to know under those circumstances who stuffed the box at Archer. Not the republicans, for we found the individual republican voters, within a small percentage of those who were returned as having voted, to make up the republican majority. I have no doubt, under all the other circumstances of the case, that during the temporary absence of two of the republican officers of election, who were both colored, and who during the day were absent several times, leaving two men by the name of Green R. Moore and Floyd Dukes, the latter being a colored man and a democrat, in possession Dukes, the latter being a colored man and a democrat, in possession of the room—Green Moore being a white man and a pretty low one too, I should judge, by his pursuits in life and by his having sworn on both sides of this case—that these men allowed it to be done or did stuff into this box 100 or more democratic votes and put in between the loose sheets of the poll-list names to correspond. The poll-list was kept by Vance, a colored man; and without numbering the names from 1 up to the whole number cast, (for he found they voted too fast,) he would simply write the number, thereby giving opportunity for from I up to the whole number cast, (for he found they voted too fast,) he would simply write the number, thereby giving opportunity for fraud of that kind to be committed; and thus you can account for 100 democratic votes found there. And under any testimony that has ever been taken by any committee of Congress, the presumption is irresistible that those votes were stolen by the democratic party then and there. That the republican vote was the natural vote of the precinct is evidenced by the fact that there were republican clubs in the neighborhood with a membership to a greater number than the whole republican vote, some thirty or forty greater in number in their active membership than those who voted on that day at that precinct.

I believe the intention of the democratic party was to discredit that poll, knowing it was a strong republican precinct and that under any circumstances there must be a large republican majority there. They intended to produce confusion in the count, and, failing in that, at any rate to have the advantage of a fraudulent democratic vote stuffed into the box.

I give these as specimens of the proceedings in Florida. If any Senator can show that the republicans have committed frauds there, Senator can show that the republicans have committed tradts there, let him put his finger on the spot, and I will attempt to show, if our investigation covers the case or if the investigation by either House covers the case, whether there is truth in his allegations or not; but I say it is not for those who necessarily are compelled to be silent or defend such gross democratic frauds as I have pointed out, to indulge in these general aspersions of fraud against the republican party.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I was not a member of the committee sent to investigate the late election in Florida; therefore I am not prepared to go into all the details of that election as the Senator from California is, he being a member of that committee. I have only this to say, that a minority report has been made, and which essentially contradicts every position advanced by the Senator from California. But let that be as it may, we know that telegrams from the city of Washington were sent immediately after the election that meant fraud. The Senator from California asks me to repeat them. I cannot do so, but I have read them; the country has read them, and moreover remembers them now, and will hereafter.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator know that those telegrams are also denied by those who, it was alleged, had sent them?

Mr. BOGY. Some have been denied, not all.

Mr. SARGENT. They were denied under oath.

Mr. BOGY. Some have been denied, but the most significant have never been denied. Telegrams were sent from the city of Washington immediately after the election meaning fraud, palpable and undeniable, not so direct, not so plain as the act of the man in Oregon, because these were men of longer and greater experience in the art of fraud and rascality and more accustomed how to carry on that kind of business. This man was inexperienced in fraud, therefore he was direct and plain. The others were adepts of great and varied experience and knew well how to tread the dark and sinuous ways, which while they expressed well their hidden and well disguised intent, yet avoided cautiously the use of plain words. But the meaning of the one was as well understood as that of the other.

No matter what the details of the election in Florida may have been he fact is stamped upon the public mind of this nation that the vote he fact is stamped upon the public mind of this nation that the vote of that State was fairly and honestly given to Tilden for the Presidency. That fact never can be taken from the page of history. Thank God, there is a mysterious agency pervading the world and guiding the pen of the historian; and it has guided it from the earliest period of time, and despite all the efforts of fraud to falsify it, the time always comes, sooner or later, when this mysterious power will guide the pen of truth and vindicate it. Never has it been otherwise, and so it will be again, and truth crushed now to the earth will rise again and stand vindicated, sooner or later, but as certain as destiny.

and stand vindicated, sooner or later, but as certain as destiny.

But I will not dwell any longer on this case of Florida, as I have already said, not being familiar with it in all its details. The Senator from California says it was understood among the republican members of Congress that the commission then about being created

Mr. SARGENT. No, the Senator misunderstood me. I did not state that, for that I do not know. I said the position of the republican counsel before the commission was such that they contended for the regularity of certain proceedings; that those proceedings were conclusive because they were constitutional and legal; and that that argument placed them under the disadvantage of not being able to discuss matters back of the returns. That is all. I did not assume to know anything of the intention of Congress or to speak for any others as to what the commissioners would decide when they convened.

convened.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, the commission created by us in the case of Florida laid down two rules for its guidance: first, that they would not investigate anything which had transpired before or preceding the return made by the governor except in relation to the eligibility of electors. Their decision left that question open for investigation by a vote of 8 to 7. It was of course believed by the whole country that the same rule would be applied to Louisiana.

Who on earth would have doubted the propriety of the application of that rule when it had been enforced in the case of the State of Florida? Yet we know that this decision has been reversed. We know that a member of that commission but vesterday changed his know that a member of that commission but yesterday changed his position upon that subject, and while it was competent in the State of Florida to go behind the returns to examine whether electors were or were not eligible under the Constitution of the United States, when the motion was made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to apply the same rule to Louisiana, the decision was reversed. ARD to apply the same rule to Louisiana, the decision was reversed. The case had been made so plain by counsel, so strong, so irrefutable that such an examination could not take place without proving beyond the possibility of doubt that more than one elector from that State was not entitled to hold that position because not eligible under the Constitution of the United States; and hence this decision was changed by this commission, and by the vote of one of its members who had voted one way in the case of Florida and now another way in the case of Louisiana.

Sir, the names of Jeffreys and Norbury have come down to us in English history for ages past, covered with disgrace and shame because they were corrupt judges; and the name of that man who changed his vote upon that commission so as to rob the votes of that State from Tilden to Hayes, Justice Bradley, will go down to afterages covered with equal shame and disgrace. His name will be associated with Norbury and Jeffreys, linked together by a chain of infamy, and never will it be pronounced without a hiss from all good men in this country.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, would it not be in order to proceed by unanimous consent with the appropriation bills to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Legislative business is not in order.

Mr. WINDOM. Not by unanimous consent?

Mr. HAMLIN. Move to take a recess.

Mr. HAMDIN. Move to take a recess.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to say that we have two bills ready from the Committee on Appropriations. They have been ready, so far as the committee is concerned, for nearly a week, but they have been delayed on account of the impossibility heretofore of printing them. The printed bills have just been received; and if this proceeding forces upon us an extra session, I want to say that the Committee on Appropriations relieve themselves from all responsibility.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he would be glad to gratify the Senator from Minnesota in order to facilitate public business, but the law is in force which prohibits legislation while the commission is not considering the questions before it. That being the fact, the Chair must rule that no legislative business is in

Mr. HAMLIN. I can see no good purpose to be subserved by remaining here, and I will move—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observes the Secretary of the President. The Chair will receive a message from the President.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. Grant, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. No 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 824) for the relief of Hannah L. Lloyd, as executrix, and George W. King, executor of William Lloyd, deceased; and An act (S. No. 1139) to change the time of holding the October term of the United States district court for the district of Nebraska.

ELECTORAL VOTES-FLORIDA.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate now take a recess until ten o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. COOPER. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to make a

Mr. HAMLIN. O, yes. If the Senator desires to speak, I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion for a recess is withdrawn.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, it will be remembered that at the meeting of Congress in December the first proposition made came from the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds] to send certain committees South to investigate allegations of fraud which were then made through the public press of the country as having occurred in three of the States of the South. The democratic party was represented upon those committees, and as a representative of that party it was my hope then, as it has always been, that if fraud did exist in this country either in the counting of ballots or elsewhere there would be power in this nation to discover it and to guard against it and punish those engaged in it, although the Senate were willing then to examine, although they sent committees to examine in these several States and to take evidence, and we have the reports of those com-States and to take evidence, and we have the reports of those committees accompanied by the evidence, it is now assumed, and in fact has been decided, that there is no power in this Government to be found "here or elsewhere," to use the language of the majority of the committee who examined the case of Florida, to prevent, punish, or relieve against fraud which may have occurred in any State in the appointment of electors. I am sorry that such a decision has been arrived at, either in the Senate or elsewhere, because I am satisfied that upon the evidence submitted by the various committees the American people will be convinced that the highest offices within their gift have been conferred upon those not entitled to them through the most gi-gantic frauds. We are not afraid of the examination of this question gantic frauds. We are not afraid of the examination of this question and the adjudication of that tribunal upon the evidence submitted.

It is folly, Mr. President, now that the door has been shut and that no one can be heard; when no evidence can be presented, to bandy words in the Senate as to what the evidence does or will show. We are wasting time. Open the door and examine the evidence either here or before any jury, constitute it as you may, and we are not afraid of the result. But when our opponents come and throw themselves behind the technicality of the law which denies the power to examine or adjudicate upon the facts at all, it is worse than useless, examine or adjudicate upon the facts at all, it is worse than useless, it is folly, for them to insist before the American people that the evidence shows this, that, or the other thing. I challenge the Senator from California or any other man to point out evidence taken in the State of Florida which will substantiate the frauds which he has alleged. Take the Alachua frauds which he last mentioned and examine them. Let the Senate and the country remember that for years frauds had been perpetrated at Archer precinct in the county of Alachua.

Mr. SARGENT. Where is the great of the country of the count

Mr. SARGENT. Where is the proof of that?
Mr. COOPER. In the record.
Mr. SARGENT. I should like to have the Senator show it.
Mr. COOPER. In Mr. Dennis's testimony.
Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?
Mr. COOPER. Certainly.
Mr. SARGENT. Mr. Dennis's testimony and that of several other republicans was that the democrats had for years on the most frivolous pretext endeavored to break up Archer No. 2 because there was a strong republican majority there.

Mr. COOPER. There never had been Archer No. 2 before the last election.

Mr. SARGENT. Archer precinct, Archer No. 1 and No. 2 which before this time were one precinct. Mr. Dennis's testimony and the testimony of others shows that it had been a constant object of attack by democrats on account of the large republican majority there. They had endeavored to make appearances of irregularity there and to throw it out, had sometimes succeeded and sometimes had not, and they seemed to play the same game at the late election, but they have not succeeded, although the democrats, as I believe, did get in about one was charged by the democrats, as I believe, and get in about one hundred illegal votes.

Mr. COOPER. My allegation was that fraud was charged in the box at Archer for two or more elections preceding the last and that it was charged by the democrats that the ballot-box of Archer had been stuffed time and again. Then the republicans divided Archer precinct into No. 1 and No. 2 and placed as election officers over No. 2 a white man a republican kindle intelligent with the state of the control of the white man, a republican, a colored man, a republican, highly intelligent and educated, and a poor old colored man, a democrat, who could neither read nor write, and he was the only democrat around the ballot-box of Archer No. 2. Remember now that the charge had been made for two or three elections that there had been fraud in Archer, that the ballot-box had been stuffed, and at the last election they put one intelligent colored man, a republican, one white man, a republican, and a negro who could neither read nor write, a democrat, to watch the box. Under that state of facts the democratic party placed as near the polls as they could get him an intelligent man, Samuel T. Fleming. They could not get him in the room where the ballot-box was; he had not been appointed as an inspector; but they placed him at the window to take a list of the men who voted, and he took down every name, with the exception, as he testifies, of not exceeding fifteen or sixteen, who voted at Archer No. 2. He was placed as near the ballot-box as it was possible for him to get. He was a man acquainted with everybody in the neighborhood, a merchant for years in the town of Archer. He took the name of every man who voted. The poll was closed at the proper time, the count made, and the result announced. Now you have the man who takes the poll-list standing there recording the names, and four other witnesses who testify as to the result; and what was it? That at Archer No. 2 there were 316 votes polled, out of which the republicans received 180 and the democrats 136. That is announced at the close of the polls. This man's list has three hundred and five names. He says that he wrote every name that voted, unless fifteen or sixteen who were in the room or voted from the inside of the room, to which he had no access. You have the announced result of one hundred and dighty republicans and one hundred and divirty-six democrats that the ballot-box had been stuffed, and at the last election they he had no access. You have the announced result of one hundred aud eighty republicans and one hundred and thirty-six democrats. The colored republican inspector and the colored clerk who was sent down from the town of Gainesville take the ballot-box, after the announcement has been made of 180 republican votes and 136 demo-crats, to the house of this colored inspector, giving the key to the white inspector, also a republican.

One singular circumstance will attract attention if you will examine the evidence in the case. After the result in Archer No. 2 and the vote was announced and the result at Archer No. 1 was announced, both polls held in the same building, making about a set-off in the vote as announced in the counting of the vote, one giving 44 republican majority and the other 41 democratic majority, the proposition was made by the inspectors of Archer No. 1 to the inspectors of Archer No. 2 that they would take these boxes and put them together and stand guard over them that night and deliver them the next day to the guard over them that night and deliver them the next day to the clerk of the county. That proposition was declined by the inspectors of Archer No. 2, who were republicans, Archer No. 1 being in the possession of the democrats. The proposition was made by the inspectors of Archer No. 1 to put both boxes together and place a guard over them. This proposition was declined by the inspectors of Archer No. 2, and they said, "We will keep the box ourselves; we will take care of our box; you take care of your box."

Is it not a little singular, if this immense majority of 263 afterward returned as from Archer No. 2 had been in fact the true return at the close of the polls that the democrats would have cared to grant to grant to grant the close of the polls that the democrats would have cared to grant to grant to grant the close of the polls that the democrats would have cared to grant to grant to grant the grant to grant to grant to grant the grant to grant the grant to grant to grant to grant to grant to grant the grant to grant to grant the grant to ward returned as from Archer No. 2 had been in fact the true return at the close of the polls, that the democrats would have cared to guard that ballot-box? Their desire to watch it indicates the majority of 44 which it is claimed was really given. As I said, this proposition was refused by the inspectors of Archer No. 2, and they took the box to the town of Gainesville and there kept it in the possession of the clerk of the election, a colored republican, until eleven or twelve o'clock the next day, when they delivered it to the clerk of the court. The clerk of the court and all the officers of the county are republicans indees sheriff clerk every other officer in the county of Alans. The clerk of the court and all the officers of the county are republicans, judges, sheriff, clerk, every other officer in the county of Alachua, and the only democrat near the polls at Archer No. 2 or who had any supervision or control of the ballot-box there was a colored democrat who could neither read nor write. When the county canvass was made, the boxes opened, Archer No. 2 is reported as giving a republican majority of 263; that is, 399 republican to 136 democratic votes. The democrats insisted that 219 votes had been stuffed in the bellot-box after it was delivered to the inspectors and after the county. ballot-box after it was delivered to the inspectors and after the count ballot-box after it was delivered to the inspectors and after the count of the votes had been made.

It is said by the Senator from California that the committee examined into Archer No. 2 and called before them three hundred and twenty-one witnesses, who swore that they voted at Archer No. 2 the republican ticket. If you will analyze the vote as proven you will find that but one man, I believe, on the poll-list out of one hundred and sixty-three names on that list, who, Fleming says, did not vote at that box that day, was introduced before the committee to prove that he voted there; and that was a man named Eugene Allen. A colored man, who swore that his name was Eugene Allen and that he A colored man, who swore that his name was Eugene Allen and that he voted at Archer No. 2, was introduced as a witness, and a white man, who said he was registered in the county of Alachua, lived at Archer prior to that time, but that he did not vote that day at Archer, was also examined. The registration-list of the county of Alachua contains only one Eugene Allen. There is but one registered Eugene Allen. A white man of that name proved he was registered Eugene Allen. A white man of that name proved he was registered in the county of Alachua and that he did not vote at Archer No. 2. If the colored man swore truly, then he voted illegally, not having been registered. I conceive that the Fleming list is the correct vote at Archer No. 2; and that if the democrats did not get 136 votes out of the 316, as proven by him, they did not get that number at all. They must have received them out of those 316; because I believe any man who will examine the evidence will be convinced that there never were but 316 votes polled at Archer No. 2 on the 7th of November; and the inspectors themselves returned 136 democratic votes at that poll.

Now it is insisted by the Senator from California that during the absence of the inspectors Vance and Black, during the day, who had control of the ballot-box and received the votes, the democratic votes were stuffed into the box. My recollection is that they proved that they were absent once and only for five minutes. The two were absent at the same time from the room only once and for that time. Now remember that the only democrat who was in the room or who had access to the room was a colored man who could neither read nor write; and if you take the hypothesis assumed by the Senator from had access to the room was a colored man who could neither read nor write; and if you take the hypothesis assumed by the Senator from California, you must believe that during five minutes of absence of these men from the room, a colored man who could neither read nor write stuffed the ballot-box. If you can believe that, Mr. President, then you can arrive at the conclusion at which the honorable Senator from California does, that there was cheating done there in the interest of the democrats. For one I cannot believe that; I cannot believe that a man who can neither read nor write can stuff a ballot-box, and do it successfully, in the space of five minutes. Remember that the poll-list returned by these inspectors to the clerk was all in the same handwriting.

Mr. SARGENT. If my friend is testifying I should like to cross-examine.

Mr. COOPER. I am not testifying.
Mr. SARGENT. If he is attempting to repeat testimony, I trust he will refresh his recollection.

Mr. COOPER. Let the Senator read Webster's testimony and if he does not prove that the return before us was all in the same handwriting I am greatly mistaken.

Mr. SARGENT. O, no.
Mr. COOPER. Vance swears it too.
Mr. SARGENT. Neither of them swore it, and Webster himself says he did not examine to see if it was, but that he noticed part of says he did not examine to see if it was, but that he noticed part of it was in different colored ink from the rest.

Mr. COOPER. Vance proves it.

Mr. SARGENT. Vance says he made out the list.

Mr. COOPER. The whole list.

Mr. SARGENT. I deny that either of them says it.

Mr. COOPER. Get the testimony. Vance swears it. But there is another singular circumstance about Vance's testimony along there. The returns of the election of Archer No. 2, before us, are all signed by one man in one handwriting that of Black the inspector, a reby one man, in one handwriting, that of Black, the inspector, a remr. SARGENT. Do you say Vance does not sign?

Mr. COOPER. I am coming to Vance. I say the names of the inspectors are all signed in the same handwriting, that of Black; Dukes makes his mark and the name of Moore is signed by Black. I say Vance signs it and signs it with different ink from that used by Black in the signature of the inspectors, as Vance swears when his attention is called to it; and yet he swears that he signed it at the same place and at the same time. But when we come to submit it to him he says it was in different ink. You only had to look at it to see that it was different ink.

The allegation on the democratic side was that Black and Vance concocted the scheme by which those 219 votes were illegally stuffed in the ballot-box that night or the next morning before they delivered the box to the clerk of the county; and the circumstances to sustain that are that they had full control of the returns of the election, the certified returns, and of the poll-lists, and that Vance made out a different certificate, Vance attesting it after he had increased the poll-list itself by the introduction of these various two hunthe poll-list itself by the introduction of these various two hundred and nineteen names. Why, sir, you have only to look at the poll-list to see that name after name is repeated time and again throughout the poll-list to make the 535 votes, and upon examination you will find that, of the one hundred and sixty-three names heretofore alluded to as not voting, not one of them was produced to testify that they voted; and this was the issue made before the returning board: that one hundred and sixty-three names did not vote at Archer No. 2, as testified by the man who took the poll-lists, and the republican party neither before the returning board, nor before the Rouse committee, nor before the Senate committee, produced and the House committee, nor before the Senate committee, produced a man of the one hundred and sixty-three except this Eugene Allen, as I remember, who said he voted at Archer No. 2.

The distinct allegation made before the returning board was the fraud of one hundred and sixty-three names who were upon this polllist who did not vote; and yet neither this committee nor the House committee, nor anybody else, has yet produced any of them to testify that they did vote. I say with these facts before us can we hesitate to believe that a fraud was perpetrated? Can we doubt that fraud existed?

But, says the Senator from California, it was perpetrated afterward. Why, Mr. President, if these three hundred and ninety-nine men had voted at Archer No. 2, as contended for, what would have been the result? The majority returned was 263. Now, if we purge the boxes and take the number voting the republican ticket as proven before the Senate committee, you do not increase the majority of the republicans more than 10 to 20 votes. Would it not have been an absurdity that the democrats should have so stuffed the ballot-box as to only decrease the republican majority from 10 to 20 votes? Would they have engaged in so disreputable an undertaking for so small an advantage? Mr. President, I would be willing to rest this whole controversy, if we had the power to inquire into it and determine it before any impartial jury, upon Archer No. 2 or the Alachua

Now, what is the testimony upon which my friend from California bases his conclusion? It must be upon the testimony taken before the returning board. I am frank to say that that testimony I paid very little attention to, and I know very little of what it proved. I have based all my conclusions on the testimony taken before the Senate committee itself. I have the testimony of one of those who went down at the request of the President to superintend the count of the down at the request of the President to superintend the count of the vote by the returning board as to the effect of the evidence before that board in relation to Archer No. 2. I have the statement of General Barlow, who was one of the commission, a republican of high character, who, in his letter to the President, says emphatically that he would without hesitation reject the 219 votes polled in Archer No. 2 as fraudulent, and I think any Senator who will examine the testimony carefully will come to a like conclusion.

Now at the Comphelium president Lefer the Senator from Calif.

Now as to the Campbellton precincts, I defy the Senator from California with all his ingenuity to take the testimony before the Senate committee and produce a suspicion of fraud out of what occurred at Campbellton, even the slightest taint or indication of it. What the testimony was before the returning board I know not; I have not examined that; but the testimony taken by the Senate committee does not indicate, much less sustain, the charge of fraud at Campbellton. He will find or anybody else who will examine the testimony will find that at Campbellton they agreed between themselves early in the morning that the colored voters should vote one hour and the white voters one hour alternately; the white vote was exhausted by twelve o'clock and the colored voters continued to vote in the afternoon. It is assumed by the Senator upon such proof that the agreement was that the republicans should vote one hour and the democrats one hour. It was color that divided the voting into alternate hours; and, to come to the conclusion assumed by the Senator from California, you must presume that every colored man voted the republican ticket.

Now, sir, if you will examine all the testimony you will find that the only trouble that occurred during the election in the State of Florida, so far as the evidence before our committees showed, occurred in Campbellton upon a colored supervisor challenging the vote of a colored democrat—a colored man who voted the democratic ticket in an hour allotted to the colored voters. I challenge denial of this fact. The colored democrat was alleged to be under twenty-one years of age. He was sworn and voted. And yet in the face of that fact it is assumed that every colored man must of necessity have voted the republican ticket.

Then again the Senator says that there were actually counted, after the noon recess of voters who voted there, seventy-six republicans. I think he will find in the testimony that there were seventy-six colored men who voted in the afternoon, and if I am not mistaken the trouble alluded to above occurred after the noon recess. To sustain the allegation that there were seventy-six republicans who voted after noon, it is necessary that every colored man voted the republican ticket; to rebut which you have the actual fact of a colored supervisor challenging a colored democrat, as being under age, at that very box on that day. He says that the ballot-box may have been and was tampered with, according to his judgment, by some man's being inside of the room at the dinner recess, and that is attempted to be substantiated by one colored individual called Crump Bowie. That I suppose my friend would hardly call reliable testimony.

Mr. SARGENT. Why not? Because he is colored?

friend would hardly call reliable testimony.

Mr. SARGENT. Why not? Because he is colored?

Mr. COOPER. No.

Mr. SARGENT. There were two colored men who testified to it.

Mr. COOPER. No; I am not speaking of them now, but Crump is the main witness. If you will take the testimony of the House committee as to Crump I will leave it to any jury to say whether Crump is to be believed anywhere under any circumstances. I did not examine whether he had a good character or bad character. I thought it was absurd to ask any one to set aside the declared result of an election upon such a shallow pretext as that set up on the testimony of this witness. I therefore did not attempt to show whether Crump was reliable or not. Crump said he heard a noise in the room where was reliable or not. Crump said he heard a noise in the room where the ballot-box was during the dinner recess, and thought it was some one in there drinking whisky. That is all he thought at the time. And the other fellow, McKay, who attempts to corroborate Crump, is the worse man of the two, according to the evidence before the House committee. I concede that I took no evidence on the question and did committee. I concede that I took no evidence on the question and did not care anything about it. I did not think anybody would insist that the result of an election as shown by the official returns made by two republican inspectors should be rejected upon such evidence as was given by McKay and Crump.

Mr. SARGENT. Who were republican inspectors?

Mr. COOPER. Purdee and the other man; I have forgotten the name. I think there were two republicans and one democrat. There were two democrats and one republicans at Friendship Church, and during the absence at the dinner recess, when the box was proven to have been locked, proven by the supervisors themselves who superintended the counting, and that the votes were all counted out fair.

Now, Mr. President, I come to Friendship Church, and the charge of fraud there rests upon precisely the same assumption that every colored man who voted there voted the republican ticket. If they did, then the republicans were entitled to more votes than the count showed they received. I insist the best evidence as to how they voted is found in the returns made by the inspectors. Witnesses swore that a number of colored men voted there, sixty-four or sixty-five; that they kept a list of them. It is assumed that these sixty-five colored men all voted the republican ticket; the ballot counted out by the inspectors only showed 45 republican votes. If they did vote the republican ticket then the fraud as contended for existed; but to substantiate the fraud you will have to believe that no colored man voted the democratic ticket. Those of us who know something about the colored race will not readily accept that conclusion.

The Senator also complains that the republican supervisor of the election at this precinct was not permitted by the officers of election to remain in the room where the votes were received. I would like the Senator from California or any other Senator to show me by what anthority a United States supervisor was there at all. I should like to see the law by which a supervisor of elections was placed at any of the voting-places in Florida. Where is it? It is not in the election law we have passed, because that is limited to cities of a certain num-ber of population, and where the authority comes from to appoint a supervisor at the country precincts is more than I have been able to

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask a question?
Mr. COOPER. Certainly.
Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator think that it is evidence of good faith on the part of those who took the ground that he had not the faith on the part of those who took the ground that he had not the right to be there that they allowed a person, being a democrat holding exactly the same title, to remain there and handle the ballots?

Mr. COOPER. He did not do that; he was clerk.

Mr. SARGENT. No; he was a supervisor.

Mr. COOPER. If he was, then that was wrong, clearly wrong, and I have no defense to make if that was the fact. I thought the man who took in the ballots was a clerk. If he was a supervisor and permitted to remain there as a supervisor, it was wrong and inde-

Mr. SARGENT. He was a democrat.
Mr. COOPER. That does not justify wrong. I do not care what his politics were. If fraud existed I desired it ferreted out and punhis politics were. If fraud existed I desired it ferreted out and punished, whether committed by democrats or republicans; it made no difference to me. Fraud in elections is dangerous, and should be exposed and punished, let it be perpetrated by whom it may, and all the same whether the attempt was by republican or democrat. I stand to-day upon that issue, and am willing to go before the American people upon it. I am willing to investigate it again in every fact, to purge the polls of every illegal or fraudulent vote, and not shut the door against it. I defy the Senator from California or any one else from the testimony to reverse the face of the returns in the State of from the testimony to reverse the face of the returns in the State of Florida by purging the ballot-box of every illegal and fraudulent vote polled on either side.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to mention a single circumstance. It will be remembered that both the House of Representatives and the Senate had a committee in the State of Florida at the same time. The House of Representatives, by their committee, claimed to have discovered an enormous fraud in the county of Leon, in which the capital of the State of Florida is located. The ballot-box at one of the precincts was stuffed to the number of 76 votes in favor of the republican party, and there was clear proof, as they insisted, that this fact was established by the evidence before them; and although we were in the capital of Florida when that announcement was made upon the streets as to the fraud found out by the House committee, upon the streets as to the traid found out by the House committee, yet we never once examined into the county of Leon or into that alleged fraud in that precinct; not one witness was examined as to the frand in Leon County, although we were located there, although we were examining witnesses there; not one. We could call them from Campbellton and from Friendship, but not one was called in the immediate neighborhood of a fraud which was alleged to have been discovered by the House committee in district No. 13, or whatever the name of it was. There was no examination into that alleged fraud there at all. Forty-eight voters upon the poll-list, as I remember, positively swore that they did not vote there at all; there were 76 fraudulent votes in that box, and yet the Senate committee, sitting within ten miles of it, did not examine a single witness in regard

Then the allegation is made by the Senator from California that frauds on the part of the democrats were to be found almost every-where in Florida, and the one of the facts upon which he rests the where in Florida, and the one of the facts upon which he rests the statement is that eight voters—I believe eight—voted for Tilden and Hendricks without voting for the electors, they being from a different State, not legally entitled to vote at all.

Mr. SARGENT. O, no; they did not vote for them at all, but were counted all the same as if they had. They were only a part of some twenty or twenty-four.

Mr. COOPER. I thought it was sixteen.

Mr. SARGENT. Twenty-four in all.

Mr. COOPER. Twenty-four clearly illegal votes conceded, but they voted in the best of faith and by the consent of the inspectors of election at Waldo precinct. The county of Alachua was republican largely; and, if you are to purge it upon the theory laid down by the canvassing board, they ought to have thrown out Alachua; and so it is with Archer No. 2. If this enormous fraud was committed, if our old friend Dukes, who could neither read nor write, stuffed the ballot-box with 136 democratic votes when there were but twelve yoted the whole county should be thrown out and not counted twelve voted, the whole county should be thrown out and not counted at all; at least this is the plan upon which the returning board acted where the county was democratic.

Let us turn to the county of Duval. Here the same fact exists as Let us turn to the county of Duval. Here the same fact exists as existed in Baker County, and not one word of complaint is made of the return from this county for being irregular, although it is in precisely the same situation as that of the county of Baker, which they say ought to be counted out. The clerk and the justice of the peace returned the county of Baker, every precinct in it, and the republicans say that is so irregular that it should not be counted, but that the return certified by the judge and a justice of the peace, made for the occasion, should override it, although in this latter return two of the precincts of the county are excluded. Yet, in the county of Duval, where a similar return is made by a clerk and a justice of the peace, not signed by the county judge, it is all regular and fair. The county of Duval counts 950 republican majority, although to make up that they had to empty the jails and vote the immates. That is the proof; and yet it is said the county of Duval ought to be counted and the county of Baker ought to be rejected. How consistent! and the county of Baker ought to be rejected. How consistent!

But, Mr. President, I did not intend to go into the facts as developed, because, as I said before, it is nonsense for us to be bandying words about what the proof may show as to fraud when there is no power to correct it if it is found to exist. How foolish the attempt of the republican party to decry fraud in any one when it is willing to accept for its candidates for the highest offices in the Republic—those offices in defiance of the will of a large majority of the people—although obtained by the most outrageous frauds, because they say there is no power under the Constitution to prevent the wrong.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I heard with regret this morning remarks made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Bogw] in regard to Mr. Justice Bradley. I think he did Mr. Justice Bradley very great injustice. If the Senator could have heard the discussions before the commission, as I have heard them, I am very sure he would not have made the remarks. I am not at liberty now to speak of them; but the time will come, I doubt not, when the opinions will be published, and the Senator will then realize for himself that in what he said this morning he did injustice to a conscientious judge and commissioner.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I think I did not say in the remarks which I first submitted upon this matter this morning, that there was no power to examine into frauds at an election of electors; but I hold, and I have no doubt that my friend from Tennessee holds the same opinion, that that power resides in the State and must be exercised by its own tribunals. I am strongly of the opinion, and have expressed it in the Senate, that the tribunal sitting in the center of this Capitol has no right by any proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto, or any method of revising whatever, to go behind the certified official constitutional action in the States for any purpose whatever. I believe this to be the position of the republican counsel and of the republican party; and, that being so, I hold that however we might publican party; and, that being so, I hold that, however we might here discuss the question of what had been done by the people of Florida, or however the result was produced in the ballot-box, we were bound and that tribunal was bound by the Constitution and laws of the United States to refrain from examining those primary acts of the people. But I am not for that reason indisposed to fully examine and fully discuss any allegation of fraud that may be made against and rully discuss any allegation of fraud that may be made against the republican party, to repel it, and to show, if the examination will justify it, as it does in the case of Florida, that the democratic party have been guilty there of frauds. The old cry of "stop thief" should have very little weight in the consideration of a matter of this kind. I desire myself to make no allegations against the democratic party which I think are not sustained by testimony and are not approved by my own conscience, and I am not disposed, simply because demo-cratic Senators rise here and in general terms charge the republican party with fraud, to assent to their right to do so or admit that it is sustained by testimony.

My friend from Tennessee seems to rest his case in Archer precinct No. 2 upon the testimony of Samuel J. Fleming, and he says what a singular circumstance it is that this man, this democrat, being stationed there to take the names of voters, should subsequently have gone to the poll-list and picked out one hundred and thirty-six names and have been right in picking them out as men who had not voted there, with the exception of one. Why, sir, that fact is entirely consistent with the theory which, I think, springs naturally from this testimony. I believe that there was a list of names stuffed into that poll-list in a different colored ink, as testified by the witness, from the kind in which the body of the poll-list was written, and it was the easiest thing in the world for those who laid the plan by which that list should be stuffed into the body of the poll-list to give these very names to Samuel J. Fleming; or, if it does him injustice to suppose that he was cognizant of the fraud, to suggest to him to go afterward to the poll-list and pick out the names that he did not see voting there and pick out picking them out as men who had not voted there, with the excepthose very names because they did not vote there. There is nothing inconsistent in that. The very fact that all this machinery was set at work at that precinct, this strong republican precinct which two years before at the previous election had given 268 majority, a larger majority than is claimed to have been cast this time by the republicans, the very fact that all this machinery was set at work at that place, that this man Fleming, an intelligent white man, was sent there to take names, and then was sent to the county clerk's office to examine the poll-list and make out a list of those who did not vote there, shows that there was a plan with reference to that precinct there, shows that there was a plan with reference to that precinct sinister in its intent; that they intended some unusual process with regard to it; and they intended, furthermore, that when that process was applied to destroy the character of the poll. It was an obvious conspiracy, of which Fleming was either a knowing agent or used as a tool, because if it was intended to destroy the poll no better way than to insert in the poll-list the names of men who did not vote there and then call attention to the fact and exclude the precinct because so many persons had voted there who had no right to do so, could have been devised. I have no doubt that there were more names upon that poll-list than voted there, but I believe that those who voted there were the ones that were called before us, the three hundred and twenty-one republicans, who swore that they voted at this precinct and voted the republican ticket. Every one of those three hundred and twenty-one men stand as witnesses against the truth of that which Fleming alleges, stand against the conclusions to be drawn from his testimony. If he was innocent in the matter and was made to think by appearances brought to his attention that the republicans to think by appearances brought to his attention that the republicans had not east the number of votes which they pretended honestly to have cast at that precinct, then he is entitled to the benefit of any suggestion that may arise from that consideration; but his single testimony is not to be placed in opposition to that of three hundred and twenty-one men who swear that they did vote and which necessarily overbears any particular individual who relates a train of circumstances which would appear to show that they could not have voted at that precinct. voted at that precinct.

Furthermore, one hundred and four men of those who appeared before us and swore they voted are not on Fleming's list all. He sat there and saw these men vote and did not write their names down. One of these cases was that of Mr. Dansy, preacher in that neighborhood, living then within half a mile of the place where the neighborhood, living then within hair a fille of the place where the election was held, a man of most respectable character, a man whose appearance before the committee I have no doubt favorably impressed every member of the committee, including the minority member of it. This man stated that he was there and voted, that he stepped up and asked Mr. Fleming if his name was on the list, and he said it was not, though he had voted a very few moments before that time. Furthermore, it was in evidence that this man Fleming ann. COOPER. Allow me to correct the Senator. This man Dansy's name was not on the poll-list there.

Mr. COOPER. Allow me to correct the Senator. This man Dansy's

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know how the poll-list may have been manipulated, but certainly Dansy voted. He is a man who reads and writes, a man whose word my friend will not say ought not to be taken, and he swore that he voted there. It was also proved by a large number of witnesses, and it cannot be disputed. The time when he voted and the circumstances under which he voted were proved. It was made a test case right then and there to show whether Fleming was telling the truth or whether he was not telling the truth. It was proved by Dansy, this intelligent, respectable man, that he did vote there, and we called witness after witness who knew him well, because he was a colored preacher for the whole neighborhim well, because he was a colored preacher for the whole neighborhood, who swore that he voted there, and that at the time he voted the boys said "Now let Mr. Dansy vote," and the crowd gave way for him to vote. The Senator remembers that circumstance, and Fleming should have had his name on the list. I might go on and give other circumstances tending to show that Fleming was deceived or was careless, that he did not take down the names of those who voted There were one hundred and four persons whom he did not see whom he should have seen and must have seen if he told the truth that he was there from the time the polls opened until they closed, and was not absent at any time while voting was going on and took down every name. There is abundant testimony showing that he either is entirely mistaken or he is an infernal liar. I am disposed to think that he was mistaken, that he was not as attentive as he thought he was.

It is said, in order to sustain him, that an announcement was made when the polls closed of what the vote was and that announcement corresponded with the claim of the democratic party. To be sure there was one witness who stated that to be the fact, Fleming himself; and another witness stated that he did not remember, that he himself stood on the outside of the window and kept a tally with his pencil as the clerk tallied, but he did not remember whether the announcement was made or not. Whether the tally was completed at that time or not there might be a question. This witness himself said the count was finished within half an hour after the poll was closed. When asked what he meant, he said, "I think the votes were counted and the vote tallied." I called his attention to that fact that half an hour was an absurdity and he then said it might be an hour, when in fact it could not be, according to the number of votes cast on republican or democratic tally, until nearly midnight, and that was the fact as proved by many witnesses; and yet he says that an hour after the closing of the poll this tallying took place. He was probably telling the truth, but he was so stupid as to mistake a portion of a tally-list for the whole tally-list, so that Fleming stands unsupported on the announcement of the votes.

Mr. COOPER. What about Dukes's testimony?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that the Senator knows what Dukes did swear to! I do not think that anybody knows. Dukes, I think, is the stupidest man I ever saw. I will throw him in to aid Fleming. But there were some dozen witnesses who were called to testify as to when the announcement of the vote was made; when the count-ing was all done and the certificate was made out, and they said that the announcement was made in the presence of the whole crowd 399 votes republican, and 180 democratic; and it was received with shouts on the outside. The republicans felt good and raised a general cheer. on the outside. The republicans felt good and raised a general cheer. If the announcement had been made as suggested by my friend, of 150 or 160 less majority than they had a right to expect according to previous elections, if it was only half the majority that would be warranted by the fact that they had these large republican clubs in the neighborhood to which I have alluded, there would have been no shout, there would have been astonishment, there would have been chagrin, there would have been suspicion at once; but on the contrary, when the vote was announced which gave them not guite. been chagrin, there would have been suspicion at once; but on the contrary, when the vote was announced which gave them not quite the majority they had the previous years, but a majority of 239, they thought "that is very well," and they raised a general shout over it, and that was nearly at midnight, the time when the vote was actually counted. But my friend, as no doubt he feels is his duty, sees fit to take the scattering and doubtful testimony of a single man scarcely supported by anylody else instead of the testimony of ten scarcely supported by anybody else, instead of the testimony of ten or a dozen men who testified the other way. I do not think that that springs entirely with him from the consideration that those who testified the other way were colored men.

Now the Senator says to take Archer No. 2 and Archer No. 1 this year and there was a set-off of the votes between the republican and the democrats, and that that is right, and shows that the return of the democrats, and that that is right, and shows that the return of the two taken together was perfectly natural. It would be the most unnatural thing in the world that that could be so. At the previous election the democrats cast at that poll only 25 votes while the republicans cast 293; and yet we are to believe that it is perfectly natural that the thing should have been so suddenly equalized. But to show that that was not exceptional, at the election before that the democrats only cast 44 votes. In fact it is a strong republican precinct, and had been so year after year ever since the time of "the surrender," as one of the witnesses expressed it; I believe meaning ever since the emancipation proclamation; and there were reasons this year why it should be more peculiarly republican. It was in testimony that the white population had not increased at all, and by the way we proved by the living testimony of some four or five white men that they voted the republican ticket at that poll, re-enforcing the colored men. It was in evidence that there is a large body of the colored men. It was in evidence that there is a large body of Government land near Archer subject to homestead entry, and that colored men have come in there from Georgia and other States within the last two years in very considerable numbers, and have taken up this land and increased the colored population of the precinct, and that we have the recent that the state of the recent that that was the reason they had these large republican clubs; it was a strong republican settlement.

I have already alluded to the fact that there was a claim of 136 democratic votes, and no democrat, including Fleming himself, could find more than twelve or thirteen democrats to represent them, an obvious fraud in itself. If there was any stuffing it was done right there, in order to make the appearance of 136 democratic votes, and at the other poll there was a democratic vote cast of some 98. I should like to inquire how these two precincts became equalized with should like to inquire how these two precincts became equalized with this large influx of colored republicans into the neighborhood, forming republican clubs, being very enthusiastic during the whole day, taking particular pains with reference to the ticket they voted, and seeing that they were not cheated, skillfully avoiding taking and voting the bogus tickets which were got up kindly for them by the democrats with such names as "Marrullus Steen" instead of "Marcellus L. Stearns," making the print look like the print of the republican ticket, and otherwise fabricating a ticket, by means of which they wanted to cheat and deceive colored men who could not read they wanted to cheat and deceive colored men who could not read and write into throwing away their votes; and upon those very tickets so made up, Marrulius Steen instead of Marcellus L. Stearns for governor, they had put Hayes and Wheeler for President and Vice-Bresident, with the democratic electors, intending to steal votes for electors out of these men, to cheat and rob them. When men would de that as part of the party machinery will you tell me they would be the party machinery will you tell me they would electors out of these men, to cheat and rob them. When men would do that as part of the party machinery will you tell me they would not stuff a few votes in a box? If they would take a man and suppress his right in that way, cheat him in taking his ticket out of his hands and substituting for it another, and inducing him to put that ticket in the box in ignorance of the fraud thus committed upon him—do you mean to tell me that a man who would do that would hesitate about stuffing a lot of names into a poll-list or stuffing a democratic ticket into a box? That itself goes to show that that poll was attacked by men who were determined to destroy its honest value to the republicans, and who intended to cause such an appearance, such a simulation of frand, that it should be thrown out by the State returning board, and failing in that, at any rate to have the advantage of the ballots which they would stuff into it.

There was scarcely anything in connection with the democratic party at Archer No. 2 which did not badly savor of fraud. The efect of this particular machinery which they set to work in sending Fleming there, and Fleming intrusted with the list of names, omit-ting Danzee and men of that sort from his list when they voted under his eye, then going off the very moment he could get access to the poll-list in order to parade this list of names, which probably had been suggested to him by the very men who had put the list into the poll-list—all this goes to show a sinister purpose, stained with fraud from beginning to end.

Now the Sevetor thinks it

Now, the Senator thinks it was a horrible thing that Black and Now, the Senator thinks it was a horrible thing that Black and Vance, who were responsible for the safe-keeping of this ballot-box, did not put it, along with the box of Archer No. 1, in charge of the democratic inspector, or in partnership with the democratic inspectors. The precincts were just as distinct as those of Waldo and Archer. There was no necessary connection between Archer No. 1 and No. 2, except that people lived in the same neighborhood; no more connection than there is between the different wards of a city. Different persons voted at the different boxes, and they simply were located in the same building because it was a central place and because the vote the same building because it was a central place and because the vote was so large that it would be difficult to comply with the State law which requires the canvass to be made that night and without adjournment; and therefore they were divided into Archer No. 1 and Archer No. 2; but the officers of Archer No. 1 had nothing to do with Archer No. 2. The officer of Archer No. 1 was running around the streets with the box under his arm. He did not have his box at home or any other place of safe-keeping. He had not invited any United States marshals to go there to see that that box was not touched, or other officers of the election, but the box of Archer No. 2 was deother officers of the election, but the box of Archer No. 2 was deposited in a safe place, in plain sight of a dozen persons who were in the room and sat up all night guarding it, among those United States marshals, and there was no objection made to anybody, democrat or republican, coming and staying there in the large room where it was contained, in order to see that nobody tampered with it. But the demand that was made upon Black and Vance was, not that this box should be put with the other and be together guarded, but, by the testimony of half dozen men, the demand was made that Black and Vance should give up that box to Blitch who had charge of No. 1. Vance should give up that box to Blitch, who had charge of No. 1, Vance should give up that box to Blitch, who had charge of No. 1, who was the democratic inspector, who was running around the streets with his box, and let him take charge of it till morning; that they sent over and over messengers to Black and Vance demanding possession of that box. That was the testimony of both Black and Vance, and of Adams and of several others, United States marshals and others who were present. The demand was not that they should be put together and jointly watched, but that possession of this box should be given up to these parties who demanded it, and they very naturally refused to do it and should have refused to do it. If they ever had done that it would have been thrown out, because there would have been some further manipulations with that box so that there would have been no correspondence at all between it and the there would have been no correspondence at all between it and the

But, more than that, the officers of No. 2 did take care of their box; they did it all openly and above-board, inviting the attention of whoever saw fit to observe their operations. They took it publicly the next day and deposited it in the county clerk's office. Several witnesses were called in by my ingenious friend in order to show that something must have happened on the transit, and in every case those witnesses testified exactly supporting the testimony of Black and Vance. The box was given into the possession of the county clerk, and then that peculiar election machinery known to the State of Florida, but I trust not to many States was set in exaction on of Florida, but I trust not to many States, was set in operation, and the democratic party immediately took possession of that box; they took possession of the room in which it was contained, the county clerk's office. They organized a guard, which contained not a single republican, under the lead of a captain of a rifle club at Archer. They publican, under the lead of a captain of a rifle club at Archer. marshaled a dozen or two democrats who staid there every night to guard, as they said, the room in which this ballot-box was contained, to keep it from the republican colored bull-dozers. Of course that was their object! And they were so jealous of the republicans that they would not allow even one of them to be a witness of their trans-action; and the room in which it was contained had rickety shutters, without fastenings, and broken panes of glass, and a man could get in and out at pleasure, as was proved by the county clerk and by other witnesses. This office had been presented as a nuisance by the grand jury and it required that there should be a better room for the county clerk's purposes. Into this room the democrats for nights before the county canvassing board met had access as they pleased. They kept out everybody from being a witness of their proceedings unless they were of their own faith.

Mr. COOPER. Does the Senator pretend to say that they had access except by breaking open the window?

cess except by breaking open the window?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes; I mean to say the testimony shows that the shutters are unfastened from the outside without trouble and the windows opened. I do not think they could have done it honestly, if that is what my friend means. I think, if they did it, they added to the crime of tampering with the ballot-box the crime of burglary.

Mr. COOPER. They could not without breaking in.

Mr. SARGENT. Not at all; they could not get in unless they went through the windows. They could not get through the windows unless they opened the rickety shutters and pushed up the windows; but that was very easily done. It is a singular fact that this ballot-box was so treated that when the county canvassing board examined the box they found the screws were all loose as if they had been opened, and was in that condition when handed in before the House committee. It was in that condition when I myself examined it. I knew it was proved to be the fact before the House committee and before the county canvassing board, and, therefore, I did not care whether it was brought in before our committee or not. I did not send for it. In that box there were not found even the number of tickets which the democrats said were cast there; the 180 and the 136 were not there at all.

Mr. COOPER. Two hundred and seventy-seven.
Mr. SARGENT. Showing that somebody had taken those ballots out of the box. Whose interest was it to take them out of the box: the republicans who were contending for the big number that was cast or the democrats who were contending that a smaller number was cast? Obviously it was the interest of the democratic party to tamper with that box and reduce it below the number of ballots which the republicans said ought to be found there and which would corre spond with the announcement which they said was made on the night the election canvass was made. So here was the fraud. I think he would be a bold man who would stand up and reason on these circumstances, and say absolutely that burglary was committed by those men who watched that box; and he would be just as bold a man who would say that there was not a fraud committed by abstracting the ballots from that box by the party who wanted to subtract them to make out a case. The opportunity was in the hands of the democratic party, which excluded republicans from being witnesses of their cratic party, which excluded republicans from being witnesses of their proceedings.

But the Senator bears with some stress upon the point of the manner in which these election returns were signed. They were signed by Black and by Vance. There is no doubt about that. The evidence is that there were duplicate returns, that one of these duplicates was signed in addition by Green R. Moore, and that with reference to the other, which exactly resembled it in every respect, Moore said, "I have a sore finger and you write for me;" and Floyd Dukes merely made his mark by touching the pen. So one set was signed by all the officers and the other was signed by two persons and by a third by his request and by a fourth by touching the pen, the only way a person who does not write does sign his name. If that is not the testimony, my recollection is certainly very much at fault.

Mr. COOPER. Green R. Moore said he signed one return, but not the one we had before us.

Mr. SARGENT. I thought my friend must have forgotten it; I am glad he has made that explanation. The one we had before us happened to be the one which was signed by Vance and Black and to which, at his own request, Green R. Moore's name had been written and Floyd Dukes's had been signed by Black, Floyd Dukes touching the pen. The other three were signed by the three and by the signing of the cross. That explanation, I think, rebuts any presumption arising from the remarks of the Senator. The returns were duly signed. There is no contradiction at all upon that point, and the returns correspond with the figures sworn by Black and Vance and others as announced to the crowd at the time the count closed.

nounced to the crowd at the time the count closed.

The Senator thinks it is a very singular circumstance that Leon County was not investigated by the Senate committee. Why, it is a very singular circumstance, if my friend who was there within ten miles of where it was alleged there were gross republican frauds, he being the minority of the committee, and all his requests being complied with, (for any witnesses that he wanted we were willing he should have, and we certainly could have got one ten miles if he had asked it,) did not want to prove these republican frauds.

Mr. COOPER. My friends of the House committee did it for me.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well. Suppose I was satisfied with the probing of the House committee and did not see fit to do it, is it any more strange in that respect? 'It might be strange if I was anxious to find republican frauds.

to find republican frauds.

Mr. COOPER. If the Senator will say that he was satisfied, I have no complaint to make.

Mr. SARGENT. I was satisfied that there was a minority on that committee conscientious and able, like the minority on mut-tee, and I was satisfied from what they told me from day to day that there were no frauds there; that there was a vigorous attempt to show that there were republican frauds, but that it was a failure, that the case was falling all to pieces. I was satisfied of that. I had plenty of work on my hands, and I intended to work, and so did the committee. During the month we spent in Florida there was very little waste of time. If the Senator should name some other county that was not examined I should probably have to make the same remark in reference to it.

If the Senator says I overlooked republican frauds it might be believed by his party friends that I was not trying to find them; but that he was not searching for republican frauds, that he did not desire to probe them, would be a very singular circumstance and the only thing singular about it. I say I was satisfied that the minority of the House committee were attending to Leon County. At most there were only a few votes, at most there was only a dispute as to from 30 to 74 votes, arising out of two circumstances, one was that there were tickets of a smaller size than were usually circulated found in the box, republican tickets, and therefore it was said at once those must have been stuffed; and the other was that there were names of persons found upon a particular poll-list who were alleged not to have voted at that precinct.

I found out two things in reference to that. In the first place, that the republicans, on account of certain intimidation which occurred in different portions of that State, printed a small ticket to paste inside democratic tickets; and also, to prevent the democratic means of cheating a republican who could not read out of his vote, where the ticket resembled in size and other appearances the democratic ticket, ticket resembled in size and other appearances the democratic ticket, had caused to be printed a smaller-sized ticket, and that those tickets were voted at that precinct. There was proof that those tickets were voted at that precinct, as I was informed. In other words, the allegation was being distinctly disproved. And with reference to the other proposition, I was informed, and the House minority will bear me out in the report they made, that the democrats did not try to prove the politics of the voters who double-voted at this precinct or prove that they voted the republican ticket. I have taken the trouble to run through the testimony taken by the House committee in reference to Leon County, and I cannot find that they do show anywhere that where there was double-voting the man who double-voted voted the republican ticket. He may have voted the democratic ticket, and it is much more likely he would do so, that a white man should come forward and simulate a colored man, than that a colored man in that country would dare come forward and say "I am John Jones," whom a dozen men might know to be a white man. The influence of fear would restrain the colored man from resorting to such things for fear vengeance would fall on him, while the white man might afford to take that chance, knowing he would be sustained, if any complaint was made, by the white men. So, I say, reasoning on the probabilities, if there was double-voting at that precinct, it was by the democrats. The House committee stopped short of finding out who did the double-voting. Considering these things, looking at the small number of votes involved, as the investigation was going on to my entire satisfaction by the members of the minority of the House committee, we did not need to stop longer to investigate it.

My friend certainly does not think the minority should not be had caused to be printed a smaller-sized ticket, and that those tickets mittee, we did not need to stop longer to investigate it.

My friend certainly does not think the minority should not be listened to. A minority sometimes is very wise; my friend is very wise; and I listen to him with great pleasure. Here is a minority of the the House committee, I think equally conscientious and wise with my friend. What do they say? Let me read from their report:

The evidence clearly establishes the fact that the election in this precinct [Leon County] was conducted in perfect compliance with the laws of the State and the regulations issued by the secretary of state. So fairly was the election managed that Amos Rouse, the democratic inspector who was soured in the morning because Isaac Dent was elected inspector to fill his place, testified that he told Mr. Bowes just before the polls were closed that he had seen nothing wrong.

They go on and discuss the matter for two or three pages, showing that I have stated it correctly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask the Senator in what part of the State of Florida the testimony shows that intimidation existed? I have never yet been able to see the testimony, although I have been very anxious to see it. I know "exhibits" have been published, but the main testimony has not been.

Mr. SARGENT. I am very sorry to tell the Senator that I have not yet got the testimony; I hope to get it soon. I have got a portion of it, but am waiting for an index, which will be made very soon. It is possible that I have the part of it that will give the Senator the information he wants. It was in Jefferson County, I can say. Is the Senator unaware of what took place in Jefferson County? Mr. JONES, of Florida. So far as the testimony before the Senate committee was concerned, I am; for I have never yet been able to ascertain what it was.

Mr. SARGENT. I can state to the Senator what took place in Jefferson County.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I should prefer to read the testimony.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I should prefer to read the testimony.

Mr. SARGENT. I assure the Senator it would not please him to know the facts of what took place in Jefferson County. I think it was the unanimous opinion of the committee—I say so in the presence of my friend from Tennessee—that a gross outrage was committed upon the rights of citizens in Jefferson County which had the effect to intimidate republican voters.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Was it not made to appear that the vote of Jefferson County at the last election was republican, and was largely increased over the former vote?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that I made that comparison. That does not make any difference. I am not speaking about that. A presidential election naturally increases the vote of all parties. But I do say that men acted in total disregard of the laws of both God and man in behalf of the democratic party. In Jefferson County there were acts in behalf of the democratic party which were villainous, for which there could be no defense. They took men who were marching along the road—

Mr. COOPER. That was in Columbia County.

Mr. SARGENT. I mean Columbia County. I say there were acts in behalf of the democratic party there for which there can be no excuse and which the Senator himself would blush—I know he would be a support of the machinery in that blush—to defend, and which were a part of the machinery in that county in behalf of the democratic party, and which made votes,

Mr. COOPER. I dislike to interrupt the Senator-

Mr. SARGENT. I will yield with pleasure.
Mr. COOPER. If he charges that rascality to the democratic party, he has no proof of that. There were four democrats that did a wrong; but as far as the democratic party was concerned, it was not in that. As far as the proof shows there were four or five democrats that did a wrong, a gross wrong.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I do not know what would make the democratic party a particeps criminis in the crime. I know the object of the crime was to break up a republican club and that it succeeded, that the object was to compel the colored men to join a democratic club and it succeeded in that, to compel them to vote for "Tilden, Hendricks, and reform" and it succeeded. Now who will say that the democratic party is not responsible for it? You might as well say the democratic party is not responsible for this transaction in Oregon where the effort was made to buy a republican elector. I do not think my friend is responsible for it as one of the democratic party, and I think a great many, a majority, of the men in the democratic party would repudiate such a transaction. The only thing is for democrats to know what deeds are done in the name of the democratic party.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senater will excuse me, I would prefer not be interrupted. Now, with reference to Jefferson County, it is in proof there, the Senator may call it intimidation or what he pleases, that there were resolutions passed at democratic meetings that they would give 25 per cent. advantage to republicans who either would not vote or would vote the democratic ticket, advantage in business, advantage in the renting of lands, that they would not give employed. advantage in the renting of lands; that they would not give employ-ment to men who voted the republican ticket; that they would dis-criminate in favor of either those who would not vote at all or of those who would vote the democratic ticket. It was also in evidence those who would vote the democratic ticket. It was also in evidence that men by the scores were deterred from voting by these threats, call them intimidation or what you please. I think it is a very unfair means of electioneering and contrary to the principles of republican liberty. If the democratic party is responsible for it, the democratic party is responsible for a very bad thing.

Take Duval County. There, as the evidence shows, they had a series of marked tickets, marked on a numbering machine from nothing up to ten thousand, and the repeated serial numbers were printed in blue ink in the way the figures are stamped on a Treasury note. They circulated these tickets around and gave them to republicans, and said, "We want you to vote that ticket;" and they took the name of the man and the number of the ticket which they gave him, and afterward examined the ballot-boxes for the purpose of seeing that and afterward examined the ballot-boxes for the purpose of seeing that these tickets were put in the box. Yes, sir, they examined the ballot-box to see if these men's tickets were in the box. We found such tickets—ten in one, seventy in another, three in another, and so forth. The evidence shows that they carried that on in a number of counties. The evidence before us was with particular reference to Duval County, but the evidence before the returning board related to other counties. They printed over ten thousand of them, circulated them generally, and compelled men to vote them under threat of loss of employment. Men compelled men to vote them under threat of loss of employment. Men lost employment for not voting these tickets.

Gentlemen talk about intimidation. I do not know whether you call that intimidation or not. It is threatening a man's interests, if not threatening his life; it is threatening to starve his family, if not to poison his family. I think that that is intimidation. It is contrary to public morals. By that means Tilden and Hendricks got a great number of votes in Florida that they were not entitled to. If it was not to intimidate or to force a vote that way, but merely to find if men who promised to vote the ticket had done so, that is something not to be allowed certainly not where the law requires a secret ballot. not to be allowed, certainly not where the law requires a secret ballot, which is the law in that State. Furthermore, it shows that the democratic party had no confidence in the promise of the colored men to vote their ticket, otherwise they would not have had them watched. But that they were watched goes to show the theory of my friends that colored men vote the democratic ticket is all wrong. His party friends do not believe it.

This system of denying a man bread unless he votes one political ticket or another is certainly un-American. Here they gave certificates to men who would vote the democratic ticket certifying their right to live, to get employment, to support their little ones, and so on. I know nothing more atrocious than this. This is an assassination of public and private rights. It is the very worst form of intimida-tion, and no ballot-box can be pure where such things as these take

I have no desire to prolong this debate; but I wish to say one word in closing with reference to this case of Duval County, which my friend who ordinarily is so clear-sighted cannot see differs from that of Baker County. In Baker County there was not a board assembled, except that on which was the county judge, which had any power under the State law to make a canvass. The canvass is required to be made in the presence of three officers. Their presence is absolutely necessary. Anything short of that is not a canvass. There were simply a county clerk and a justice of the peace present in Baker County, and the returns signed by those only, and there being no explanation accompanying the returns showing why there was not another person present, it vitiated and necessarily vitiated that. I know that the decision of the supreme court requires that in such a case the returns shall be thrown out. And although the State board, actuated by a spirit of fairness, took those returns and corrected them by going back to the precinct returns, by which the democratic party gained, the supreme court came in and said "No; you must take returns that are absolutely regular, if you do anything about them at all." Therefore, after that decision they took the regular returns, which had some precincts omitted, perhaps not for sufficient reasons. For instance, it was shown that one man had offered to vote at a precinct and was told to "Go away from here: we don't want any damped

For instance, it was shown that one man had offered to vote at a precinct and was told to "Go away from here; we don't want any damned republican voting at these polls;" and so he left. That is alleged. That was the reason given by the sheriff who was before us.

Mr. COOPER. No.

Mr. SARGENT. The sheriff stated that that was the reason why it was done. I do not say that that was proved or was not. In the testimony taken by the House committee, they state that that is the reason, state as the fact that the county judge, being called before them, testified that that was the fact and that is the reason why it was thrown out. Now I do not think that the rejection of a single vote in that way, provided it was shown that only one man's vote was thrown out. Now I do not think that the rejection of a single vote in that way, provided it was shown that only one man's vote had been rejected, would have been sufficient; but I say that an election carried on in that spirit, where republicans are told even in a single instance, "You shall not vote here; we don't want any damned republicans voting at this poll," is very doubtful in its results. That is not an election by the people; that is not a poll of the votes of the people. Although only one republican might have come there and insisted upon voting, fifty behind him might have gone away and not insisted on voting because they say we cannot vote at this poll. Those consequences might follow; the thing was not traced out. We do not know whether it was so or not; we do not know how many republicans there were who wanted to vote and who were bluffed off by this man being sent away and refused a chance to vote. I say the by this man being sent away and refused a chance to vote. I say the reason may not have been sufficient; it may have been misguided zeal that induced the county judge and the sheriff and the justice of the peace, who assembled to canvass these returns, to throw out the precinct for that, and for another reason relating to another precinct, precinct for that, and for another reason relating to another precinct, where there were quite a number of persons who it was considered were illegally registered and who had intermixed their illegal ballots with the true votes so that they could not be separated. The reasons may not have been good at all; but the face of the returns, which my friend contends for, showed that those were the true returns which were sent up by the county judge, the sheriff, and the justice of the peace. If they were not that, then no returns were made at all of that county, because the other papers were not legal returns; not because only two signed them, but because only two canvassed them in Baker County. in Baker County.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question ?

question?

Mr. SARGENT. Not at this moment. I want to make my statement, and then I will yield with pleasure. In Duval County there were present at the canvass the county judge, the clerk, and the justice of the peace, as the law requires. The county judge was there for the purpose. After they were in session he moved to adjourn. The motion was voted down and he remained; he remained until the whole thing was done clear through. They took all the precincts; they conducted the canvass in an entirely honorable way; they unquestionably discharged their duty according to the law, and there will be no dispute upon that. They certainly had the right; my friend assents to that. And then when they got through and they came down to the signing of the names, the county judge refused to sign. Did that vitiate the action of the board of which he was one? The law does not require that all shall sign. The law requires the three to make the canvass. The canvass was made by them then and three to make the canvass. The canvass was made by them then and there, the county judge observing everything that went on and not withdrawing; but when the other two had signed and invited his signature, because he refused it, that is to disfranchise the people of signature, because he refused it, that is to disfranchise the people of the county! Was there ever anything so absurd? There is the difference between Baker and Duval Counties. In one case there was a legal canvass made by the three officers; in the other case the pretended return of the clerk, and justice was not founded upon any legal canvass at all. The only legal canvass under the State law that was made was by the three officers. Now I will yield to allow the Senator to ask the question which he desired to ask.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. How was the fact of the judge's presence at the Duval County canvass made to appear before the State canvassing board unless by the authentication of the two officers?

Mr. SARGENT. By a statement accompanying the returns; and vassing board unless by the authentication of the two officers?

Mr. SARGENT. By a statement accompanying the returns; and furthermore as being admitted by the parties, who appeared there and tried it as a lawsuit before that body, the democratic counsel admitting the fact and the republican counsel asserting it. Nobody disputed it. The verification of the fact came up with the returns themselves. It was attacked by nobody; and the democratic investigation went off to examine the county upon the theory that the State canvassing board had a right to go behind the county returns and look into the matters of individual and precinct votes.

Now, I am aware of the fact that in a case like this testimony will addressitistly with different force to different minds. I do not feel at all intolerant to my friend for the view he has taken of the testimony of the various witnesses. He has a perfect right to his view of it. I do not know but that the constitution of our respective minds compels us to take entirely different views of the matter; and it may be perfectly natural and also excusable if my friend, upon reading a dozen pages of testimony, by his peculiar system, takes all that was testified to by the democrats and rejects everything that was testified to by the rethe democrats and rejects everything that was testified to by the democrats and rejects everything that was testified to by the republicans, no matter how many in number. That would be excusable perhaps under the temptation, and possibly under the temptation of my bias and all that I may do the same thing. I only say in this matter that any one who is unprejudiced and impartial, especially any one who stood aside and saw these things going on and who will take this testimony of the House and Senate committees, I think must admit that the republicans did vindicate the good name of their party. I should be very happy indeed to be able to agree that the democrats had acted upon the same principles throughout the State.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, it is due to myself to say that up to this time I have not been able to see the testimony taken by the Senate committee in Florida. This whole discussion is founded upon that testimony, known only I think to the members of the committee. It will certainly be apparent to everybody that they have a great advantage over myself, although I represent in part the State in this Chamber, and other Senators in regard to those facts. This discussion has proceeded upon the idea that this testimony was here, and Senators have addressed themselves to us as though we were familiar with it.

were familiar with it.

I wish to say that up to this time I have never been able to see the testimony taken in the Florida investigation; and I would not in justice to myself and in a disposition to do justice to the distinguished Senator from California undertake to discuss the matter without hav-Senator from California undertake to discuss the matter without having had an opportunity to read that evidence. What it is I know not. Of course I have to accept what the Senator from California and my friend from Tennessee say in regard to it. I know something about the Alachua County frauds, which I gathered from the investigation that was had by the State canvassing board; but I do not know what was proven before the committee in the State. I will also state that when I get an opportunity to read that testimony I may take occasion to address a few remarks to the Senate in regard to the investition into the election in Florida. tion into the election in Florida.

Mr. WHYTE. Inasmuch as we can proceed with no legislative business, as I understand the House of Representatives has taken a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock, I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and forty-six min-ntes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, February 19, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 17, 1877.

The House re-assembled at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REPORT OF THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House at this time a communication, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., February 17, 1877.

Sir: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the House of Representatives that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral vote from the State of Louisiana, and has transmitted said decision to the President of the Senate, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses according to said act.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,

President of the Commission.

Hon. Samuel. J. Randall, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The communication was laid on the table.

Mr. LAMAR. I send up for adoption a resolution, on which I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that the House of Representatives will be prepared at eleven o'clock a. m. on Monday to receive the Senate in the Hall, for the purpose of proceeding under the provisions of the act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Before that question is put, I rise, noticing the message from the Senate—

The SPEAKER. That is not the privilege of the gentleman.

Mr. KASSON. It is a privilege, I submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be seated.

Mr. KASSON. I raise the point of order—

Mr. KASSON. Does the Chair permit me to make a point of order?

[Cries of "Regular order!"] I address the Chair, not the other side.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. KASSON. That the Secretary of the Senate is now at the bar with a message from that body pertinent to the question on which we are to vote.

Several Members. How do you know that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, it was declared agreed to.

Several members called for a division.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the question of order?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I desire to make a point of order upon the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] that under the law the House cannot take a recess beyond ten o'clock or the encountries day.

on the succeeding day.

Mr. LAMAR. I did not move for a recess.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will be kind enough to refer the Chair to that clause in the law to which he alludes.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The attention of the Chair has been called to it heretofore.

The SPEAKER. Not in connection with this point of order, with great respect to the gentleman from Illinois. What provision of law is it upon which the gentleman makes his point of order against the made no motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER. This is not a motion for a recess. The gentleman from Illinois probably has not listened to the reading of it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Will the Chair allow the resolution to be read again?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will, for the information of the gentleman from Illinois.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded on the question of seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; there being—ayes 165, noes 104. The main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Gorham, its Secretary, announced that he was directed to inform the House that the president of the electoral commission had notified the Senate that the commission had arrived at a decision on the question submitted to them in relation to the electoral votes of the State of Louisiana, and that the Senate was now ready to meet the House to receive the same and proceed with the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. C. C. SNIFFEN, one of his secretaries, announced that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles, namely:

An act (H. R. No. 967) authorizing the survey of certain townships in Michigan and making an appropriation therefor; and An act (H. R. No. 4556) to remove the political disabilities of Reuben Davis, of Mississippi.

Mr. LAMAR moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAMAR. I submit the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House take a recess until ten o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to yield to me for a moment to make a privileged report in order that it may be printed.

Mr. HURLBUT. I demand the regular order.
Mr. HOSKINS. I object.
Mr. SAYLER. I am sure there will be no objection on the other side of the House, or on this, when my purpose is stated. It is merely to make a report from the committee on South Carolina in order that may be printed.
Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 153, noes 108.
Mr. RUSK demanded the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 147, nays 107, not voting 36; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at one o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at ten o'clock Monday, February 19.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that no business be done until the hour fixed for the reception of the Senate—eleven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Say until ten minutes before eleven.
Mr. WOOD, of New York. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maine that if there be any business that would not be objected to by any gentleman, such as the reference of papers, that might be done.
Mr. HALE. The trouble about that is that so few members are here that something might come in in that way which might be objectionable.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The gentleman would have the right to object to anything. He would hold in his own hands entirely the power to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House take a further recess until ten minutes to eleven.

Mr. HALL. I did not move that the House take a recess, but asked unanimous consent that no business be done until then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest that the four front rows of seats on the right of the Chair be reserved for the use of the

At eleven o'clock a. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by its President pro tempore and its Secretary, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

In accordance with the law, seats had been provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately upon his left; for the Senators, in the body of the Hall upon the right of the Presiding Officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the Hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the Clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint meeting of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session.

The objections presented to the certificates from the State of Louisiana having been submitted to the commission, the two Houses have reconvened to receive and consider the decision of that tribunal. The decision, which is in writing, by a majority of the commission, and signed by the members agreeing therein, will now be read by the Secretary of the Senate and be entered in the Journal of each House.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

**Electoral Commission, Washington, D. O., February 16, A. D. 1876.**

To the President of the Senate of the United States, presiding in the meeting of the two Honses of Congress under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877; "approved January 29, A. D. 1877:

The electoral commission mentioned in said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of Louisiana, and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act and has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that the votes of William P. Kellogg, J. Henri Bureb, Peter Joseph, Lionel A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, Aaron B. Levissee, Orlando H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, named in the certificate of William P. Kellogg, governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked numbers one (1) and three (3) by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely:

Eight votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President; and Eight votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of Ohio, for President; and Eight votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice-President.

Eight votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice-President.

The commission has by a majority of votes also decided, and does hereby decide and report, that the eight persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Louisiana.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears, upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in said act of Congress is competent and periment to the consideration of the subject, that the before-mentioned electors appear to have been lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, A. D. 1877, of the State of Louisiana and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States and the law.

And the commission has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that it is not competent under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the governor of the State of Louisiana on and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment by the returning officers for elections in the said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed electors, or by countre-proof to show that they had not; or that the determination of the said returning officers was not in accordance with the truth and the fact; the commission by a majority of votes being of opinion that it is not competent to prove that any of said persons so appointed electors as aforesaid held an office of trust or profit under the United States at the time when they were appointed or that they were ineligible under the laws of the State, or any other matter offered to be proved aliunde the said certificates and papers.

The commission is also of opinion by a majority of votes that the returning officers of elections who canvassed the votes at the election for electors in Louisiana were a legally constituted body by virtue of a constitutional law and that a vecancy in said body did not vitiate its proceedings.

The commission has also decided and does hereby decide by a majority of votes, and report that as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated that the paper purporting to be a certificate of the electoral votes of said State of Louisiana, objected to by TIMOTHY O. Howz and others, marked "N. C. No. 2" by the commission and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

Done at Washington the day and year first above written.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any objections to the decision of the commission

Mr. GIBSON. I have the honor to present the following objections to the decision and report of the electoral commission, signed by Senators and Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objections will be read by the Clerk of the House.

The Clerk of the House [Mr. Adams] and one of the reading clerks [Mr. Pettit] read the objections, and concluded at twelve twenty

p. m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there are members of the House who desire to add their names to these objections. Is there objection to granting this request?

Senator LOGAN. None whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and gentlemen desiring to attach their signatures will step up to the desk and sign their names.

and sign their names.

Mr. CONGER. Will it be in order to add a protest to that document?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will entertain any motion that is in order.

Many members then came forward and subscribed their names to the objections, which, with the signatures, are as follows:

The following objections are interposed by the undersigned, Senators and Representatives, to the decision made by the commission constituted by the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President And Vice-President, and the decisions of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," as to the true and lawful electoral vote of the State of Louisiana, for the following reasons, viz:

First. For that the said commission as guides to their action adopted the rejected resolutions. as follows:

"FRIDAY, February 16, 1877.

"The commission met at ten o'clock a.m., pursuant to adjournment, with closed doors, for the purpose of consultation on the question submitted relative to the offers of proof connected with the objections raised to the certificates of electoral votes from the State of Louisiana.

The "annexed paper" referred to in the foregoing is as follows:

We offer to prove that William P. Kellogg, who certifies, as governor of the State of Louisiana, to the appointment of electors of that State, which certificate is now before this commission, is the same William P. Kellogg who, by said certificate, was certified to have been appointed one of said electors. In other words, that Kellogg certified his own appointment as such elector.

2. That said Kellogg was governor de facto of said State during all the months of November and December, A. D. 1876.

CONSTITUTION OF LOUISIANA.

"ART. 117. No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit, except that of justice of the peace or notary public."

II.

II.

We offer to prove that said William P. Kellogg was not duly appointed one of the electors of said State in A. D. 1876, and that the certificate is untrue in fact. To show this we offer to prove—
(1) By certified copies of the lists made out, signed, and sworn to by the commissioners of election in each poll and voting-place in the State, and delivered by said commissioners to the clerk of the district court wherein said polls were established, except in the parish of Orleans, and in that parish delivered to the secretary of state, that at the election for electors in the State of Louisiana, on the 7th day of November 1sst, the said William P. Kellogg received for elector 6,300 votes less than were at said election cast for each and every of the following-named persons, that is to say: John McEnery, R. C. Wickliffe, L. St. Martin, E. P. Poché, A. De Blanc, W. A. Seay, R. G. Cobb, K. A. Cross. (Sec. 43, act 1872)

(2) In connection with the certified copies of said lists we offer to prove that the returning board, which pretended to canvass the said election under the act approved November 20, 1872, did not receive from any poll, voting-place, or parish in said State, nor have before them, any statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election in form as required by section 28 of said act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt inflaences which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, and peace-table vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting-place.

(3) We further offer to show that in many instances the supervisors of registration of the everal parishes willfully and fraudulently omitted from their consolidated statement, returned by them to the State returning board, the result and all mention of the votes given at certain polls or voting-places within their respective parishes, as shown to them by the returns and papers returned to said supervisors by the commi voting-places omitted as aforesaid from said consolidated statements of said supervisors.

And that the said returning board willfully and fraudulently neglected and refused to make any canvases of the majorities so omitted or estimate them in any way in their prefended determination that the said Kellogg was duly elected an elector at the election aforesaid.

(4) We offer to show that by the consolidated statements returned to said returning board by the supervisors of registration of the several parishes of the State of the result of the voting at the several polls or voting-places within their parishes respectively, it appeared that said Kellogg received at said election 3,459 less votes for elector thru the said McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blane, Seay, Cobb, and Cross, and each and every of them.

(5) We further offer to show that the said returning board willfully and fraudulently estimated and counted as votes in favor of said Kellogg 234 votes which were not shown to have been given at any poll or voting-place in said State, either by any consolidated statement returned to said returning board by any of the said supervisors, nor by the statements, lists, tally-sheets, or returns made by any commissioners of election to any of said supervisors, or which were before said returning board.

(6) We offer to prove that the votes cast and given at said election on the 7th of November last for the election of electors, as shown by the return made by the commissioners of election from the several polls or voting-places in said State, have never been compiled nor canvassed; and that the said returning board never even pretended to compile or canvassed; and that the said returning board never even pretended to compile or canvassed; and that the said returning board never even pretended to compile or canvassed; and that the said returning board never even pretended to compile or canvassed; and that the said returning board never even pretended to compile or canvass the returns made by said commissioner

Act of 1572, section 47: "Supervisor must forward." Act of 1572, section 2: "beard must carvase."

(7) We offer to prove that the votes given for electors at the election of November 7 last at the several voting-places or polls in said State have never been opened by the governor of the said State in presence of the secretary of state, they have been presented by the governor of said State over. In presence as aforesaid, examined the returns of the commissioners of election for said clection to assertian therefrom, nor has he ever, in such presence of the said State over. In presence as aforesaid, examined the returns of the commissioners of election for said clection to assertian therefrom, nor has he ever prevended so to . (Revised Statitus, section 2826.)

(8) We further offer to prove—

That the said William I. Kertflinate, by which he certified that himself and others had been duly appointed electors as aforesaid, well knew that said certificate was untrue in fact in that behalf, and that the the said Kellogg, then well knew that he, the said Kellogg, that that behalf, and the the presence of the said Kellogs, then well knew that he, the said Kellogg, that not received, of the legal votes case at the very present that the said said election and the said kellogs and the said kellogs, and the said Kellogs, then well knew that he, the said Kellogg, the said Kellogs and the said kellogs are clearly as a said election of the said kellogs and the said kellogs are clearly as a said clear to the said kellogs and the sai

And that said returning board, in pursuance of said unlawful combination and conspiracy aforesaid, and for the purpose of concealing the animus of said board and inspiring confidence in the public mind in the integrity of their proceedings, on the 18th day of November, A. D. 1876, adopted and passed a preamble and resolution, as follows:

lution, as follows:

"Whereas this board has learned with satisfaction that distinguished gentlemen of national reputation, from other States, some at the request of the President of the United States and some at the request of the national executive committee of the democratic party, are present in this city, with the view to witness the proceedings of this board in canvassing and compiling the returns of the recent election in this State for presidential electors, in order that the public opinion of the country may be satisfied as to the truth of the result and the fairness of the means by which it may have been attained; and
"Whereas this board recognizes the importance which may attach to the result of their proceedings, and that the public mind should be convinced of its justice by a knowledge of the facts on which it may be based: Therefore,

Be it resolved. That this board does hereby cordially invite and request five gentlemen from each of the two bodies named, to be selected by themselves respectively, to attend and be present at the meetings of this board while engaged in the discharge of its duties, under the law, in canvassing and compiling the returns and ascertaining and declaring the result of said election for presidential electors, in their capacity as private citizens of eminent reputation and high character, and as spectators and witnesses of the proceedings in that behalf, of this board."

But that said returning board, being convinced that a compilation and canvass of votes given at said election for presidential electors, made fairly and openly, would result in defeating the object of said corspiracy, and compelling said returning board to certify that said McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross had been at said election duly chosen, elected, and appointed electors by the said State of Louisiana; and, in pursuance of said unawful combination and conspiracy, did afterward, to wit, on the 20th day of November, A. D. 1576, adopt and pass the following rules for

"The returning officers, if they think it advisable, may go into secret session to consider any motion, argument, or proposition which may be presented to them; any member shall have the right to call for secret session for the above purpose."

"That the evidence for each contested poll in any parish, when concluded, shall be laid aside until all the evidence is in from all the contested polls in the several parishes where there may be contests, and after the evidence is all in the returning officers will decide the several contests in secret session; the parties or their attorneys to be allowed to submit briefs or written arguments up to the time fixed for the returning officers going into secret session, after which no additional argument to be received unless by special consent."

That the proceedings thus directed to be had in secret were protested against by the said McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross; but said board thereafter proceeded and pretended to complete their duties as such returning board; and did perform, execute, and carry out the most important duties devolving upon said board in secret, with closed doors, and in the absence of any member of their board belonging to the democratic party or any person whatever not a member of said board not belonging to the republican party.

That the said Wells, Anderson, Kenner, and Casanave, acting as said returning board, while engaged in the compilation and canvass aforesaid, were applied to to permit the United States supervisors of election, duly appointed and qualified as such, to be present at and witness such compilation or canvass.

That application was made to said returning board in that behalf, as follows:

To the president and members of the returning board of the State of Louisiana:

To the president and members of the returning board of the States of Louisiana:

Gentlemn: The undersigned, of counsel for United States supervisors of election, duly appointed and qualified as such, do hereby except, protest, and object to any ruling made this 20th day of November, 1876, or that hereafter may be made, whereby they are deprived of the right of being present during the entire canvass and compilation of the results of the election lately held in the State of Louisiana, wherein electors for President and Vice-President, and members of the Forty-fifth Congress were balloted for, and the result of which said board are now canvassing. That under the fifth section of the United States act of February 28, 1871, they are to be and remain where the ballot boxes are kept, at all times after the polls are open, until each and every vote cast at said time and place shall be counted, and the canvass of all votes polled to be wholly completed, and the proper and requisite certificate or returns made, whether said certificate or returns be required under any law of the United States, or any State, territorial, or municipal law.

That under said law of the United States, District Attorney J. R. Beckwith, under date of October 30, 1872, gave his written official opinion for the instruction and guidance of persons holding the office now held by protestants, wherein said United States district attorney said:

"It cannot be doubted that the duty of the supervisors extends to the inspection of the entire election from its commencement until the decision of its result. If the United States statutes were less explicit there still could be no doubt of the duty and authority of the supervisors to inspect and canvass every vote cast for each and every candidate, State, parechial, and Federal, as the law of the State neither provides nor allows any separation of the election for Representatives in Congress, &c., from the election of State and parish officers. The election is in law a single election, and the power of insp

In which opinion the attorney-general of the State of Louisiana coincided. Whereupon protestants claim admittance to all sessions of the returning board, and protest against their exclusion as unwarranted by law, as informed by their attorneys has been done and is contemplated to be done hereafter in said proceedings of said board.

But that said Wells, Anderson, Kenner, and Casanave, acting as such returning board, in further pursuance and execution of said unlawful combination and conspiracy, then and there refused to permit said United States commissioners of election to be present for the purpose aforesaid, but proceeded in their absence to the pretended compilation and canvass aforesaid.

That the said returning board, while in session as aforesaid, for the purpose aforesaid, to wit, on the 20th day of November, 1s76, adopted the following rule to govern their proceedings; that is to say:

That the sail returning board, while in session as aforesaid, for the purpose aforesaid, to wit, on the 20th day of November, 1576, adopted the following rule to govern their proceedings; that is to say:

"No ex parts affidavits or statements shall be received in evidence, except as a basks to show that such fraud, infundation, or older Illegal Practices had at some body officers of cleeton, or in verification of statements as required by law, shall be received in evidence as prima Jacis."

But that said board absequently, while sitting as aforesaid, for the purposes of the process of John McEnery, 10,290; for said R. C. Wickliffe, 10,293; for said L. St. Martin, 20,291; for said F. P. Poché, 10,289; for said A. De Blanc, 10,289; for said W. A. Seay, 10,291; for said R. A. Cobb, 10,261; for said K. A. Cross, 10,288; they, the said members of said returning board, then and there, well knowing that all of said votes which they neglected and refused to canvass and compile had been duly and legally cast at said election for presidential electors by legal voters of said State; and then and there, well knowing that had they considered, estimated, and counted, compiled, and canvassed said votes as they then and there well knew it was their duty to do, it would have appeared, and they would have been compelled to certify and return to the secretary of state, that said Kellogg had not been duly elected or appointed an elector for said State; but that a said election the said McEnery, the said Wickliffe, the said St. Martin, the said Poché, the said De Blanc, the said Seay, the said Cobb, and the said Cross had been duly elected and appointed presidential electors in said State.

And that by false, fraudulent, willful, and corrupt acts and omissions to act by said returning board as aforesaid in the matter aforesaid, and by said nonfeasance, misfeasance, and malfeasance of said returning board, as hereinbefore mentioned, the said returning board made to the secretary of state of said State the statement, certificate, and return upon which the said Kellogg, as de facto governor of said State, pretended to make his said false certificate, certifying that himself and others had been duly appointed electors for said State, as hereinbefore mentioned; and that the said extificate made by the said Kellogg, as de facto governor, each overy, and all were made in pursuance and execution of said unlawful and criminal combination and conspiracy, as was well known to and intended by each and every of the members of said returning board when they made their said false statement, certificate, and return to the secre

We further offer to prove—
That Oscar Joffrion was on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, supervisor of registration of the parish of Pointe Coupée, and that he acted and officiated as such supervisor of registration for said parish at the said election for presidential electors on that day; and that he is the same person who acted as one of the electors for said State, and on the 6th day of December, A. D. 1876, as an elector cast a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States.

IV.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, A. B. Levissee, who was one of the pretended college of electors of the State of Louisiana, and who in said college gave a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was at the time of such election a court commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, which is an office of honor, profit, and trust under the Government of the United States.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, O. H. Brewster, who was one of the pretended electors in the pretended college of electors of the State of Louisiana, and who in said college gave a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was at the time of such election as aforesaid holding an office of honor, profit, and trust under the Government of the United States, to wit, the office of surveyor-general of the land office for the district of Louisiana.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, 1876, Morris Marks, one of the pretended electors, who in said college of electors cast a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and a vote for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was, ever since has been, and now is holding and exercising the office of district attorney of the fourth judicial district of said State, and receiving the salary by law attached to said office.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, J. Henri Burch, who was one of the pretended electors, who in said pretended electoral college gave a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and a vote for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was holding the following offices under the constitution and laws of said State; that is to say: member of the board of control of the State penitentiary, also administrator of deaf and dumb asylum of said State, to both of which offices he had been appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate of said State, both being offices with salaries fixed by law, and also the office of treasurer of the parish school board for the parish of East Baton Rouge; and that said Burch, ever since the said 7th day of November, (and prior thereto,) has exercised and still is exercising the functions of all said offices and receiving the emoluments thereof.

VIII.

VIII.

We further offer to prove the canvass and compilation actually made by said returning board, showing what parishes and voting-places and polls were compiled and canvassed and what polls or voting-places were excluded by said returning board from their canvass and compilation of votes given for presidential electors; and we also offer to show what statements and returns of the commissioners of election and of the supervisors of registration were duly before said returning board.

IX.

We further offer to prove that a member of said returning board offered to receive a bribe, in consideration of which the board would certify the election of the Tilden electors.

We offer to prove that the statements and affidavits purporting to have been made and forwarded to said returning board, in pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of the election law of 1872, alleging riot, tumult, intimidation, and violence at or near certain polis, and in certain parishes, were faisely fabricated and forged by certain disreputable persons under the direction and with the knowledge of said returning board, and that said returning board, knowing said statements and affidavits to be false and forged, and that none of said statements or affidavits were made in the manner or form required by law, did knowingly, willfully, and fraudulently fail and refuse to canvass or compile more than 10,000 votes lawfully cast, as is shown by the statements of votes of the commissioners of election.

We further offer to prove—
That said returning board did willfully and fraudulently pretend to canvass and compile, and did promulgate as having been canvassed and compiled, certain votes for the following-named candidates for electors which were never cast, and which did not appear upon any tally-sheet, statement of votes, or consolidated statement or other return before said board, namely: J. H. Burch, 241; Peter Joseph, 1,322; L. A. Sheldon, 1,344; Morris Marks, 1,334; A. B. Levissee, 829; O. H. Brewster, 776; Oscar Joffrion, 1,384.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the decision of the commission?

Senator WALLACE. I offer the objection which I send to the desk, signed by Senators and Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection will be read by the Secretary of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and members of the House of Representatives, object to the decision of the electoral commission as to the electoral votes of the State of Louisiana, because—

First, the said decision was made in violation of the law under which said commission acts, in this, that by said act the said commission is required to decide whether any and what votes from such State are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and how many and what persons were duly appointed electors in said State; yet said commission refused to examine and ascertain who were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Louisiana and what votes from such State are within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Second. Because the act creating said commission was passed to the end that the commission would hear and examine evidence and honestly decide which electors in any disputed State were fairly and legally chosen; whereas the said commission refused to hear and consider evidence offered to show that the electors whose votes the said commission has decided shall be counted were not duly chosen, but falsely and fraudulently acted as such electors, as well as the evidence offered to show that the pretended certificates of election of said electors were produced by corruption and were wholly untrue.

Third. Because the said decision is in disregard of truth, justice, and law, and establishes the demoralizing and ominous dootrine that fraud, forgery, bribery, and perjury can lawfully be used as a means to make a President of the United States against the well-known or easily ascertained will of the people and of the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will read the objection.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, do object to the counting of the votes as recommended by eight members of the joint commission, and do protest against counting the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana, for there asons following, to wit:

First. It was not denied before the commission that the Tilden electors received a large majority of the votes cast.

Second. It was not denied before the commission that Wells and his associates, who styled themselves a returning board, were guilty of gross fraud; that their certificate given to the Hayes electors was false and fraudulent, and that the raction in canvassing the votes was in violation of the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana.

Third. The action of the eight members of said joint commission in declining to hear evidence of the above and other facts was a violation of the letter and spirit of the act under which said commission was created and of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States.

Accordingly (at twelve o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate withdrew.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 19, 1577-10 a. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recess having expired, the Senate resumes its session.

Mr. WITHERS. Information was sent to the Senate that the House would be ready to receive us at what hour to proceed with the count of the votes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At eleven o'clock.
Mr. WITHERS. Would it not be in order for us to take a recess

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having already taken a recess, another recess cannot be taken until a new question is raised a recess, another recess cannot be taken until a new question in the joint meeting.

Mr. WITHERS. Is that the construction of the act?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the construction.

Mr. WITHERS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at ten o'clock and fifty-six minutes a. m.) The House having notified the Senate that it would be ready to receive it at eleven o'clock, as it is within four minutes of that time, the Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives

The Senate returned to its Chamber at twelve o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m., and the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF LOUISIANA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having met the House of Representatives in joint meeting to receive a decision from the commission, and objections having been submitted, the two Houses separated for the purpose of allowing the two Houses to consider and decide upon those objections. The Chair will now lay before the Senate the decision of the commission.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless some Senator desires to have it read, the decision having been read in the joint meeting, I desire to submit a resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit three objections now, if the decision is not to be read.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the decision and the objections onght to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia insists upon the reading.

Mr. SARGENT. Of course if the objections and papers are to be read at length, there will be no opportunity for any discussion upon their contents, and I should like to inquire of the Senator from West Virginia if he desires that there shall be no discussion upon them.

Mr. WITHERS. How does the Senator make that out?

Mr. SARGENT. Because the time runs, the two hours commence at once

Mr. WITHERS. The objections must be read before we can consider them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will rule that when the debate commences, two hours can be occupied in debate. The time occupied in reading the decision or objections will not be included in the two hours.

Mr. SARGENT. That of course will remove my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two hours will be exclusive of that time. Does the Senator from West Virginia insist on the reading?

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a resolution and then I suppose that the Senator will have a right to ask for the reading of the papers:

Resolved. That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Is it in order to offer such a resolution until the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has submitted a resolution to be read for information. The Senator from West Virginia insists upon the reading of the decision. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

ELECTORAL COMMISSION, Washington, D. C., February 16, A. D. 1877.

The Secretary read as follows:

| Washington, D. C., February 16, A. D. 1877. |
| To the President of the Senate of the United States, presiding in the meeting of the two Houses of Congress, under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877, "approved January 29, A. D. 1877.

The electoral commission mentioned in said act having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates and papers accompanying the same of the electoral votes from the State of Louisiana and the objections thereto, submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same qursuant to said act, and has by a majority of vites decided, and does hereby decide, that the votes of William P. Kellogg, J. Duri B. The vites active activities, and has by a majority of vites decided, and does hereby decide, that the votes of William P. Kellogg, J. Duri B. The vites activities of William P. Kellogg, governor of said State, which votes ameetified by said persons as appears by the certificates submitted to the commission as aforesaid and marked Nos. one (1) and three (3) by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely, eight (8) votes for William A. Wheeler, of Now York, for Vice-President, and eight (3) votes for William A. Wheeler, of Now York, for Vice-President.

The commission has by a majority of votes also decided, and does hereby decide and report, that the eight persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Louisiana.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in said act of Congress is competent and perthent to the consideration of the subject, that the before-mentioned electors appear to have been

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator desire the objections to be read? If there is no objection, they will not be read.

Mr. DAVIS. If not read they ought to appear in the RECORD. I think the objections and the decision should go together.

Mr. BOGY. I should like to have the objections read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to having the papers read if the Senator desires; but I submit to the Senator from Missouri that the great body of Senators have heard the whole of these papers read in the House and that they will have been reinted twice in the Prein the House, and that they will have been printed twice in the REC-ORD without being read here. I really do not think it would be wise to cumber the RECORD with a repetition of the documents. It seems to me we ought not to cumber the RECORD three times with a long document which has been already printed in the RECORD and which will appear in the proceedings of the two Houses.

Mr. DAVIS. I for one shall insist that if not read the objections shall be printed in the RECORD. The whole proceedings ought to appear in the RECORD of this day's proceedings. This is the only time probably that these papers will come to the Senate in an official way, the objections having been made in the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The objections will appear in the RECORD to-morrow in the record of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. MORTON. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that the proceedings of the House will contain the objections, whether they are read here or not.

the proceedings of the House will contain the objections, whether they are read here or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from West Virginia that the objections having been read in joint meeting they will appear in the House Journal.

Mr. DAVIS. We suppose they will appear there, but we know nothing of that. There may be the same movement made there that is made here, for aught we know. Their appearing once would be sufficient if the papers do appear there, but they certainly ought to appear in to-day's proceedings of the Senate, in the Senate proceed. appear in to-day's proceedings of the Senate, in the Senate proceedings as well as in the House proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair only judges from the past. It has been done in the past in making up the Journals.

Mr. ALLISON. The papers will appear in the Journal of the joint meeting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state now that, if any Senator desires, they will appear in the Journal of the Senate without a formal reading.

Mr. BOGY. This is the most important business which this body has ever been called upon to perform. I do not attach much importance to the objection that the papers if read here will be printed twice. I desire that they shall be printed in the RECORD and I think the papers should be read in the Senate. It will take but a little time, and as I say, it is the most important proceeding that this body has ever been called upon to consummate, and I do not think that the consideration that the reading would consume some little time is of much importance.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Do I understand the Chair to state that the objections will be printed in the Journal without a formal reading?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that all the objections would be printed at length in the Journal of the House side.

Mr. EATON. Will they also appear in the RECORD of to-morrow morning

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the RECORD of to-morrow morning. Does the Senator from Missouri desire them to be read?

Mr. BOGY. I do not think it would take much time to read those objections and I should like to have them read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri insists upon their being read. The Secretary will read them.

The Secretary read as follows:

The following objections are interposed by the undersigned, Senators and Representatives, to the decision made by the commission constituted by the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decisions of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. The "annexed paper" referred to in the foregoing is as follows:

We offer to prove that William P. Kellogg, who certifies, as governor of the State of Louisiana, to the appointment of electors of that State, which certificate is now before this commission, is the same William P. Kellogg who, by said certificate, was certified to have been appointed one of said electors. In other words, that Kellogg certified his own appointment as such elector.

2. That said Kellogg was governor de facto of said State during all the months of November and December, A. D. 1876.

"ART. 117. No person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit. except that of justice of the peace or notary public."

II.

We offer to prove that said William P. Kellogg was not duly appointed one of the electors of said State in A. D. 1876, and that the certificate is untrue in fact. To show this we offer to prove—

(1) By certified copies of the lists made out, signed, and sworn to by the commissioners of election in each pell and voting-place in the State, and delivered by said commissioners to the clerk of the district court wherein said polls were established, except in the parish of Orleans, and in that parish delivered to the secretary of state, that at the election for electors in the State of Louisiana, on the 7th day of November last, the said William P. Kellogg received for elector 6,300 votes less than were at said election cast for each and every of the following-named persons, that is to say: John McEnery, R. C. Wickliffe, L. St. Martin, E. P. Poche, A. De Blanc, W. A. Seay, R. G. Cobb, K. A. Cross. (Sec. 43, act 1872.)

(2) In connection with the certified copies of said lists we offer to prove that the returning board, which pretended to canvass the said election under the act approved November 20, 1872, did not receive from any poll, voting-place, or parish in said State, nor have before them, any statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election in form as required by section 26 of said act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tunult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, and peaceable vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting-place.

they, said Wells, Anderson, Kenner, and Casanave, acting as said board, expressly refused to permit any democrat, or any person selected by democrats, to be present with said clerks and assistants while they were engaged in the compilation and canvass aforesaid or to examine into the correctness of the compilation and canvass made by said clerks and assistants as aforesaid.

And that said returning board, in pursuance of said unlawful combination and conspiracy aforesaid, and for the purpose of concealing the animus of said board and inspiring confidence in the public mind in the integrity of their proceedings, on the 18th day of November, A. D. 1876, adopted and passed a preamble and resolution, as follows;

"Whereas this board has learned with satisfaction that distinguished gentlemen of national reputation, from other States, some at the request of the President of the democratic party, are present in this city, with the view to witness the proceedings of this board in canvassing and compiling the returns of the recent election in this State for presidential electors in order that the public opinion of the country may be satisfied as to the truth of the result and the fairness of the means by which it may have been attained; and

"Whereas this board recognizes the importance which may attach to the result of their proceedings, and that the public mind should be convinced of its justice by a knowledge of the facts on which it may be based: Therefore,

"Beitresolved, That this board does hereby cordially invite and request five gentlemen from each of the two bodies named, to be selected by themselves respectively, to attend and be present at the meetings of this board while engaged in the discharge of its duties, under the law, in canvassing and compiling the returns and ascertaining and declaring the result of said election for presidential electors, in their capacity as private citizens of eminent reputation and high character, and as spectators and witnesses of the proceedings in that behalf, of this board.

"The returning officers, if they think it advisable, may go into secret session to consider any motion, argument, or proposition which may be presented to them; any member shall have the right to call for secret session for the above purpose."

"That the evidence for each contested poll in any parish, when concluded, shall be laid aside until all the evidence is in from all the contested polls in the several parishes where there may be contests, and after the evidence is all in the returning officers will decide the several contests in secret session; the parties or their attorneys to be allowed to submit briefs or written arguments up to the time fixed for the returning officers going into secret session, after which no additional argument to be received unless by special consent."

That the proceedings thus directed to be had in secret were protested against by the said McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross; but said board thereafter proceeded and pretended to complete their duties as such returning board; and did perform, execute, and carry out the most important duties devolving upon said board in secret, with closed doors, and in the absence of any member of their board belonging to the democratic party or any person whatever not a member of said board not belonging to the republican party.

That the said Wells, Anderson, Kenner, and Casanave, acting as said returning board, while engaged in the compilation and canvass aforesaid, were applied to to permit the United States supervisors of election, duly appointed and qualified as such, to be present at and witness such compilation or canvass.

That application was made to said returning board in that behalf, as follows:

To the president and members of the returning board of the State of Louisiana:

To the president and members of the returning board of the State of Louisiana:

To the president and members of the returning board of the States of Louisiana:

Gentlemen: The undersigned, of counsel for United States supervisors of election, duly appointed and qualified as such, do hereby except, protest, and object to any ruling made this 20th day of November, 1876, or that hereafter may be made, whereby they are deprived of the right of being present during the entire canvass and compilation of the results of the election lately held in the State of Louisiana, wherein electors for President and Vice-President, and members of the Forty-fifth Congress were balloted for, and the result of which said board are now canvassing. That under the fifth section of the United States act of February 28, 1871, they are to be and remain where the ballot-boxes are kept, at all times after the polls are open, until each and every vote cast at said time and place shall be counted, and the canvass of all votes polled to be wholly completed, and the proper and requisite certificate or returns made, whether said certificate or returns be required under any law of the United States, or any State, territorial, or municipal law.

That under said law of the United States, District Attorney J. R. Beckwith, under date of October 30, 1872, gave his written official opinion for the instruction and guidance of persons holding the office now held by protestants, wherein said United States district attorney said:

"It cannot be doubted that the duty of the supervisors extends to the inspection of the entire election from its commencement until the decision of its result. If the United States statutes were less explicit there still could be no doubt of the duty and authority of the supervisors to inspect and canvass every vote cast for each and every candidate, State, parochial, and Federal, as the law of the State neither provides nor allows any separation of the election for Representatives in Congress, &c., from the election of State and parish officers. The election is in law a single election, and the power of ins

In which opinion the attorney-general of the State of Louisiana coincided. Whereupon protestants claim admittance to all sessions of the returning board, and protest against their exclusion as unwarranted by law, as informed by their attorneys has been done and is contemplated to be done hereafter in said proceedings of said board.

F. C. ZACHARIE, E. A. BURKE, CHAS. CAVANAC, FRANK MGGLOIN, J. R. A. GAUTHREAUX, H. C. BROWN, Of Counsel.

But this said Wells, Anderson, Kenner, and Casanave, acting as such returning board, in further pursuance and execution of said unlawful combination, and conspiracy, then and there refused to permit said United States commissoners of election to be present for the purpose aforesaid, but proceeded in their absence to the pretended compilation and canvass aforesaid.

That the said returning board, while in session as aforesaid, for the purpose aforesaid, to wit, on the 20th day of November, 1876, adopted the following rule to govern their proceedings; that is to say:

That the sail returning board, while in session as aforesaid, for the purpose aforesaid, to wit, on the 20th day of November, 1876, adopted the following rule to govern their proceedings; that is to say:

We further offer to prove—
That Oscar Joffrion was on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, supervisor of registration of the parish of Pointe Coupée, and that he acted and officiated as such supervisor of registration for said parish at the said election for presidential electors on that day; and that he is the same person who acted as one of the electors for said State, and on the 6th day of December, A. D. 1876, as an elector cast a vote for Rutherfo d B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1878, A. B. Levissee, who was one of the pretended college of electors of the State of Louisiana, and who in said college gave a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was at the time of such election a court commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, which is an office of honor, profit, and trust under the Government of the United States.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, O. H. Brewster, who was one of the pretended electors in the pretended college of electors of the State of Louisiana, and who in said college gave a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was at the time of such election as aforesaid holding an office of honor, profit, and trust under the Government of the United States, to wit, the office of surveyorgeneral of the land office for the district of Louisiana.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, 1876, Morris Marks one of the pretended electors, who in said college of electors cast a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and a vote for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was, ever since has been, and now is, holding and exercising the office of district attorney of the fourth judicial district of said State, and receiving the salary by law attached to said office.

We further offer to prove—
That on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, J. Henri Burch, who was one of the pretended electors, who in said pretended electoral college gave a vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and a vote for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, was holding the following offices under the constitution and laws of said State; that is to say: member of the board of control of the State penitentiary, also administrator of deaf and dumb asylum of said State, to both of which offices he had been appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate of said State, both being offices with salaries fixed by law, and also the office of treasurer of the parish school board for the parish of East Baton Rouge; and that said Burch, ever since the said 7th day of November, (and prior thereto,) has exercised and still is exercising the functions of all said offices and receiving the emoluments thereof.

We further offer to prove the canvass and compilation actually made by said returning board, showing what parishes and voting-places and polls were compiled and canvassed and what polls or voting-places were excluded by said returning board from their canvass and compilation of votes given for presidential electors; and we also offer to show what statements and returns of the commissioners of election and of the supervisors of registration were duly before said returning board.

IX.

We further offer to prove that a member of said returning board offered to receive a bribe, in consideration of which the board would certify the election of the Tilden electors.

We offer to prove that the statements and affidavits purporting to have been made and forwarded to said returning board, in pursuance of the provisions of section 28 of the election law of 1872, alleging riot, tumult, intimidation, and violence, at or near certain polls, and in certain parishes, were falsely fabricated and forged by certain disreputable persons under the direction and with the knowledge of said returning beard, and that said returning board, knowing said statements and aflidavits to be false and forged, and that none of said statements or affidavits-were made in the manner or form required by law, did knowingly, willfully, and fraudalently fail and refuse to canvass or compile more than 10,000 votes lawfully cast as is shown by the statements of votes of the commissioners of election.

We further offer to prove—
That said returning board did willfully and fraudulently pretend to canvass and compile, and did promulgate as having been canvassed and compiled, certain votes for the following-named candidates for electors which were never east, and which did not appear upon any tally-sheet, statement of votes, or consolidated statement or other return before said board, namely: J. H. Burch, 241; Peter Joseph, 1,302; L. A. Sheldon, 1,364; Morris Marks, 1,334; A. B. Levissee, 829; O. H. Brewster, 776: Oscar Joffrion, 1,364.

The undersigned, Senators and members of the House of Representatives, object to the decision of the electoral commission as to the electoral votes of the State of Louisiana, because—

First. The said decision was made in violation of the law under which said commission acts, in this, that by said act the said commission is required to decide whether any and what votes from such State are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and how many and what persons were duly appointed electors in said State; yet said commission refused to examine and ascertain who were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Louisiana and what votes from such State are within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, Second. Because the act creating said commission was passed to the end that the commission would hear and examine evidence and honestly decide which electors in any disputed State were fairly and legally chosen; whereas the said commission refused to hear and consider evidence offered to show that the electors whose votes the said commission has decided shall be counted were not duly chosen, but falsely and fraudulently acted as such electors, as well as the evidence offered to show that the pretended certificates of election of said electors were produced by corruption and were wholly untrue.

Third. Because the said decision is in disregard of truth, justice, and law, and establishes the demoralizing and ominous doctrine that fraud, forgery, bribery, and perjury can lawfully be used as a means to make a President of the United States against the well-known or easily ascertained will of the people and of the States. The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, do object to the counting of the votes as recommended by eight members of the joint commission, and do protest against counting the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana, for the reasons follow-against counting the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana, to wit:

First. It was not denied before the commission that the Tilden electors received a large majority of the votes cast.

Second. It was not denied before the commission that Wells and his associates, who styled themselves a returning board, were guilty of gross fraud; that their certificate given to the Hayes electors was false and fraudulent, and that their action in canvassing the votes was in violation of the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana.

Third. The action of the eight members of said joint commission in declining to hear evidence of the above and other facts was a violation of the letter and spirit of the act under which said commission was created and of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KERNAN. I offer the following as a substitute for that reso-Intion:

Ordered, That the votes purporting to be electoral votes for President and Vice-President, and which were given by William P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, L. A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, A. B. Levissee, O. H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, claiming to be electors for the State of Louisiana, be not counted, the decision of the commission to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the substitute submitted by the Senator from New York.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, should the judgment and decision of the electoral commission in the case of Louisiana, now before the Senate, be sustained? The lawful duty of the commission was entirely clear. It could not well be misconceived. The commission was to report to the joint convention its judgment and decision as to what was the true and lawful electoral vote of the State of Louisiana. It was empowered by the law of its creation to call to its aid, in discovering the truth all the instrumentalities of evidence known and covering the truth, all the instrumentalities of evidence known and acted on by the two Houses acting separately or together. It was a legislative commission—no more, no less—with the same powers of investigation and the same rules of evidence known to and practiced by legislative bodies and their committees and commissions from time immemorial. It was intrusted with the grave duty of judging and deciding "what votes" from the State of Louisiana "are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States," and "what persons were duly appointed electors" in that State. This duty, to the faithful performance of which the American people looked forward with anxious solicitude, was, in my judgment, not performed. The commission was sent out with full power to ascertain and judge "the true vote." Instead, they bring us certificates, reeking with fraud, stinking in the nostrils of honest men of all parties. We asked for bread; they gave us a stone

Never did any tribunal in all the world's history have so grand, so noble opportunity to render patrotic, invaluable service to the country, and to achieve for themselves immortality. They lost their opportunity; their judgment is weighed in the balances and found wanting. It cannot stand the touch-stone of law, truth, and the wanting. It cannot stand the touch-stone or law, british, cternal principles of right and fair-dealing.

This mighty Brobdignag has been hopelessly entangled in the cobwebs and illogical technicalities of the special pleader, which, for the first time in history, controlled a legislative commission, as they have now done, at the cost of truth, and justice, and to the hurt of free government. It is painful beyond power of words to express to with the law in t government. It is painful beyond power or words to express to witness what I believe to be the enforcement of a judgment not only without warrant of law, but against the law. It is alarming that the first President inaugurated in the beginning of the second century of our national existence, should enter upon the duties of his exalted station with a title believed by more than half the people grounded and bottomed on fraud and not upon the will of the people; plausible and colorable only by a judgment not upon the merits, but upon the desirabilities as ill founded in law and reason as the fittle they seek to technicalities as ill founded in law and reason as the title they seek to

If the law does not authorize the commission to ascertain the true vote by the use of all the instrumentalities of evidence known to legislative assemblies; if the plain meaning of the letter of the text is controlled by some occult meaning not discernible to the great body of men of all parties, friend and foe, who until this judgment never doubted the power and duty of the commission under the law to try the case upon its merits, then it is the most cunningly devised pitfall that mortal men ever fell into.

pitfall that mortal men ever fell into.

The judgment in effect exalts fraud, degrades justice, and consigns truth to the dungeon. It violates the unbroken teachings of centuries. The world has been taught to believe both by the law of the land and the revealed will of God that the law abhors fraud; that it pollutes with its unhallowed hand everything it touches; that it vitiates; that it is so baneful that the judgment of no tribunal, however exalted, is entitled to any respect in any court on allegation and proof of fraud. Nay, more; this judgment is founded on a denial of the right to prove fraud, on the trial of a franchise whereby the citizen is deprived of his right without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution; and the refusal to admit any of the abundant proof of fraud offered is admission that by this judgment fraudulent certificates of a notoriously corrupt returning board, the proof lent certificates of a notoriously corrupt returning board, the proof of which corruption was offered and refused, pretending to declare elected men who were not elected, and the certificate of a man claiming to be governor who never was lawfully governor pretending to certify the votes of these pretended electors, are good and valid and true, and are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States. God save us! Fraud is deified, and the foolish fall down and worship the new Mokanna, from whose hideous features the veil should have been stripped but was not. This judgment, bearing so heavily in favor of fraud and against truth and justice, to the hurt of free government and against the will of the American people fairly expressed through the ballot, will never receive the sanction of the American people. It will be condemned by lawyers and laymen, by honest men people. It will be condemned by lawyers and laymen, by nonest men of all parties in all climes and countries for all time.

The democratic party cheerfully supported the law, believing that through the commission, under the law, the true vote would be honestly sought and found; and then when found, however the election might be, the result would be satisfactory to all the people, who only want justice and fair play. The truth has not been sought, but all its avenues were closed. We believed the commission would be controlled avenues were closed. We believed the commission would be controlled alone by the law and the evidence, and to these great tests we cheerfully submitted our just cause. The evidence was shut out and thereby the law was perverted. We appeal from this judgment of a meager majority to the American people, yielding this our just cause to the inevitable with that dignity and decorum becoming the great occasion. We urge our friends, bitter and unjust and unlawful as they and we believe the judgment to be to stand by honor and the conand we believe the judgment to be, to stand by honor and the contract, for it has the form and semblance of a lawful judgment, soulless and without spirit though it be; and I counsel and urge lawful and only lawful and peaceful methods in the count, and after a trial of the parties on the merits through the ballot-box, confidently relying on the honesty and intelligence of the people and the justice of our cause.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, in my judgment the Senate should not, and I trust it will not, affirm the decision which has been made by the commission that the votes cast by the persons known as the Kellogg electors for Louisiana should be counted for President and Vice-President of the United States. By the law recently passed "to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon," Congress conferred upon that commission all the power and authority which both Houses acting together or acting separately had to inveswhich both Houses acting together or acting separately had to investigate and decide what were the votes that were to be counted for President and Vice-President. All the power that is in any department of our Government in this important question of deciding what is a vote and what is a fraud was conferred upon the commission that we might have their advice after a judicial examination and decision, to the end that the truth might prevail and that no officer should come to the head of this Government tainted with suspicion that he came there by fraud, and not by the suffrages of the American

There was received here a certificate made by persons known as the Kellogg electors that they had voted for President and Vice-President, and the evidence to us or whoever were to decide as to the votes that they had any title to cast the votes was the certificate of Mr. Kellogg, the acting governor of Louisiana, based upon the certificate of the returning board that they were duly appointed electors. This is the evidence upon which they came here asking that the votes of Louisiana given by these persons should be counted. The objectors to the counting of the votes cast by these persons went before the commission and offered to prove before them by legal, competent evidence that these certificates were fraudulent and false, and that the certificate of J. Madison Wells and his three associates, upon which was claimed that the certificate of Mr. Kellogg was based, was a fabricated, corrupt, false, and fraudulent certificate, certifying to a falsehood and not to the truth. They offered to prove further that some of the men named in the certificates as electors were declared by the very language of the Constitution of the United States ineligible to be appointed electors, because they held offices of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

The commission refused to receive the evidence or any of it. If they had received evidence and found that this certificate was true, nay if the testimony did not clearly overwhelm and destroy it as evidence, I should make no complaint of their decision. These persons asking that these votes should be counted, and producing their certificates as the evidence of their right to Congress, and Congress having sent them to the commission, the commission say by their decision "we will not hear evidence, no matter how clear or overwhelming it may be to show that the certificates are fraudulent and false, and that these men claiming to be electors for Louisiana had no right to vote at all." The testimony was rejected by a vote of 8 to 7 in the commission; and based upon that ruling they made the decision that these are the constitu-tional electors for the State of Louisiana and their votes ought to be counted. Therefore Senators must meet the question whether or not we are bound to count the votes of men claiming to be electors who were never elected by the people of a State, because they obtained by force or fraud the certificates of executive officers of the State falsely certifying that they were appointed. Have we not power to hear evidence to prove the certificates to be false and that they were obtained by fraud?

If false certificates are obtained by duress from State canvassing officers or the governor, as the burglar obtains the key of the bankvault from the cashier, cannot Congress or the commission hear tes timony to prove the certificate to be false and how it was procured?

If a military officer with a file of men had seized the governor and the members of the canvassing or returning board in Louisiana, and by threats compelled them to sign certificates that persons were duly appointed electors who were in fact defeated, and such persons had in due form cast electoral votes for that State and sent them here with the certificates of their due appointment as electors, must those votes be counted ? could not Congress or the commission rightfully hear testimony of the falsity of the certificates and reject the votes Clearly as it seems to me they could, and it would be their duty to Fraud in the officers making these certificates falsely is as fatal to them as evidence as though they had been obtained by duress. By rejecting a false and frandulent certificate as evidence that persons claiming to vote as electors had no such right, we do not turn Congress or the commission into a canvassing board of the votes of the State. The law requires that electoral votes shall be accompanied by evidence that the persons giving such votes were duly appointed electors. The certificates of State officers are produced as such evidence; and when it is alleged that this evidence was procured by fraud and is in fact false, testimony to prove these allegations should

The commission decides, as I understand, that it has no jurisdiction, no authority to hear testimony to prove that the certificates of the election of the so-called Kellogg electors were fraudulently made and issued and are false.

This is the proposition we affirm if we adopt the resolution of the Senator from Ohio. The commission refused to hear any evidence tending to prove that the men casting these votes as electors of Louisiana were not appointed such electors; that the certificates that they were so appointed were fraudulent and false; and so refusing to hear the evidence offered the commission decided that the votes ought to be counted. This we are asked to approve.

Why, sir, is this correct? Are we to say to the voters of this country, "If corrupt men are able to reach one, two, or three executive officers in a State and by bribery as open and shameless as corrupt men can be guilty of, and procure them to send here in a close presidential beginning. dential election a false certificate as to the appointment of electors, bought with money, there is not power in this Government, there is not power in the two Houses of Congress acting together or separately to hear testimony, ascertain the bribery and fraud, and reject the votes procured by such means?

Sir, I enter my earnest protest against this decision of the commission from a motive higher. I trust then the seed for a tripment of sion from a motive higher, I trust, than the zeal for a triumph of any party candidate or any political party. I do not want it to go forth to the world that no matter how the people vote, no matter how well it is known how they voted, yet if fraud, force, or any other illegal means can procure the officer who is to give the certificate of the result of the election, which is not the appointment but the evidence of the appointment, to make a false certificate in favor of those not elected, your commission and your Congress must sit here and be governed by that certificate which objectors are ready to offer to prove is a false, fraudulent, fabricated, dishonest piece of evidence; and the votes evidenced by it alone must be counted, although upon them may depend who shall be the Executive for four years of the Government of these United States. I trust the Senate will not as-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the statute of Louisiana creates a returning board, consisting of five persons, to hold office indefinitely, and with power to fill all vacancies that may occur in their body, and commits to this board the canvassing of all elections to be held in the State and power to declare the result. It therefore, in its practical operation, devolves upon five men, or indeed upon a majority of them, the power to say, for all time to come, who shall hold office in the State. It makes the title of all State officers, of the members of the State. It makes the title of all State officers, of the members of the Legislature, and of every inferior officer chosen by election, depend, not upon the votes of the people, but upon the will of the returning board. And its provisions extend to the appointment of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and make their appointment, so far as the statute can make it, depend in like manner upon the will of that board. I believe that such a board is utterly destructive of a republican form of government; that no power to create it is delegated by the constitution of Louisiana to her Legislature, nor is any power conferred upon that Legislature by the Constitution of the United States to create such a board for the canvass of the votes for presidential electors. I therefore hold that the vass of the votes for presidential electors. I therefore hold that the acts of that board were and are unconstitutional, null, and void.

But if the board is not unconstitutional, it nevertheless had no legal validity when it assumed to canvass the votes last November. The statute required it to consist of five persons of different politics; but it then consisted of but four persons, all republicans, and they persistently refused to fill the vacancy. Such a board was not the board required by the statute.

But if the board were legal it could rightfully exercise only such powers as were conferred upon it by the statute. But its power to canvass and compile was a power to canvass and compile the returns of the commissioners of election, and nothing else. And the result it was authorized to declare was the result of such a canvass and compilation, and not of a canvass and compilation of something else.

pilation, and not of a canvass and compilation of something else.

Now, testimony was offered before the electoral commission to prove that it never made a canvass or compilation of the "commissioner's returns," or of any of them; and this proof was rejected. It seems clear to me that it ought to have been received, and in this opinion I am fortified by the action of both Houses of Congress four years ago in rejecting the vote of Louisiana.

Under the statute, the board had no jurisdiction to reject votes unless the protests provided for in the statute accompanied the returns. Proof was offered that not a single return was accompanied by such a protest, or indeed by any protest, but that nevertheless the board, arbitrarily and without jurisdiction, threw out more than 11,000 votes, and thereby defeated the Tilden electors and declared the Hayes electors appointed. This proof was rejected. It seems manifest to electors appointed. This proof was rejected. It seems manifest to me that it ought to have been received.

Testimony was offered tending to prove that the decision of the board was procured by forgery, fraud, and bribery. It was rejected. I think that it should have been received.

Testimony was offered that two of the Hayes electors, Brewster and Levissee, were, at the time of the election, officers of the United States, whose appointment as electors is expressly prohibited by the Constitution. The testimony was rejected and their votes for Hayes and Wheeler certified by a majority of the electoral commission to be valid. I cannot but regard this as a nullification of the constitu-tional provision. Nor is the matter helped by a resignation of their Federal offices by Brewster and Levissee subsequent to the election rederal offices by Brewster and Levissee subsequent to the election and their pretended appointment by the remaining Hayes electors to fill vacancies; for, as I understand the Louisiana statutes, there is no power conferred upon the college of electors to fill vacancies.

A majority of the electoral commission have, as I understand it, decided that, no matter by what usurpation of power, fraud, or corruption a man may be declared by a returning board to be an elector of President and Vice-President and no matter how ineligible he may be to receive an appointment as elector or to be an elector de jure, yet, unless he be ousted before he cast his vote for President, (which in this case was manifestly impossible,) that vote must be counted; and neither the State nor Congress can right the wrong or remedy the

I utterly dissent from this decision. In my humble judgment it is destructive of the rights of the States, of the powers of Congress, of constitutional provisions, of the principles of justice, of purity in elections, and of popular rule. In saying this I attribute improper motives to no one; it is not with persons, but with judgments, that I am dealing. Of them and of what appears to me their probable effects, it is my right and my duty to speak; and, thus speaking, I cannot help expressing the fear that this decision will have the effect of a proclamation to dishonest returning boards to perpetrate whatever villainies their interests or their inclinations may dictate, with an absolute certainty that they will prove successful. I have no time left

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I was very much surprised at the tone and excitement evinced by the objections made to the decision of this tribunal. The tribunal was constituted by the votes of the gentlemen who object to its decisions. They knew that the very question which is now decided against them was to be submitted to that tribunal, and they bound themselves in honor, as well as in law, to abide by that decision without unseemly remonstrance or impugning the character or conduct of these high judges. Though I voted against that bill and resisted it to the uttermost, I made up my mind the moment it became the law of the land to abide by the decision which should be made without carping criticism; and yet the objections that have been made to the decision read this morning are themselves insulting to the court; insulting to those who agree with the decision of the court; they arraign the integrity of that great tribunal and impugn the honest conviction of the majority of the people of the United States, who believe that decision is right, honest, and just.

est, and just.

Now, sir, that the very question now decided was submitted to that tribunal was shown by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. Frelinghuysen,] who expressly took the ground in his argument in favor of the bill that the court must decide so, because that was the law. And my honored colleague [Mr. Thurman] expressly said that that question was submitted to the tribunal and was one of the main questions to be decided by it. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edwinders] told us that that was the initial point of the whole matter to be decided by the tribunal, and it was to decide how far, if at all, the two Houses could go behind the returns that the commission was organized and created. And when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] proposed to change the bill so as to compel the court to act upon that view of the matter the Senator from Vermont resisted that, and the Senator said, "No; that is the question the tribunal is to decide." Now because forsooth the tribunal have decided it against some of those who voted for the bill their motives are to be arraigned by Senators and Members of the House of Representatives on written papers filed of record. They have organized the arbitration and chosen the arbitrators, and the tribunal have decided against them. And now let there be no unseemly wrangling, for even those who were opposed to the arbitration are bound by its results, and I would, for one, have abided by the decision, however disastrous or injurious or wrong it might have seemed to me.

might have seemed to me.

Now, sir, I further say that this decision is right. As a question of law three months ago no lawyer in this broad land would have contended that Congress had the power to manipulate and overhaul and reverse the decision of a State in the election of electors. If there is any State right in our system of States, it is the right to elect electors; and the framers of the Constitution guarded that right of a State against the power of either House with jealous care and scrutiny. Sir, this court has upheld the power of the States to vote as they choose in the manner provided by their own laws for electors, and that is all that has been done. This tribunal has but simply said that the law of the State, the mode and manner pointed out by the law of the State for the election of electors, shall control the vote, and that Congress shall not, either by commissions or by committees of investigation, change, overhaul, and reverse the decision and action of a State. Sir, that is the law plainly drawn from an express provision of the Constitution, and Congress has no more power to reverse the decision of electors than any foreign potentate or power or sovereignty whatever. The mode and manner of the election, the officers and agents employed in ascertaining its results, are and must be prescribed by the laws of the State is far more safely lodged with the State and its officers than with the two Houses or a commission created by it; for here the concentrated power and prejudice of party struggles involved in a presidential election utterly disable the two Houses from revising, reversin, or approving the votes of thirty-eight States in the few days intervening between the election and the inauguration of a President.

Mr. President, a good deal is said about fraud, fraud, fraud—fraud and perjury—and we are looked upon and pointed at as upholders of fraud, perjury, and wrong. Why, sir, if you go behind the returns in Louisiana the case is stronger for the republicans than upon the face of the returns. What do you find there? Crime, murder, violence. That is what you find. I see that my honorable friend from Delaware [Mr. Saulsbury] laughs at this. Why, he himself heard the testimony of eighty distinct crimes in a single parish. Now, sir, I tell you that the people are not to be misled. The State of Louisiana provided by law, as she had a right to do, for the mode of overruling violence, murder, and wrong, in the process of elections. By a tribunal constituted by that State, over whom you have no power or control, it has been decided that in certain polling-places, eighty or more in number, there was violence, wrong, intimidation, murder, and outrage. The law requires that in such cases the votes shall be excluded, and you have no power to overrule either the law or the decision apon it, and this tribunal created by you has said you have no such power; and now for you to talk about fraud, when it was the violence and wrong and intimidation of the democratic party that brought this danger to our country, seems to me not only illogical but wrong in every sense of the term.

I say now, as I said two months ago, that, while there may have been irregularities, while there may have been a non-observance of

I say now, as I said two months ago, that, while there may have been irregularities, while there may have been a non-observance of some directory laws, yet the substantial right was arrived at by the action of the returning board; and you may imprison them, you may harass them, you may drive them to their graves, but I tell you the judgment of mankind will decide that that returning board in rejecting the results of this intimidation and wrong simply obeyed their oaths and the law, and you have no power, thank God, to reverse their decision.

That is all I have to say about the Louisiana case. Though the course by which the result is arrived at may not suit your notions, yet substantial justice and the will of a majority of the people of Louisiana have been brought out of this thing by the action of the State authorities of Louisiana, by the action of their returning officers, in strict pursuance of the laws of that State.

And now, sir, when the case has been decided against you, we have read to you and twice spread on your printed records and signed with theatrical effect a long lawyer's offer of testimony that they would prove, if the tribunal would let them, much of which they knew they could not prove and most of which would be excluded by any rule of evidence adopted in any court. This is but skillful acting to mislead public opinion.

These gentlemen now come forward and say what they will prove! Why did they not prove it? They did not prove it before the committees of investigation, though they invaded the sanctities of private life and held their witnesses as prisoners. I tell you, sir, they knew very well that this court could not enter into that examination, because all the time between now and the 4th of March would have been wasted in a vain and never-ending inquiry. Unless this bill was a conspiracy to defeat a presidential election, it could not have been expected that such an inquiry could be entered upon, for no decision could have been arrived at by the tribunal in time. If it was intended by the law of Congress to conspire against the right of the people of the United States to elect a President, then, sir, these judges might have been justified in opening up the returns and going into an investigation; but they could not have read the papers that bore upon these allegations. No, sir, if they had neither slept nor ate and occupied all the time from now until the 4th of March, they could not have analyzed and acted up the allegatious made in that paper. Now, because they have not done it, because they have decided that they had no power to do it, because they decided that you, the two Houses, had no power to do it, they are to be arraigned and the conduct of able, pure, upright men who have passed through sixty years of honorable life is to be arraigned in the public press by liars and scoundrels and libelers and would-be assassins. No, no, Mr. President. There is something in this country left, a love of honor and a love of character; and I say anew that, when all the facts are sifted, when all the testimony that is gathered by the committees of both Houses is taken and read by the people, they will believe, as I believe most sincerely, that substantial right before God and man has been arrived at by this commission.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair takes this occasion to say to the occupants of the galleries that if there are any marks of approbation or disapprobation, the Chair will order the galleries to be cleared at once; so that the innocent will suffer with those who break the order of the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the statute of Louisiana creating the returning board provided in express terms that a majority of the number should constitute a quorum to do business and make the returns. The board was to consist of five persons to be elected by the senate. Three of that number, by the express terms of the act, are a quorum to do business. There were four in number upon the board, one more than a majority. The electoral commission has decided that the board was properly constituted. On the other hand it was urged that the existence of a single vacancy destroyed the board. We said not, upon the very best settled principles of law. The Constitution provides that this Senate shall consist of two Senators from each State, yet vacancies from half a dozen States will not destroy the legal character of this Senate. The law provides that the Supreme Court shall consist of a certain number of judges. Two, three, vacancies will not destroy the legal character of the Supreme Court. So I could run through the law in regard to corporations and special tribunals. There are certain commissions created for specific ministerial purposes sometimes where the law requires that the commission shall be full to enable it to perform an act; but here the act creating this tribunal guards against that by specially providing that a majority of the number shall constitute a quorum; and, if there be such a majority present, it makes no difference from what cause there are absentees, whether there are vacancies, or whether members are willfully absent, if there be a majority present, the law is complied with.

Now, Mr. President, a word in regard to the ineligibility of electors.

Now, Mr. President, a word in regard to the ineligibility of electors. The commission decided that it was not competent to prove that certain electors were ineligible on the 7th of November, the day of the election. They decided that upon two grounds; first, because in any point of view the proof would be immaterial, because the substance of the Constitution, the spirit and meaning of it, is that the electors shall be eligible when they come to act, when they come to vote, and not at the time when they are elected.

Certain persons are ineligible to be members of this Senate. A Senator must have certain qualifications. If he has them when the time comes to be sworn in, that is enough. It is immaterial whether he has them upon the day of his election. That is well settled. But we decided that the proof was immaterial upon other ground. If it were conceded that an elector was ineligible upon the day he voted, can that fact be proven to strike out his vote? If it can it is overturning the very best settled principles of law.

A man may be ineligible to a seat in this body; he may not be

A man may be inergine to a seat in this body; he may not be thirty years old; he may be under the disabilities of the fourteenth amendment; but if he comes here and is sworn in and takes his seat, he may afterward be turned out upon proof of the fact, but every vote that he casts has the same validity with the vote of every other Senator. A man may be ineligible to be appointed a judge of a court under the fourteenth amendment or for want of age or from any cause provided by the law of the State in which he lives; and yet if he is appointed notwithstanding his ineligibility, every act of hisas judge is just as valid as if he had been eligible. He may be turned out upon a quo warranto, but until that is done his act is valid; and can there be an exception found to this rule? I know of none. In applying it to electors we apply a simple well-settled rule of law, and how absurd it would be to overturn that rule in a case where a discovery is made after the vote is cast, when it is past remedy, that an elector was ineligible and strike out his vote. If we had decided that, we should have overruled a well-settled principle of law. Who six months ago contended for any such principle as that?

This tribunal decided that you could not enter into proof to contradict the returns made by the proper returning officers of the State, those appointed by the State to decide and to declare who had been It seems to me that if any principle of constitutional law is plain, that must be. The Constitution gives to each House the right to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. If it were not for that provision of the Constitution, each House could not do that, and if a senatorial election were contested, it would have to be by the Legislature of the State that sends the Senator here; but that power has been given to each House, and it was not given in regard to electors. It is claimed that the two Houses have the same power in regard to electors that the Houses have in regard to their nembers. The answer is, the power was not given. If the framers of the Constitution had intended to give that power, they would have said so. To infer the existence of so great power is to overrule every principle of construction in regard to the Constitution that was adopted in the very beginning. To give to Congress the power to judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of electors, is for the legis-of the election, returns, and qualifications of electors, is for the legislative to absorb the executive and to place the control of an election of President absolutely in the power of the two Houses.

We know that was not intended. We know, if anything is clear, it was intended to make the election of a President independent of Congress. The Constitution says the certificate shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses. Whether he is to count the votes or whether the two Houses are to count the votes, and I assume under this law the two Houses are to do it, or in votes, and I assume under this law the two Houses are to do it, or in certain cases this electoral commission, what can they do if They have but one duty to perform, and that is to ascertain that these certificates came from the electors of the State. When that is done "the vote shall then be counted." They must ascertain the fact whether they came from the electors of the State; and when they have ascertained that their duty is at an end. There is no time, there is no place to try any question of ineligibility or of election when the votes are to be constant. place to try any question of ineligibility or of election when the votes are to be counted. And how are we to know that the certificates come from the electors of the State ! In the first place the act of Congress provides prima facie evidence, the governor's certificate, but that is not conclusive. That is the result of an act of Congress. Congress may repeal that act or it may provide by another to go behind it, but when you go behind that and come to the action of the officers of the State, there your inquiry is at an end. Whenever the officers appointed by a State to declare who have been chosen electors have ested and made that declaration, it is final so far as Congress is conacted and made that declaration, it is final so far as Congress is con-acted and made that declaration, it is final so far as Congress is concerned. The action of the State officers is the act of the State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, as a member of the electoral commission I have given all that I could give of earnest, patient, steady labor and devotion to secure the just execution of the law under which I was appointed. I could not now, even if I would, repeat here the arguments made by me during the consultations of the commission is a secure that the security of the commission is a secure that the security of the commission is a secure to the security of the commission is a secure to the security of the commission is a secure to the security of th sion in opposition to the result arrived at by eight of my associates. Hereafter those debates may be given to the public. My labors and my efforts have been crowned only by failure. Deep indeed is my sorrow and poignant my disappointment. I mourn my failure for my country's sake; for it seems to me that not only does this decision of these eight members destroy and level in the dust the essential safethese eight members destroy and level in the dust the essential sale-quards of the Constitution, intended to surround and protect the elec-tion of the Chief Magistrate of this Union, but it announces to the people of this land that truth and justice, honesty and morality, are no longer the essential bases of their political power.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I was not here when this law was passed. Had I been here, I should have voted against it. After listen-ing to the remarks which I have heard at different times in reference to the various decisions that have been made by the tribunal organized by the Congress of the United States to settle this vexed question, it does seem to me that there is an amount of irritation on the tion, it does seem to me that there is an amount of irritation on the part of the disappointed portion of Congress in reference to this decision which is rather extraordinary. As I understood it, this law was passed for the purpose of organizing a tribunal to decide this question in accordance with the Constitution, as if the two Houses of Congress could not have been assembled for the ascertainment of the truth in regard to the counting of this electoral vote. It is urged by the objections made in the House of Representatives this morning in joint meeting that this commission failed to perform that duty in accordance with this law and the Constitution, in this that they recordance with this law and the Constitution, in this: that they re-fused to hear testimony, refused to go behind the certificates of the governor and the returning board of Louisiana, in order to ascertain the character of fraud that had been perpetrated in that State on either side.

I have but a single remark to make in reference to that objection: According to the theory of all political parties in this country here-tofore, and the established rule known to all lawyers in this land, where certain rights are believed to be in the States under and by virtue of the Constitution, neither Congress nor the courts have the right to invade them; and certainly on the part of the objectors heretofore it would have surprised and astonished their constituents if they at any time should have claimed that the Congress of the United States had a right to go behind the returning board of a State for the purpose of ascertaining whether any elections of a State officer had been fairly conducted or not.

The electors of a State are understood to be State officers. I believe that is conceded on all hands. If they are, they stand in the same relation to the Congress of the United States up to the time they cast their votes that the governor of a State does. No man, I presume, would maintain for a moment that the Congress of the United States would have a right to investigate the question of the election of the governor of a State.

Again, in reference to the proposition that the Constitution of the United States contemplated or intended that Congress should investigate a question of this kind, if it was intended that these electors should be officers of the Government there certainly would have been some means provided for that purpose.

Look at the question for a moment. Congress is invited to go behind the returning board of a State, no matter by whom that board is constituted, and behind the certificate of a governor. If you may do that, by the same reasoning you may go clear to the very bottom in your investigation of the frauds that were perpetrated, if any were in your investigation of the frauds that were perpetrated, if any were perpetrated. There are thirty-eight States, and I ask any reasonable man who reads the Constitution or this law passed in pursuance of it to tell me if any rational man will contend for a moment that Congress is to be held here in counting the vote, in which they have a few days to do the labor, and if an objection is made by Senators or Representatives to each and every State that the election shall be investigated and that you may go behind each and every ward in a city, and that each and every precinct and parish may be examined for the purpose of ascertaining the facts. No man could contend for a moment that that could be done, and yet if you open the door to this investigation you have a right to claim that Congress may go into the precincts, into the wards, into the parishes, and examine fully all the election returns from the different portions of the country to ascertain this fact. This it seems to me would be impossible.

Another objection is made by the objectors, that a portion of these Another objection is made by the objectors, that a portion of these electors were State officers. I do not know whether or not that is true, and it certainly makes no difference. Suppose they were State officers. The Constitution itself prescribes certain qualifications or disqualifications of an elector, and gives the State Legislature the right to adopt the mode and manner of electing those persons, but the State has no power to make disqualifications for the electors in addition to what are contained in the Constitution of the United States. In my judgment that objection has nothing in it.

Again, it is objected that two of these electors, I believe, were Government officers. An answer to that by way of argument certainly would be that when the Constitution provided that electors shall not hold a Government office it means what it says; but how are you to determine that fact? The office of elector being a State office, that fact must be determined before the vote is cast. If the vote is once cast it is a vote, for the man is de facto an elector and his vote in law is good. The same disqualification applys to a Senator or a member in either branch of Congress. The Constitution provides that a man shall be twenty-five years old before he shall be admitted to the House of Representatives. Suppose he is elected when he is twenty-four years old but does not take his seat, and when he is twenty-five he is sworn in. Would any man say that he was not a member of Congress under the Constitution? So if an elector is elected to cast the vote for President and has a disqualification at the time, if at the the vote for President and has a disqualification at the time, if at the time the vote is east he does not hold the office contemplated by the Constitution, he is an elector as contemplated by the Constitution, for the disqualification does not attach at the time he casts the vote. But, as I said before, this fact must be shown, in my judgment. Some means must be provided to ascertain. I think it is the duty of the State to provide the means. If they intend to investigate the question of an elector it is the duty of the State to do that preceding the voting of the electors. Hence I hold the decision of this commission.

sion to be good. They decided that the question was not made against sion to be good. They decided that the question was not made against these electors at the time of casting the vote, and that the votes of electors are good unless their seats have been contested as electors prior to the casting of the vote.

The PRESIDEN'T pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] states that no Senator or lawyer on this floor when the bill was about being passed said that there was any right to go behind the re-

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, I said that two months ago, before the question arose.

Mr. WALLACE. I refer now to the RECORD. I quote the Senator from Ohio himself, on the 25th of January, as to what was his opinion of what this bill meant. He said:

One objection to this bill was that the powers conferred on this commission were unlimited, and that the commission was left to judge of their powers; they were left to decide how far they should go back of returns and what faith they would give to executive certificates. The law did not seek to define or limit as was usually done in ordinary acts of legislation. I objected to the bill on that account.

The Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] one of the judges, on the same night said:

I took the ground from first to last that Congress had no right to go behind the decision of the returning board in Louisiana; that when they found that certain members of the Legislature had been elected, although they might have found that fact upon insufficient testimony or upon no testimony at all, still it was an act of the board appointed by the laws of the State for that purpose, and we had no right to go behind it. That was my position then, as it is my position now. I believe it is a vital point in the constitutional doctrine of our country; and I believe that this very bill that I am opposing in vain to-night will violate, and I believe it is intended to violate, that doctrine.

The Senator again said:

What I maintain is that this commission cannot carry out this part of the bill without going behind the returns from a State, and that is what our democratic friends understand by it.

And another of the judges, Mr. Garfield, in the House of Representatives, when the bill was on its passage, said:

It grasps all the power, and holds States and electors as toys in its hands. It assumes the right of Congress to go down into the colleges and inquire into all the acts and facts connected with their work. It assumes the right of Congress to go down into the States, to review the act of every officer, to open every ballot-box, and to pass judgment upon every ballot cast by seven millions of Americans.

It is for Senators and judges to reconcile these opinions.

It is for Senators and judges to reconcile these opinions. Sir, in a court of error or wherever a judgment is up for review, an offer of proof of facts which has been rejected by the court below, establishes for the purpose of reviewal all of those facts as true and proved. This is a well-recognized doctrine of the law. As this record is made up, gross and palpable frauds upon the people of Louisiana, and through them upon the whole American people, are permitted to have voice and power to proclaim a falsebood, to nullify the truth, and to reverse the recorded will of a majority of that people. It is false that the people of Louisiana have by a majority of their votes appointed the Hayes electors; and yet this decision proclaims it to be true. It is true that the majority of the people of Louisiana have by their votes appointed the Tilden electors; and yet this decision nullitheir votes appointed the Tilden electors; and yet this decision nullifies and crushes out this truth, and for the first time in the history of the Republic the recorded will of the majority of the people is ex-punged and reversed by the votes of the electoral college.

The broad offer to prove falsehood and forgery in the destruction of 10,000 lawful votes, by every rule of right and of law, is assumed to be proved true by its rejection, and we are thus compelled to confront the astounding legal declaration that the equities which ought to accompany the power and majesty of a clear majority of the people, the inherent vitality that belongs to every government for its own preservation as well against fraud as force, and the morality that pertains of right to every just system of laws, are utterly and absolutely wanting in ours.

Sir, if the false and forged returns made by four men who, by the testimony of a committee of the House, are proved, one of them to be too weak to be a knave; another unscrupulous, without integrity, tricky, and a defaulter in public office; a third, a sharper who cheats tricky, and a defaulter in public office; a third, a sharper who cheats at keno and defrauds his State, and the other confessedly guilty of and indicted for forging dead men's names upon the pay-rolls of his city—if such returns, certified by an executive whose only title to his office is the Federal bayonet, are to be the only and conclusive proof of title to the Presidency of the United States, then indeed is a government of law supplanted by a government of force and fraud. Sir, a majority of the people of the United States whose rights are outraged and denied, a system of jurisprudence that finds a remedy for every wrong, a Government that has repelled force and has within it the inborn vigor to resist the leprous touch of corruption, and a code of morals that shudders at and shrinks from the poisonous contagion of falsehood and forgery, are here to-day in silent but majestic protest against this judgment.

The laws of the people whom I represent upon this floor are based upon common right, common honesty, and common sense, and they have been taught as I have, that the end of legal proceedings is the attainment of justice. They will not respect a decision which refuses to hear the truth, sustains falsehood, indorses forgery, and puts the Federal Government at the absolute control of the base and the unscrupulous. They, sir, will agitate for its reversal until its reversal shall come. The result before us is fitly reached. It is the decree of party, wrung by party fealty from what should have been a judicial tribunal meeting and deciding a purely legal question.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, my judgment was deliberately made up and strongly expressed against the passage of the electoral bill. Every democratic Senator upon this floor, save one, insisted that that bill should be passed; and it passed both Houses by the strength given to it by democratic votes. Among other things that I urged as an objection to this tribunal was that it would be said that its decision was partisen and that the men sitting upon that tribunal its decision was partisan, and that the men sitting upon that tribunal, whether as judges, Senators, or members of the House, would represent their political principles, a constituent part of their minds, and act upon those principles, and that hence it would be declared that the tribunal was partisan. Democratic Senators scouted at such an idea. They said "O, no, the members of that tribunal will rise above partisanship." I challenge them to deny the fact that not a democratic member of that tribunal has at any time during its sesdemocratic member of that tribunal has at any time during its sessions risen in the slightest degree, ay, in the estimation of a hair, above partisanship. Every utterance that has reached us, every vote cast, has been saturated with democratic partisanship. If, in the final verdict, when it is found that by accident, or some other cause, there happens to be one more republican upon the tribunal instead of one more democrat, why is it that democratic Senators come here and utter this jeremiad over the course of republicans upon that tribunal because they carry out their principles when they carry them out no more than their associates do? It is an unworthy exhibition. That tribunal has been constituted to decide this question, and as there are

The very last night, and almost the last thing said in the debate on this question, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] was insisting that they should go back of the acts of the returning board, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and those who thought with him were insisting that this should not be done by that tribunal, I called attention to the fact that under this clash of interest there would be carping at the result, and that somebody would think they were cheated. The democratic Senators thought then that such arguments were good for nothing. Then was the time to consider them and to vote down the bill, if it would lead to unfairness or partisan-

Now, sir, it is very easy to get up here and talk about "fraud, fraud, fraud," and fill the air with declarations of that kind; and it is very safe by a fiction of the law to assume that everything offered to be safe by a fiction of the law to assume that everything offered to be proved is true. Objection gives such offer, it is assumed, the nature of a demurrer, and confesses the truth of allegations however monstrons. I understood that to be the idea of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] And so they go before the tribunal, and offer a long list of things which they propose to prove, knowing there is no time to prove those things or their falsity; and knowing further, I believe, and they must know it if they believe anything in the doctrine of States rights, which it is said their party is founded upon, that the tribunal had no right to ascertain whether the things they therein alleged were true or not. Senators now ever partisagain and therein alleged were true or not. Senators now cry partisanship and frand, because the position of the other party required that they should stand up for the right of the States. It was natural and right that they should stand by the right of the States, and insist that in this matter, confided to the State by the Constitution of the United States, the action of the States through such agency as they saw fit to confide the power to, having taken place, should be respected by our tribunal and by Congress. It was the necessary logical result of the construction of the Constitution held to by the democratic party during all its purer years. The republican party simply comes forward and insists that this time-honored maxim shall not be completely trampled in the dust

Why, you could follow the rights of the States so far as to sanction secession. You could insist upon them so far as to abet an attempt to tear down the whole fabric of our institutions; and yet when it comes to sustaining that natural, necessary right of a State growing out of the Constitution of the United States, that it shall have a voice in selecting the President of the United States inde-have a voice in selecting the President of the United States independent of the control of Congress, then you desert your doctrine and tradition, vilify your own tribunal, and say that Congress should strip the State of Louisiana of this right necessary to its protection and to the protection of the people of the United States.

Now, sir, I do not concede for a moment, however it may be rung in under a fiction of law, that it is true that these frauds were committed by the republican party of Louisiana. The returning board was organized there in order to guard against the result of that intimidation and murder and violence which experience had shown it was necessary there should be some barrier erected against. At this very election, in order to yield to the democratic claim, you must very election, in order to yield to the democratic claim, you must concede that, where thousands of republicans living in a particular parish were taken by the throat, were strangled, were prevented from voting at all, and their opponents got a fictitious majority by means like these, this false result was the one which should be counted, and the stifled vote, although the State law would equalize the right of the people in the matter, must not be considered at all. Why, sir, that is contrary to every principle of equity, contrary to every consideration springing out of national safety, national honor, national morals. If the people of a parish or of a State can be trampled under foot, if those who hold to a particular set of political opinions, having the sympathy of others all over the country who have the right that those men shall vote as they see fit, can be taken by violence, by intimidation, by murder of themselves or of their families, and kept from the polls so that they cannot deposit their ballots therein, and from the polls so that they cannot deposit their ballots therein, and thereby a fictitious appearance is made in favor of their opponents, if that is to be sanctioned by your tribunal, then a wrong has been done. But, if on the other hand the policy of the law of Louisiana was wise, that the returning board should sift these very matters and cast out a fictitious majority thus created, then the decision of this tribunal was right. It was right upon that ground and it will have the sanction of the American people.

You may here appeal to the American people if you will; but this record goes out with your declarations. You may put the bold front on your assumptions; but I tell you when these pages after pages are read by the American people, showing upon their lines, written in blood, the deeds which have been committed in Louisiana by which the voice of the republican party has been stifled in whole parishes, by which voice of the republican party has been stifled in whole parishes, by which voice of the republican party has been stifled in whole parishes, by which thousands of men have been prevented from voting, the condemnation will be written by the American people upon the record of your party. A party cannot possibly maintain itself which resorts to means like these; and no professions of public spirit, no profession of a desire for fairness will sanctify things like these. Murder is not a fair mode of electioneering. It cannot be used as party machinery; it must not be used so, unless we are to go back to the condition of barbarians. Give us a fair voice of the people, give us the vote of the people, unbribed, uncontaminated, unawed, and then it may be counted and will be counted. Give us a vote that is corrupted by bribery, give us a vote that is depleted by force, and the American people ought not to receive from any tribunal which can be created and will not themselves respect a result which is reached by such means. ought not to receive from any tribunal which can be created and will not themselves respect a result which is reached by such means. Such means as these were employed in Louisiana, and it was but a fitting end of the attempt made to seize the Presidency by such means when the other day assassination was resorted to in the State-house of that State. [Laughter on the democratic side.]

I repeat it was but a fitting end of those things when the other day assassination was attempted in the State-house of Louisiana and an analysis of the state that it is the state of the stat attempt was made to take the life of a man that one-half of the people at that State believed to be their lawful governor. Do Senators laugh at that? The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Withers] laughs at that; perhaps he laughs at the utterance which was made in a party paper of his own yesterday in this city, where it was advised that Rutherford B. Hayes should be assassinated if he came to this city. Does the Senator laugh at that?

Mr. WITHERS. No.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator laugh at the fact that his party are responsible for the assassination of Abraham Lincoln? Do his are responsible for the assassination of Abraham Lincoln † Do his party laugh †

Mr. WITHERS. I deny it fairly and squarely.

Mr. SARGENT. So might the Jews their responsibility for the assassination of Christ. The robe of the Senator's party is stained all over with gore, is stained all over with the results of an unnecessary war, is stained all over by dripping assassinations from that of the best man that God ever created on all this broad earth, being wholly man, Abraham Lincoln, down to the poorest negro of Louisiana or Mississippi that in this last election has been slain because of his desire to cast his vote for the party which gave him freedom.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I had not designed to take any part in the discussion to-day; but I find that I have been forced into it. Before replying to the tirade of the Senator from California, [Mr. Sargent,] however, I will state that I was one of the Senators who voted for the creation of this commission. I did it because I believed it furnished to us the nearest approximation to a fair and judicial lieved it furnished to us the nearest approximation to a fair and judicial investigation and decision of the great question who had been elected the President of these United States. I did it because while I had no conception that the political members of the commission provided by conception that the political members of the commission provided by that bill could by any possibility rise entirely superior to political considerations in making up their opinion, and as I was conscious that I would have been myself unable to do so if a member of that commission, I did hope and believe and expect that those members of the commission who were drawn from the judicial department of the Government would give judicial consideration to all the legal questions that were presented before them; and I confidently predicted up to the time the vote was cast that on every question before that commission it would be found that the members of the judiciary who constituted a portion of it would be found voting as a unit. And, sir, I undertake to say here to-day that if that prediction had been verified, the decision of this commission would have gone forth to this whole country commanding and receiving the respect and acquithis whole country commanding and receiving the respect and acquiescence of all good men of all parties.

Now, sir, I confess with shame, with disappointment, with deep mortification and humiliation even, that the result of this investigation has demonstrated that the members of the highest judicial tribunal in this country cannot rise superior to political considerations any more than professed politicians can. I deplore the loss of prestige which must inevitably follow this decision. I deplore the fact that, as the result has demonstrated, instead of lifting this question from the mire of politics into the clearer and calmer arena of judicial decision, the effect has been to drag down into the mire of politics the members of that judiciary who have been hitherto regarded with the deepest reverence and respect by all men of all parties. Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia which he refers to—

Mr. WITHERS. I cannot yield; my time is too limited; my friend from Rhode Island will please excuse me. I wish to say this in addition on that question, that I have no criticism of one party more than of the other in this respect; but it certainly will strike the country as a very remarkable circumstance that when a naked legal proposition is submitted to this tribunal, involving merely the consideration of continuous large and the constitution of continuous large and the continuous large and the continuous large and the constitution of continuous large and the continuous proposition of constitutional law, one member of the court upon one presentation of the question with regard to one State should have voted one way, and when the same question identically was presented in regard to another State should have cast his vote the other way.

In regard to another State should have cast his vote the other way.

I do not, however, propose for one to do anything except to carry out in good faith the provisions of the bill creating the commission. If there be fraud and wrong and corruption in it, if their findings have been, as alleged, in defiance of every consideration of right, of justice, and of equity; if it shall be proclaimed as the supreme law of this land that the Congress of the United States have no power and authority to go behind the certificate of a governor or the returning board of a State, it will proclaim to this country the establishment of the doctrine of State sovergingty to a degree for beyond what has ever board of a State, it will proclaim to this country the establishment of the doctrine of State sovereignty to a degree far beyond what has ever been claimed for it by its wildest advocate. Sir, not Madison, nor Jefferson, nor Mason, nor Calhoun, nor the resolutions of 1798 and 1799, any of them ever pretended that the States were so sovereign that they could override the powers of the General Government even to the extent of deciding who should be President of the United States when fraud vitiated and destroyed the legality and the validity of the returns of the electors who were sent up to these bodies.

The distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. Morron] in his argument seemed to contend for the proposition that ineligibility of election and ineligibility to hold office were the same thing. With all due deference to the legal acquirements of the Senator and his position as a lawyer, I must dissent from the proposition and state that the highest legal authorities draw that distinction, and make it so plain and unequivocal that no one can pretend to deny that there so plain and unequivocal that no one can pretend to deny that there exists a difference.

Now, sir, in the minute or two that I have left, I wish to allude simply to the charges which have been made by the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in such impassioned strain that the democratic party are responsible for all the wrongs and outrages and violence which have been committed in the Southern States, even to that which culminated in the assassination of a President of the United States. It is too late for me to discuss that question, but I will simply express as my earnest conviction, drawn from a minute investigation of the whole subject, that three-fourths of the wrongs and violence and murder which have been perpetrated in the Southern States have been at the instiga-tion and generally provoked by the active interference of the repub-lican party. I stand on this floor and assert my belief that when these returning boards in the Southern States were vested with the right to revise the votes sent up to them and throw out votes from parishes and counties wherein intimidation was alleged, and when the republican party in those parishes and in those counties were then informed that the way to set aside a popular verdict would be by creating scenes of violence and wrong and outrage in order to furnish the basis of action for the returning board, those scenes of outrages and vio-lence and wrong and murder were furnished them and for that specific Who are the beneficiaries of these misdeeds? Not the democratic party. No, the republican party are the beneficiaries; and when wrong and violence and outrage are perpetrated, I take it that we have the right to assume that those who are the beneficiaries of the acts were those who instigated them; and that is my opinion today expressed in the face of the Senate and the people; and if I had time I think I could show some evidence, evidence sufficient to convince any unprejudiced man that such is the actual state of the case and that the whole effort and determination of party in the Southern States has been to direct and concentrate all efforts so as to perpetuate fraud, to perpetuate violence, to perpetuate murders in the community in order that upon their existence they might base the allegation that it was necessary that the returning board should step in and by their acts set aside the verdict of a very large majority of Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, in these moments when disapointment waits upon so many of our friends on the other side of the pointment waits upon so many of our friends on the other side of the Chamber, I wish to say that I have been disappointed in two particulars. I voted for the electoral bill, not because I had any doubt myself as to the right of Governor Hayes to the office of President for the next term, but I did know that there was a large body of people in this country who entertained a different opinion; and in deference to that opinion, and in the interest as I supposed of public peace, (which I then interpreted to mean general, placid acquiescence in the result which might be reached by this commission,) I voted for the bill under which it was organized. I now see that in that parthe bill under which it was organized. I now see that in that partienlar I have been disappointed. If the demonstrations which have been made in this Chamber to-day are to be taken as the indication of a considerable public sentiment in this country, if the expressions made elsewhere are to be taken as like indications, then that great body of people marshaling more than can be marshaled under the banners of either party is to be disappointed, and in their disappointment I share.

I am disappointed further in this, that when a commission had been selected by the bill, and when we were told here and elsewhere by those who prepared the bill, not men of one party but men of both parties, that this was not only a patriotic measure in the interest of public peace and as a consummation to crown the centennial year of our national life, but that it was for us a just and proper thing to coincide with their recommendations, the very gentlemen of this Senate who on the other side of the Chamber led us to the support of this measure come here and substantially condemn not only the judgments of their associates, but by abstention of remark condemn the faith by which their associates have been actuated.

I did not anticipate that men would rise above partisan feeling; I never anticipate that in great crises of a nation's life. When the treaty with Great Britain known as the Jay treaty was under consideration, no man was more partisan than the Father of his Country. In the recent contest through which we have passed the nation's life was saved by partisans; and in great crises there are no patriots but partisans—no patriots in great perils in a country's history except partisans. The men who stand independent, who are above the control of the influences which animate most men are utterly incapable trol of the influences which animate most men, are utterly incapable

I am disappointed in this also, that the judgment of eight men, three of them members of the Supreme Court of the United States, is not taken by our friends on the other side of the Chamber as better evidence of the conclusions which have been reached than the discount of the conclusions which have been reached than the conclusions which have been reached than the conclusions which have been reached the conclusions whi senting opinions of seven other men, though they be equally worthy. Their conclusions constitute a prima facie case against which evidence is to be brought, and which cannot be overthrown by declamation.

I say further that this commission, in my judgment, has done only what the Constitution required it to do. The second section of the second article says:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress.

That power did not originate with the States, but it came from the whole people in their collective capacity as a nation, and with it the States have been endowed. They take that power from the nation and may exercise it just exactly to the extent that it is granted. The States decide the manner in which the electors shall be appointed; and that power carries with it in the States the right to inquire whether in the appointment of electors the manner of appointment which they have prescribed has been followed by the officers of the States. Here is a clear line between the power of the States and the power of the National Government marked out by the Conand the power of the National Government marked out by the Constitution. Therefore the most that can be said by a commission which represents the two Houses of Congress is that it might inquire whether the manner which is specified in the laws of the State as to the form of proceeding, for example, whether the appointment has been by popular election or by the governor, has been followed or not. But all inquiries touching the details of mode of proceeding, the good faith of public officers, everything that is covered by the phrase "manner of election" is within the control of the State; and I do not share at all in the idea that we have surroudered the Governor. "manner of election" is within the control of the State; and I do not share at all in the idea that we have surrendered the Government and that hereafter bribery, fraud, and corruption are to control. Not at all. The States will take notice, pass laws, establish provisions so that the manner of appointing electors which they may prescribe shall be faithfully carried out; and it will be worth something in these days, when there is truth in the statement that there has been bribery, fraud, corruption, and that a pretty large part of it is chargeable to one particular party in this country, if the leaders of that party take notice of the danger to the institutions of the Republic from allowing these wrongs to be continued until they are chronic in the nation and can only be exterminated by war.

I look for better times; but I am not disturbed by the declaration which the commission has made, believing that it is in conformity to the Constitution, and I believe that the people of this country will accept this opinion of the court and that the court loses no prestige. It has decided a political question, but it will return to its judicial duties with the same judicial spirit which it has manifested from the days of Marshall till now.

days of Marshall till now.

Mr. STEVENSON. The proceedings of the American Senate to-day will live, in my judgment, Mr. President, as long as constitu-tional government lasts, or American liberty has an earnest votary. Our judgment of approval of the findings of the high electoral commis-Our judgment of approval of the findings of the high electoral commission as to the vote of Louisiana must tend strongly to destroy the foundation on which both these rest. I voted for the bill creating this commission, and I assume all the responsibility which such a vote implies. I did it in the interest of justice, I did it in the interest of peace. I was willing to sacrifice any mere supposed party advantage for the peace and honor of my country. Such has always been the course of the democratic party. Their devotion to the Constitution, their respect for law, their love of peace, when consonant with the honor of their country, have been always paramount to the schemes of mere party. It has been always so, sir. Never was it more preeminently manifested than in their support of this electoral commission.

The Senator from California [Mr. Sargent] tells us that there was but one democrat who voted against this bill. I thank God that there was such unanimity. But, sir, that bill would not have received a corporal's guard on either side of this Chamber if there had not been the universal belief that there was to have been, upon an exequo et bono basis—a full, thorough, and impartial inquiry into the alleged frauds and irregularities of the returning boards in Florida and Louisiana. It was that belief of a full investigation by an impartial tribunal into the alleged illegal acts of the returning board in Louisiana that secured with so much unanimity the prompt passage of that. The country demanded its passage. Why? Because the people—republicans and democrats alike—rejoiced in the creating of a tribunal which they believed would faithfully and impartially investigate and ascertain the charges against the returning boards in Louisiana and in Florida in having fraudulently and falsely suppressed the votes as cast by the people of those States for Tilden and Hendricks electors on the 7th of November, 1876; and in utter violation of the verity of those returns it was charged that said returning boards had issued certificates falsely and fraudulently to the Hayes and Wheeler electors, who had received a minority of the votes cast.

It cannot be denied that as soon as the presidential election took place great doubt prevailed among both democrats and republicans that true returns of the votes as actually cast by the people in those States had not been made. It is also true that serious fears were apprehended that violence might take place when the votes came to be frauds and irregularities of the returning boards in Florida and prehended that violence might take place when the votes came to be counted by the two Houses of Congress. Hence the proposal and creation of this electoral tribunal was hailed everywhere with satisfaction and approval, and the entire country looked to a thorough scrutiny of all alleged frauds and irregularities.

In entering my warm and earnest protest against a concurrence in the judgment of a majority of this tribunal, I hope to do so with en-tire respect for myself and toward them. But I must confess I was amazed to hear the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] indignantly amazed to hear the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] indignantly intimate that no one had a right to criticise or question the correctness of the judgment of that tribunal. Why, Mr. President, this is a most extraordinary doctrine. Where are we, that the ruling of any court may not within certain limits be passed upon and questioned? I have had some little experience in my profession, and I say to the Senator that I scarcely know of a court of last resort, whatever its reputation for ability and learning, that has not been frequently appealed to to review its own decisions both as to matters of law and fact, and few that have not at some period on petitions for rehearing fact, and few that have not at some period on petitions for rehearing acknowledged its error by taking back its judgment as originally rendered. What, sir, an insult to a court to criticise its ruling? Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] must feel the

Mr. President, the Senator from Onio [Mr. Sherman] must feel the weakness of his cause, to be so far carried away with party blindness as to intimate that the electoral tribunal cannot err.

Sir, in my judgment they have erred—gravely erred, and while I will not question or asperse their motives, I intend fearlessly to review their judgment and point out what I regard a fearful and fatal error to free institutions as contained in its conclusions.

It is not the first time I have sought to convince a court of its own errors in cases much less important than this. Let the Senator from Obio [Mr. Shippann] and forget that the indement of this tribunal Ohio [Mr. Sherman,] not forget that the judgment of this tribunal is wholly interlocutory and has no judicial efficacy if the Senate and House non-concur in its findings.

Now I repeat, and I say it without the fear of contradiction, that both republicans and democrats throughout the length and breadth of this broad land, everywhere, expected when this bill was offered and this commission created that there was to be a free, full, and fair investigation, and that a judgment was to be rendered in accordance with the true facts and proofs exhibited by both sides.

investigation, and that a judgment was to be rendered in accordance with the true facts and proofs exhibited by both sides.

The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds,] who more than any other gentleman inaugurated this tribunal, upon the sixth day of the present session offered a resolution to direct the Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire into this alleged violence and intimidation, as alleged to have been practiced in certain States, and further to inquire into eligibility to office under the Constitution of the United States of any persons alleged to have been ineligible on the 7th of November, 1876. We all know that the Senator from Vermont is an able lawyer thoroughly versed in constitutional law. Were could not suppose that so distinguished a jurist would have offered a resolution proposing an inquiry which he thought forbidden by the Constitution to be instituted by Congress; still less to have directed a committee of the Senate to take proof on a subject which both Houses of Congress were inhibited from investigating. When the Senator from Vermont offered this resolution—prefaced by a long preamble—the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] offered to enlarge its scope, to open the door to the widest inquiry and thus let in all that could be offered on either side as to the frauds and venality of returning boards and ineligibility of electors. I heard no whisper then that it was unconstitutional. I saw the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Morron] and the Senator from California [Mr. Sargent] both voting for the resolution, and thereby acquiescing in the unquestioned power of Congress to inquire into and take proof as to all frauds and venality in suppressing the votes in Louisiana and instituting inquiry whether there had been a free and fair election. The committee was authorized to take proof what irregularities existed, which elector was there had been a free and fair election. The committee was au-thorized to take proof what irregularities existed, which elector was

That was the occasion, if any doubt as to the constitutional power of Congress to constitute the proposed inquiry existed, to have interposed it. But none such was interposed. The distinguished republican Senator, like the Senators from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] and from Indiana, [Mr. Morron,] who to-day tell us so loudly that they always believed, and never entertained a doubt that Congress had no power to inquire into fraud of returning boards in suppressing votes of States for electors, altering and forging returns of votes actually east for presidential electors, were present when the resolution of the Senator from Vermont was offered for the proposed investigation, and permitted it to pass by their votes without a word of the want of constitutional power. But why then were they silent? How do they justify their votes for an inquiry which Congress had, in their opinion, no constitutional power to pass?

Mr. President, I feel humbled at the fact that any tribunal, however learned should reject proof which was offered to show frand-ever learned, should reject proof which was offered to show frand—corruption as practiced by a board of canvassers in a State without legal power, and for venal purposes, whereby the vote of the people of said State as cast for Tilden and Hendricks electors and re-ple of said State as cast for Tilden and Hendricks electors and returned to said board to be compiled was altered, forged, and changed, and false and fraudulent certificates issued by said board to Hayes and Wheeler electors, and the vote of the people of Louisiana, in utter defiance of the popular will, cast for Hayes and Wheeler for President and Vice-President, when the electors for Tilden and Hendricks were chosen by more than 8,000 majority.

I had supposed that no judicial tribunal organized in the interest of truth, honesty, and fair dealing could rightfully disregard proof of fraud in a transaction it was called upon to investigate. Fraud taints whatever it touches; it invalidates every obligation; it cancels every judgment. I had supposed every election certificate or return shown to have been pronounced absolutely null and void. If the fraudulent suppression of the popular vote by any instrumentality or agency would have been pronounced absolutely null and void. If the fraudulent suppression of the popular vote by any instrumentality or agency in a State is to find shelter upon any pretense or legal technicality behind the white ermine of any quasi-judicial tribunal, then there is no safety for popular government. If the State cannot apply a remedy, and Congress has no power to inquire and take proof as to the fraud and venality of a returning board in selling out the votes of the people in a State, then popular suffrage is a farce.

I tell you, Mr. President, the people, neither republicans nor democrats, will rest satisfied with this judgment. All jurisprudence, law, and equity abhor fraud. Every State in the Union is interested in the exposure of the election frauds in Louisiana. For any tribunal to say they will not have proof offered to establish the selling-out the vote of a State which is to determine the election of President has no precedent in the past and can never be approved; and what exno precedent in the past and can never be approved; and what excuses are now offered by Senators in support of the judgment? The same threadbare story of violence and intimidation. They seek to exclude all proof as to the mode of conducting the elections, and then when the door is closed, fraud and venality are to be tolerated by the cry of blood and intimidation. I do not know that we ought to wonder at the daring usurpation and outrages of the Louisiana returning board. Poor Louisiana has been for years "the Niobe of States." With all the resources of material wealth, her gallant people have for six or eight years past been crushed by usurpation and military power that defy description. None will ever know the losses, sufferings, and oppression of that people.

Have you not seen her State government overturned by a usurping judge backed by the military power of the United States, who only escaped impeachment for his crimes by an ignoble resignation of his office? Have we not witnessed the soldiers of the United States marched under the military orders of Federal officers into the legislative halls and representatives elected by the people taken forcibly out at the point of the bayonet and their places filled by usurpers? When Congress has been appealed to by this gallant and down-trodden people for redress against such violence, have you not told them to wait until another election? exclude all proof as to the mode of conducting the elections, and then to wait until another election?

How often have the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and other How often have the Senator from Ono [Mr. SHERMAN] and other republican Senators resisted any protection upon the ground that at the next election every wrong would be righted and the State restored? Year by year these people have held elections, but the returning boards have by fraud and violence defeated the popular will. Rulers not chosen by the people have been put upon them by the returning board, and these frauds supported by military power.

This returning board, and these frauds supported by military power.

This returning board, self-perpetuating in its duration, and in utter disregard of law, of honesty, of morality, have held Louisiana in absolute control. The will of this organization has been the sole standard of official tenure in that State. Popular suffrage has been a mockery there for years. Republican testimony in support of this statement is to be found in the archives of the Senate. Is it surprising that this returning board, when they have been so successful in their State usurpation, should seek to extend the theater of their operations within the Federal sphere?

If they have by an open disregard of law for six years set at de-operations within the Federal sphere?

If they have by an open disregard of law for six years set at defiance popular suffrage in the State of Louisiana and governed that State with arbitrary power, why not attempt a wholesale system of suppressing the votes for the appointment of presidential electors, especially when the State of Louisiana would turn the scales? If their success had been so signal in creating governors despite the popular voice in Louisiana, why not make Presidents in the same way? And accordingly they attempted it at the appointment of electors by the people of Louisiana in November last by forgery, falsehood, and fraud in suppressing a majority of 8,000 votes for the Tilden and Hendricks electors and giving the return to the Hayes and Wheeler electors. And by a judgment of the electoral commission this fraud is to be successful, because Congress has no power to investigate or expose it. Can a greater premium be offered for continued exertions by fraudulent returning boards? lent returning boards?

Mr. President, in 1800 a tribunal was proposed by Congress somewhat similar to this. Jurists like Marshall, Dexter, and Hillhouse believed Congress possessed the power of investigation as to fraud in the appointment of electors; and their authority is entitled to some weight. But Senators tell us we knew the law, and we must abide by it. Mr. President, we had every reason to believe that this tribunal would investigate every electoral certificate in Louisiana procured by fraud and corruption. The whole country expected it, republicans as well as democrats. If the technical certificate was to shut out proof of open fraud, why not have allowed the President of the Senate to count? Who could ever have believed that this tribunal would have ignored the express limitation of the Constitution upon the State and upon the elector, that no Federal office-holder should be appointed an elector?

apon the State and upon the elector, that no Federal office-holder should be appointed an elector?

But, Mr. President, I shall go for enforcing that law. My grief, my bitter grief, at this ruling springs from no mere political disappointment. O! no, sir; Mr. Tilden has received a majority of the electors in all the States even if by a technical ruling the fraud by which he was kept out of it is not allowed to be shown. The popular confidence which chose Mr. Tilden is a much higher honor than the mere filling the office. But it is for my country I grieve. Their right to have the services of Mr. Tilden in the executive chair is defeated by fraud in a Louisiana returning board and no proof of the feated by fraud in a Louisiana returning board and no proof of the fraud is allowed.

No returning board can take from Mr. Tilden the approval of the people, and no tribunal can deprive him of that consolation that he was chosen by more than twenty millions of freemen to be their ruler. We shall execute this law, to whatever results its construction by the electoral tribunal may lead. It may defeat the democratic party and electoral tribunal may lead. It may defeat the democratic party and strip it of power fairly won, but that party will still hold sound its plighted faith to uphold it and preserve untarnished its personal honor amid every disappointment or defeat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky admonishes us that the proceedings of the Senate this day will live. That is true; and it is a pity in my judgment that it is true. I think it would be better for the fame of the Republic, better perhaps for its welfare, if these proceedings could be buried out of the sight of history when they are closed. But that cannot be done. For days the waves of declamation and vituperation have broken at the feet of this commission to coerce it into the crucifixion of a State in order that somebody besides the State might appoint the men who should give its vote for the choice of President and Vice-President of the United States. And now, sir, in the Senate to-day these same foamy surges beat upon the heads of that commission in the hope of crucifying it, I suppose, because it would not weakly consent to crucify a surges beat upon the heads of that commission in the hope of crucifying it, I suppose, because it would not weakly consent to crucify a State. Sir, the State yet lives. Let us trust to a beneficent Providence, if we can no longer trust to a wise and prudent people, that the commission and its judgments will survive.

Mr. President, what do we hear here in the Senate? The commission is arraigned because it would not set aside the State's appointment of electors, first because it is alleged here that the returning officers who determined upon the election of those functionaries were an unconstitutional tribunal created in violation of the constitution an unconstitutional tribunal created in violation of the constitution of Louisiana. That is so, or it is not so. If their creation did defy the fundamental law of Louisiana, who ought to know it so well as Louisiana, and who else in God's wide world is authorized to say so but Louisiana? Could the commission tell her that? That combut Louisiana? Could the commission tell her that? That commission was clothed only with such prerogative in this behalf as graced the two Houses of Congress. Will it be said here that these two Houses can tell a State when she has violated her own constitution in the selection of her own electors? If you can tell Louisiana that, you can tell New York that; and I beg to ask among my learned friends on the other side of the Chamber where sits that one lawyer who dares stand up and tell the American profession that the two Houses of Congress can exclude the vote of the electors of New York because they have been appointed not in conformity with the constitution of New York? New York would correct that style of reasoning very promptly.

Again, it is said that their vote ought not to be counted because the board which undertook to ascertain the result of the election was not full, that the law of Louisiana directed that there should be five members upon it and that there were in fact but four. They say the four obstinately refused to add the fifth. That is the allegation. the four obstinately refused to add the fifth. That is the allegation. Suppose it were true, what then? Because four men constituted that board, three of whom constitute a quorum, because they did not discharge their whole duty in the appointment of a fifth, are the two Houses of Congress authorized to say that for that fact they will disfranchise the State of Louisiana; that she forfeits her vote in the great national college which is called upon to select a President and Vice-President simply because four of her citizens did not do that duty? Will that be said of any other State in the Union?

Again, it is said that that board refused to count that and to count this because there was no regular protest filed against those returns. Whose duty was it to file the protest? The duty of the commissioners of election, officers residing at the different polls throughout the State. The law does tell those commissioners to file protests. They ought to do it. I assume if they dared to do it they would. But suppose they refuse to do it, obstinately and corruptly, what then? Because the commissioners of election do not do their whole duty, were the returning officers to turn their backs upon their duty, and for the returning officers to turn their backs upon their duty, and for either reason dare that commission, or dare the two Houses, say that the vote of Louisiana shall be excluded from count here? If you can say it of Louisiana you can say it of Pennsylvania, but you never will say it of Pennsylvania, and never dare hint at it.

But the great grievance of all is that the commission would not for the time set aside the decision of Louisiana and open up the question what lay behind the decision of Louisiana. These gentlemen tell us that they could have proved such monstrous frands, such monstrous bribery, such monstrous corruption, if they could but once have had the doors open to them to go behind the returns of Louisiana. Mr. President, as much as any one man I think I may assume to know what would be discovered if they could have got at the decision of Louisiana. If it were possible that the decision of her constituted tribunal could cover those facts from human observation, it were a tribunal could cover those facts from human observation, it were a tribunal could cover those facts from human observation, it were a gladsome thing, I think, to every man who cherishes the good fame of the democratic party. If it were possible that any canvass could cover what lies behind it from the scrutiny of Him who overlooks us all, it would be still happier for that party, still happier for the people of Louisiana. But that cannot be covered. There is no possibility of it. This commission would not inquire into that, and they stood upon the law of Louisiana when they said so, but others will not be so scrupulous. They will be looked into; they will be known to this people, to this generation, and to the generation which shall succeed this. I want to say, Mr. President, in closing, that as a republican, cherishing the past of the republican party, believing in it as thoroughly to-day as I ever believed in it, I shall not as a republican have any occasion to blush when the blankets are all stripped off from what lay beneath that canvass.

occasion to blush when the blankets are all stripped off from what lay beneath that canvass.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, if I can say nothing to quench, I think I shall say nothing to kindle the fire of partisan animosity which in my opinion bodes no good to the country. As soon as it was known that the result of the presidential election must depend upon the votes of the State of Louisiana—for I had no doubt as to the other States—I felt that a great calamity had fallen upon the nation.

On the one side, about half of the American people felt a deep and thorough conviction that if Mr Tilden should be elected, they would have been defeated by violence, by murder, and intimidation which had kept their voters from the polls, or compelled them to vote against their wishes, as well as by fraud; and I confess I was one of those who thus thought and felt. On the other side, if Governor Hayes should be declared elected, the other half of the American people would have felt that their candidate had been defeated by gross frauds of the returning board of that State, in throwing out the votes actuof the returning board of that State, in throwing out the votes actually given for their candidate; and I am compelled to confess that I have not had, and have not now, a very high confidence in the integrity of that board, and fear that they may have sought to overcome by fraud, on their own part, the fraud and violence and intimidations by fraud, on their own part, the fraud and violence and intimidations committed by their opponents, thus creating a fearful clashing of wrongs which would not be likely to result in the attainment of right. I have, therefore, felt that whichever party should triumph—and one or the other must—that triumph would be no cause for exultation; that it must be accepted without pride and not wholly without some feeling of humiliation at some unwarrantable means used by its friends for the attainment of its object.

It was for reasons like these and with the hope that a decision by the eminent men who would compose the commission, that I earnestly advocated the bill for that mode of settling the result. It was equally fair to both parties. And here I wish to say that it was equally fair on the very question of introducing evidence going behind the returns. It was asserted here by one of the leading advocates of the bill on the other side, as I understood him, that if it were expressly declared in the bill that the commission might go behind the returns, all the Senators on one side would be against it; and if the opposite were declared in the bill, all the votes on the other side would go against it. Hence this question was itself, with all the other questions, declared in the bill, all the votes on the other side would go against it. Hence this question was itself, with all the other questions, known and understood to be submitted to that commission. It was equally fair to both parties in every respect; and as to the selection of the fifth judge each took its chances.

I had made up my mind to abide the result with equanimity whatever that result might be. I have not, therefore, since that commission was established, undertaken to further investigate the case of Louisiana, knowing that those eminent men who heard the case and the arguments were much better analiged to reach a just and proper Louisiana, knowing that those eminent men who heard the case and the arguments were much better qualified to reach a just and proper conclusion according to the Constitution and the laws than I could be without the special investigation which other occupations precluded me from making and which they had made.

I shall therefore accept now, as I would cheerfully have accepted had it been the other way, the result at which they have arrived.

Reject this decision now and we are again affoat upon a shoreless sea without light or compass to guide our course, and the result cannot be foreseen by the wisest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. McDONALD. I move that the Senator from Michigan be allowed his full ten minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN and others. I object,
Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I only wish a minute more.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired, and he asks for one minute more.
Mr. HAMLIN. Let him print it.
Mr. CRAGIN. Let the Senator have leave to print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate having lasted two hours, it is now ended. The main question will now be put. The Secretary will read the substitute proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr.

Mr. WITHERS. Before the question is put, I rise to inquire whether the Senator from Michigan may not be permitted by general consent to append the undelivered portion of his remarks to his speech.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no objection to printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection to printing. The Secretary will read the substitute proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan.]

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered. That the votes purporting to be the electoral votes for President and Vice-President and which were given by William P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, L. A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, A. B. Levissee, O. H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, claiming to be electors for the State of Louisiana, be not counted, the decision of the commission to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the substitute just read.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. HAMLIN, (when Mr. BLAINE's name was called.) My colleague is confined to his house by indisposition and he does not leave it today, under the direction of his physician. If he were here I suppose he would vote with me against the substitute.
Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. Edmund's name was called.) My colleague is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]
Mr. THURMAN, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds.] He is confined to his house by sickness. Were he here he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Balley, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dennis,

yeas 28, nays 41; as follows:
YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnun, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—28.
NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghnyson, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—41.
ABSENT—Messrs. Blaine, Conkling, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hamilton, and Thurman—6.

So the substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Sherman,] which will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved. That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. STEVENSON. I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to

Mr. THURMAN, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired, as I have already stated, with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced-eas 41, nays 28; as follows:

yeas 41, nays 25; as 1010Ws:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—41.

ABEENT—Messrs. Blaine, Conkling, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hamilton, and Thurman—6.

So the resolution was agreed to. Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the Senate having concluded its action upon the report of the commission on the vote of Louisiana, I now move that the Secretary be directed to notify the House of Representatives that the Senate is now ready to meet the House to proceed with the canvass of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. I understand that the House has taken a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until the same hour.

Mr. SARGENT. Is it not necessary to inform the House also that the Senate has arrived at a conclusion upon the matter of the ob-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be included in the formal motion of the Senator from Maine. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland, that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Tuesday, February 20, 1877, at ten o'clock a. m.

So the motion for a recess was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made: *

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. My colleague, Mr. DURAND, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. KNOTT. My colleague, Mr. Blackburn, is confined to his room by sickness; if here he would vote "ay."
Mr. TERRY. My colleague, Mr. Douglas, is absent by leave of the House.

The vote was then announced as above recorded; and accordingly (at one o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at ten o'clock a. m. Tuesday, February 20.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANCE] moves that the House take a recess until twelve o'clock.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make a point of order on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment until the Chair states the proposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I beg pardon of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House take a recess until twelve o'clock. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] moves that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wanted to call the attention of the Chair to this point of parliamentary law: The Chair has held that less than a quorum can take the final recess, which is equivalent to an adjournment, but temporary recesses, I think the Chair would hold, cannot be taken by less than a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa to make the motion which he has made, that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But lest the question should be considered as waived, I desired to make in time the point that less than a quorum cannot take one of these temporary recesses.

The SPEAKER. When that question arises the Chair will decide it. The gentleman understands that he has not the privilege of precipitating a point of order on the House before it properly arises.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am perfectly well aware of that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa to make the motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My excuse for interrupting the Chair with my point at this time is that, as the motion for a recess is similar to the motion for adjournment, the question might sometime be put on a temporary recess and the whole thing decided without an opportunity to say anything. a temporary recess and the whole thing decided without all oppor-tunity to say anything.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, for a call of the House, it was agreed to.

Before the result was announced,
The SPEAKER said: Less than a quorum has answered; but the Chair would suggest that gentlemen who have come in since their names were called be allowed by unanimous consent to respond. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will call the names of gentlemen desiring to be recorded, so that if a quorum is present it may appear on this roll-call.

The names of members present who had not previously answered were then called, the final result of the call being as above recorded. During the call,

Mr. KNOTT said: I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. Black-BURN, is sick and not able to be here.

Mr. HOLMAN, (at the conclusion of the call.) Is there a quorum

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

During the roll-call a message from the Senate, by Mr. Gorham, its Secretary, announced the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved. That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Secretary of the Senate further announced that he had been directed to notify the House that the Senate was now ready to meet the House to proceed with the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. GIBSON. I submit the following:

Ordered, That the votes purporting to be electoral votes for President and Vice-President, which were given by William P. Kellogg, J. Henri Burch, Peter Joseph, Lionel A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, Aaron B. Levissee, Orlando H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, claiming to be electors for the State of Louisiana, be not counted.

Mr. HURLBURT. I move to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Gibson] by striking out the word "not."

Mr. NEW. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the bill creating the electoral commission without hesitation or misgiving. I am not ashamed of the support I gave that measure; and I now say to this House and to the country that I accept without qualification my humble share of the recognitibility.

the responsibility.

When I voted for that act I did so with the fullest confidence that no requirement in it, express or implied, would be ignored or treated as surplusage. At that time I believed that every issue made up in conformity with its spirit, its letter, and its purpose would be respectfully considered and fairly tried. When I read the text and found it provided in terms that the commission was authorized to take integrity and other parents as under the into view such petitions, depositions, and other papers as under the Constitution and existing laws would be competent and pertinent to such consideration, and when I remembered further that the Supreme Court of the United States had never omitted with the utmost emphasis when opportunity offered to declare that fraud poisoned, corrupted, debauched—not some things—but everything it created or contributed to the existence of, I, sir, was possessed of enough simplicity and credulity to believe that a commission thus constituted and empowered to act by a law which owed its passage to the existence of controverted questions of fact would not become mere counting tellers to the President of the Senate nor for a political party, but ing tellers to the President of the Senate nor for a political party, but would open its ears to allegations of fraud contained in the papers solemnly, formally, and lawfully placed in its hands.

Mr. Speaker, when the polls closed on the 7th of last November in the State of Louisiana the question with that oppressed, plundered, and almost ruined people was, Shall we now be free? Will an honest State government now be installed or are we longer to be ruled over by strangers who not only misgovern but despise us?

It was well known to those people that they could expect no deliverance save through the election of Mr. Tilden. The people of the whole country know this can be their only escape. It is not a matter of surprise that such intense anxiety exists throughout the Union to have the very truth ascertained and declared as to the vote and count in the State of Louisiana. Why has the President hesitated? Why has he not given formal recognition to the Packard State government Has he been waiting to see whether the commission would go behind Mr. Speaker, has not the word more than once in the last sixty days, in form semi-official, gone to the country that the President was waiting to hear from the committees sent into the State of Louisiana to investigate and report upon questions of fact.

And wherefore, sir, inquire as to the facts? Why has it been thought important by a democratic House and a republican Senate that committees should be sent into the State of Louisiana to ascertain what electors had been chosen? Upon what theory consistent with the action of certain members of this commission did they as Senators vote to constitute the Senate committee? Wherefore, Mr. Speaker, this disease of formers which includes the County County of the County County of the County County of the County of th vote to constitute the Senate committee? Wherefore, Mr. Speaker, this display of figures and printer's ink, signed by John Sherman of Ohio, E. W. Stoughton of New York, the distinguished gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Hale,] and the no less able and prominent gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Garfield,] and seven others of high standing and character in the republican party? Why after these gentlemen returned from New Orleans, whither they had gone at the request of the President to witness the canvass of the vote, did they make this communication or report to the President? I ask again, sir, why this volume of five hundred and seventy-one pages sent by the President with accompanying message to the Senate and House of Representatives? Will some gentleman familiar with its contents be good enough to point to anything in it which is not addressed or intended to be addressed to questions of fact and fraud? Mr. Speaker, little did the President suspect that his solicitude for an honest count in the State of Louisiana was idle and that his message to the Senate and House of Representatives was almost unlawful.

I shall vote to sustain the objections to the action of the commission, but, sir, I am in favor of proceeding without unnecessary delay to the but, sir, I am in favor of proceeding without unnecessary delay to the conclusion of the count, and without a doubt in my own mind I declare conclusion of the count, and without adoubt in my own mind I declare it to be my best judgment that the democrats of this body, of the Senate, of Louisiana, and of the Union should submit (I do not now think of a more appropriate word) in this instance to the installation of a minority President if under the finding of the commission it should become necessary. If we do, without revolutionary act or expression, at the sacrifice of our dearest party interests, and of our strongest convictions, for the peace of the country, the near future will witness such condemnation and overthrow of the incoming republican administration as could happen in no country save that of a free people whose choice of a chief executive, fairly expressed at the ballot-box, had been disregarded, discarded, and deposed by a usurper whose only title to the office was derived through the rotten medium of the Louisiana returning board, the most infamous, desperate, and despised body of men ever organized and charged with important political powers and duties in this country, and shall I add, in shame, ever indorsed by such high authority in this or any other land.

If I have any time left, I yield it to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Seellye.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SEELIYE.

maining.
Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps generally true that in discussion so earnest not to say so excited as this neither party may be altogether right or altogether wrong. In the bitterest disputes each side may often have somewhat to justify it, both sides perhaps being right in what they affirm and wrong in what they deny. I fancy that there never could be any contention among true-hearted men if each had a clear understanding of the ground occupied by the other. In this case of the Louisiana election it seems to me perfectly clear that the charges made by each side against the other are, in the main, the charges made by each side against the other are, in the main, true. No facts were ever proved more conclusively than the fraud and corruption charged on the one side and the intimidation and cruelty charged on the other. Which of the two sides went the farther, did the worst in this wrong-doing, would be very hard to say. The corruption of the one side seems as heinous as the cruelty of the other side is horrible, and on both sides there does not seem to be any limit to the extent they went, save only where the necessities of the case did not permit or the requirements of the case did not call for any more. I find it therefore quite impossible to say which of the two sets of electors coming up here with their certificate voices the true will of the people of Louisiana in the late election, and therefore equally beyond my power to assent to the propriety of accepting either.

I cannot, Mr. Speaker, exaggerate the reluctance with which I differ from the wise and candid men—wiser and more candid men would be hard to find—

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. SEELYE. May I have two minutes more?

Many Members. Yes, go on.

Mr. SEELYE. And wiser and more candid men would be hard to find than those of this electoral commission who have pronounced the decision on which we are now called to vote. I acknowledge, I think I appreciate the strength of their position. We cannot be too jealous of the constitutional right of a State to choose its presidential electors "in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." We cannot be too careful of congressional interference with the duly accomplished the subject of the constitution of credited results of such a choice. Whether we like or dislike it, the right of a State to choose its electors in its own way and to ascertain and certify as to the method of their choice is beyond our lawful con-All this I accept as a formal and technical statement of a clear principle of our Constitution; a principle moreover in its general application as wise as it is clear.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are cases where the summum jus becomes the summa injuria, cases where the law strictly interpreted and strenuously enforced works out results contrary to all law, and in such cases equity lays the letter of the law aside and lifts her voice in judgment as the sovereign spirit of the law, the spirit of righteousness and truth declares. I find such a case in the pending issue.

Granted—and I hold this to be incontestable—that this electoral com-

Granted—and I hold this to be incontestable—that this electoral commission has clearly interpreted and accurately applied the Constitution and the laws to the question submitted to them, yet what if the very principle on which the Constitution and the laws must ultimately rest becomes thereby subverted? Granted that the decision reached is fairly within the bond; yet what if the pound of flesh cannot be taken without its drop of blood? What if this jealous care for State rights and constitutional prerogatives may so foster faction and so blunt the sense of justice and so increase the prevalence of fraud that the very foundation of prerogatives and rights has disappeared? Here the hammer fell.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SEELYE. But a word more. No nation, said Niebuhr, ever died except by suicide; and the suicidal poison is engendered not so much in the unjust statutes of a government, as in the immoral practices of a people which the government is unable to punish and unable to restrain. It is because I fear that the strict and accurate interpretation of the Constitution applied to the electoral vote of Louisiana would imperil that vote in the future and increase the very danger which the Constitution intended to avoid, that I am unable danger which the Constitution intended to avoid, that I am unable to concur with such an application.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Speaker, the law creating the joint commission, and under which the electoral vote is now being counted, provides that the decision of the commission, when rendered, shall be submitted to the two Houses of Congress for affirmance or rejection, and unless the two Houses concur in rejecting it, the decision of the commission shall stand as the judgment of Congress.

This provision was incorporated into the act out of a superabundance of caution, but nobody then supposed that after this commis-

This provision was incorporated into the act out of a superabundance of caution, but nobody then supposed that after this commission had heard, examined, and decided any question which might be submitted to them, touching the counting of the electoral vote of any State, that either House of Congress or any member of either House would for a moment, entertain the thought of dissenting from or rejecting their decision; and I make this statement with more confidence and boldness because we were given to understand by democrats upon this floor, when the bill was under discussion, that the commission which the bill created and provided for would be composed of men whose learning, integrity, and purity would be above all question and beyond all suspicion.

But Mr. Sneaker, we found as we often have before that he who

But, Mr. Speaker, we found, as we often have before, that he who puts his trust in the democratic party leans upon a broken reed, and that he who gives his confidence to that party will surely find it be-

No sooner was the case of the electoral vote of Florida decided by the commission than the majority in this House, the party generally, and the democratic press throughout the entire country, pitched into the majority members of the commission regardless of truth or decency. They were openly charged with being corrupt, with being influenced by political and partisan considerations, and nothing was too base or too low to be said about them, because after a full and patient hearing and investigation of the whole case they had been led to the honest and righteous conclusion that the people of Florida had clearly and fairly elected the Hayes and Wheeler electors, and that their votes should be counted for them. votes should be counted for them.

Does any one suppose, Mr. Speaker, that if the decision had been the other way we should have heard these wailing sounds about cor-ruption and partisanship from the trembling lips of the immaculate

Would the learned gentleman from Virginia have poured forth the streams of his constitutional wrath? Would the genial, self-deceived, gentleman from Illinois have amused and instructed the House with his eloquence? And would the graceful advocate from New York City have startled the House and the country by his thrilling apostrophe to the American flag, and by upsetting every theory and noble thought we have ever cherished in connection with the Star Spangled Banner

No, Mr. Speaker, all this and much more would have been lost if the commission had been dishonest enough to deprive the people of Florida of an honest vote and count Samuel J. Tilden into the Presidency.

Now, sir, the case of Louisiana has been submitted to the commission and after days and nights spent in hearing, examining, and considering, aided by the learned researches and able arguments of the most eminent men in the land, the commission find no reason to reverse their judgment in the case of Florida, and therefore find that the Hayes and Wheeler electors in Louisiana were duly and legally appointed, and that their votes should be counted for the republican candidates.

The commission was asked to go behind the governor's certificate and hear evidence touching the appointment and acts of the returning board. The offer was made in my opinion with the design and purpose of prejudicing the case and the decision before the country, and not with any idea or expectation that the evidence would be redand not with any idea or especiation that the evidence would be received or that it could be proved if it was.

Besides, sir, the opening of this case and the reception of evidence as claimed by the democracy, would have postponed the decision of this whole matter beyond the 4th of March, and thus have defeated the very object and purpose which the electoral bill was designed to

Again, sir, we hear the cry of partisanship and fraud from the democratic side of this House, and another tirade of calumny and abuse is heaped upon the majority members of the commission for this de-

It is not to be denied that great and unusual powers are vested in the returning board by this act; and nothing, perhaps, but the fear-ful condition of affairs which existed in Louisiana at the time of its passage would ever justify it in the eyes of the people of this country

The democracy were determined to carry the State in every election by force and intimidation, and this law was passed as a means of self-protection and defense to those who desired a free and fair elecself-protection and defense to those who desired a free and fair election, and for the purpose of preventing corrupt and unprincipled men from reaping the fruits of their crimes, and making it impossible for them to finally succeed in their unboly schemes.

The unequal political contest of 1876 closed on the 7th of November, and the result of the vote showed conclusively that democratic violence and intimidation had done their perfect work.

The count of the pretended and fraudulent votes at each polling-place showed that the republican phalanx had been either crushed and driven from the polls or made to fight in the ranks of their enemies, and that Tilden and Nicholls had carried the State.

In this crisis of course the only legal and peaceable remedy and

In this crisis of course the only legal and peaceable remedy and only hope left for honest men was in the returning board, who was in accordance with the law to canvass these fraudulent returns and determine whether they should be counted or excluded.

The votes in the bull-dozed parishes in the late election and the lesson they teach need no comment; they show the existence of a state of violence and intimidation in that State which seeks to disfranchise every republican, whether he be white or colored, and restore

They commenced the political campaign of 1876 with the killing of Gair, Pinkston, and the Dinkgraves, and they followed it up by the murder of Gilbert, Mitchell, and hundreds of others, while they cruelly whipped and drove into exile every active republican they did not hang or shoot.

As a part of the system they organized a vast number of democratic clubs and compelled the colored men, by force and threats, to join them, while they would not allow a republican club to be established, or a republican meeting to be held unless it was under the protection of United States muskets.

In this way, and by such means, they succeeded in getting into the ballot-boxes, in the bull-dezed parishes, a majority of pieces of paper with the names of the Tilden electors on them, but they were not the votes of the men that cast them—they were the mandates of a mob of armed men-and for these reasons the returning board ex-mob or armed men—and for these reasons the returning board excluded them from the count.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the democrats of this House have no right to find fault and soold about the commission; they made it; it is their offspring, and they, and they alone, are responsible for its existence.

I opposed the electoral bill because I believed it was unconstitutional, and I have just as good a right to my opinion on that question as any other man, and because I was not able to believe in its expediency. But some of the best men in the country thought differently.

diency. But some of the best men in the country thought differently and I bowed in submission and am satisfied.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I firmly believed then, as I do now, that Hayes and Wheeler had been fairly elected, and I was in no mood to give it up or back down. It looked to me like a surrender, and I would not consent to it.

I must confess also, Mr. Speaker, that I did not propose to be fright-ened by threats of bloodshed or civil war. I did not believe then and I do not now that anybody wants to fight, and especially I do not look for or fear it from the northern democracy.

I know them to be child-like and bland in their dispositions and meek and humble in their deportment, especially their leaders, and that they are not at all inspired with a spirit of ambition for military glory or anxious to seek honor at the cannon's mouth.

Mr. Speaker, I should deplore war and would resort to all honorable means to avoid it, but when a man attempts to rob me of that which honestly belongs to me, you may call it war or what you please, but I do not propose to give it up; I propose to hold on to what is my own and abide the consequences.

Mr. Speaker, since I came into this House, one year ago last December, I have continually heard this howl about republican extravagance, republican fraud, and republican corruption.

During that time scarcely a democrat has made a speech upon this floor who has not taken up this grand democratic refrain and rung the changes upon these themes.

And much of this, sir, I am pained to say, has come from men who now occupy seats in this Hall through the mercy and magnanimity of the party they slander and malign.

Sir, I have heard this stream of calumny until I am sick of it.

The republican party saved this country in its hour of peril, and has directed its course to its present exalted and honored position among the nations of the earth, while many who now defame and revile it were trying to destroy it; and, sir, I say it in all candor and kindness that it does not lie in the mouths of those men, and it is not modest or becoming for them to come here now and scald, accuse or modest or becoming for them to come here now and scold, accuse, or modest or becoming for them to come here now and scold, accuse, or lecture the republican party.

The democratic party, sir, would do well to turn their attention to their own household when they cry fraud and corruption. Why, sir, their whole policy, and their every act since 1854, has been one grand system of fraud and deception.

The whole scheme to elect the Grand Fraud of Gramercy Park to the Presidency in the late election was a superb democratic cheat.

They started out in the campaign with the impression that they could buy every man they could not frighten or delude.

The great democratic paymaster from Connecticut was sent to In-could buy every man they could not frighten or delude.

The great democratic paymaster from Connecticut was sent to Indiana to look after the election in that State and to pay off the Kentucky volunteers, and the gallant gentleman from New York boldly telegraphed to him in the very pinch of the campaign that he might "buy seven more mules."

The States of Mississippi, Georgia, and Alabama were carried for Tilden by an organized system of violence and intimidation which shocked humanity and caused cruelty even to blush. And you attempted to carry South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana in the same way, but you have not succeeded.

The great State of New York was captured by the democracy in 1868 by the use of barrels of money and thousands of fraudulent registrations.

Turn now, sir, to Oregon and behold how the great reformer and his friends attempted to obtain an honest count in that State. It was necessary to have one more vote to secure the triumph of democracy and disgrace the executive chair. A confidential agent is sent to Oregon to negotiate with Grover and secure that vote. Now, sir, read the telegrams that passed between the men who were trying to barter away a nation's rights and bring shame and dishonor upon the

Mr. JOYCE. I desire just a moment more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. JOYCE. I ask the indulgence of the House a single moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has received notice that objection will be made to requests for extensions of time. But the Chair will ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

Several members objected.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot consent by his own arbitrary act to extend the time of gentlemen, because he has received notice that it will be objected to.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative of Louisiana, I should be recreant to my duty and faithless to a sacred trust, if I failed to raise my voice in earnest protest against the action of the majority of the electoral commission, which has violated the majesty of the State, outraged right and justice, and arbitrarily substituted falsity and fraud for the true voice of the people.

The spirit of partisanship has so plainly asserted itself in the tribunal whose decision is now under discussion that, it is vain to expect its reversal by the concurrence of the two Houses of Congress, pect its reversal by the concurrence of the two Houses of Congress, in last resort. But, sir, there is another tribunal which must pass judgment, and to which it is proper we should make a final appeal, the mighty tribunal of public opinion, whose judgment will be inscribed upon the tablet of our national history in ineffaceable letters. To the calm dispassionate sentiment of the honest masses, to the great, generous American heart, Louisiana appeals in this hour of national gloom and of her domestic peril—in this hour, when her peace, her prosperity, her honor, her very household altars and firesides are threatened with destruction. Now, when stripped of the drapery of her constitutional robes and clad in the sackcloth which emblematizes her degradation; now when the chains are fettering drapery of her constitutional robes and clad in the sackcloth which emblematizes her degradation; now when the chains are fettering her limbs and the iron is entering her soul, uttering no whining cry for pity or for mercy, but proud and erect, even in the nakedness of her desolation, she raises her voice in earnest tones and sends forth to the good, true people of this land her last, her "Macedonian cry for help." For nearly eight long years she has been subjected to the domination of adventurers who, under a bold usurpation deriving its usurped authority from an illegal judicial decree, conceived in corruption, perfected in perfidy, and promulgated from the haunts of profligacy, have preyed upon the vitals of the Commonwealth and reveled in the fruits of iniquitous legislation, until the financial credit of the State and her fair name has become a by-word of reproach. All this and more has Louisiana borne in patient sufferproach. All this and more has Louisiana borne in patient suffering, looking forward to a near future when the sound, sober sense of the people of other sections would right her wrongs and redress her grievances, through, what she believed to be, the omnipotent power her grievances, through, what she believed to be, the omnipotent power of the ballot-box. In spite of odious, unconstitutional laws, enacted in the interest of party and administered with all the bitterness of partisan hate, the people of Louisiana in 1872 and 1876 triumphed, at the polls, over their enemies and by the fair expression of their ballots entitled themselves to full redemption. By the fraudulent manipulations and perjured acts of the returning board, whose name is synonomous with all that is disreputable, the popular will has been nullified and truth prostrated at the feet of fraud.

Heretofore the people of Louisiana were alone immediately involved.

nullified and truth prostrated at the feet of frand.

Heretofore the people of Louisiana were alone, immediately involved in these perfidies and outrages. To-day the cause of Louisiana is not confined to her territorial limits, but the blighting influences of the successful conspiracy against civil liberty and constitutional freedom are felt by forty millions of people, who must in common with Louisianians bear their share of this national dishonor and national disgrace.

Louisiana, through her Representatives on this floor, reflecting the sentiment emblazoned on her shield "Union, justice, and confidence," voted for the electoral bill and submitted her case to the tribunal created, as she believed for the purpose of investigating thoroughly.

created, as she believed, for the purpose of investigating thoroughly, honestly, and patriotically the question as to how her people had honestly cast their votes in the recent election. The very words of the oath prescribed for the members of the commission, in the law tiself, would seem to convey to every candid mind a certain guarantee that the questions submitted would be decided, after full examination, according to the law and the evidence.

The spirit, intent, and fair construction of the law justified us in

The spirit, intent, and fair construction of the law justified us in believing, that, the commission, composed of members selected from among the ablest of the legislative and judicial departments of the Government, would fully and carefully examine and decide upon the questions submitted, and adjudicate the objections based upon proffered testimony, the submission of which served to give them jurisdictional vitality. These expectations have not been realized. Our hopes, "like Dead Sea fruits, have turned to ashes on our lips." A partisan majority, forgetful of the exalted duties required of them and regardless of the high trust and confidence reposed in them, have cruelly dashed to the ground the cooling draught of political right, and sinking the character of the calm, impartial judge, assumed the rôle of the paltry politician, and thus "given to party what was meant for mankind."

The judicial grandeur which they had an opportunity to illustrate has sunk into the insignificance of the sharp practitioner, and the cuteness and tricks of the artful pettifogger have been preferred, by them, to the grand and ennobling qualities of the jurist and the statesman.

The mere certificate of a de facto governor (the synonym in Louisiana of unprincipled usurpation) is accepted as sacramental, and the prima facie evidence which it affords, covered though it be with fraud and redolent of corruption, is treated as though it were pure as Vestal yow and immaculate as Deity itself.

If William Pitt Kellogg and his facile secretary of state, conspiring with a corrupt returning board, had certified that certain persons had been duly appointed presidential electors, and these electors had forbeen duly appointed presidential electors, and these electors had forwarded their statement and list, to the effect that they had cast their votes for Peter Cooper, although, in fact, not one of these spurious electors had ever received a single vote as such, and although allegations, in proper form and under the law, had been submitted, accompanied with tender of proof to show the fraud and villainy of the proceedings, such mendacious documents, under the ruling of the partisan majority of this "high commission," (kigh on the principle of 'lucus a non lucendo,") must be accepted as unimpeachable, final, and conclusive.

By such arbitrary ruling, Louisiana is robbed of her constitutional

By such arottrary ruling, Louisiana is robbed of her constitutional rights and the true voice of her people suppressed.

She is, of herself, powerless to remedy all the wrongs of this commission. Her appeals to her sister States have been ringing in their ears for nearly a decade, and when at length the coveted prize of her regeneration, relief from her terrible thralldom and restoration to equality in the household of States, seemed almost within her grasp, the mailed hand of relentless tyranny with its iron glove smites her to the earth. Prostrate at the feet of her enemies, worn and tired in the struggle in which, single handed, she has engaged, she now raises her voice in the arony of despair, and invokes the she now raises her voice in the agony of despair, and invokes the good people of our common country, in the name of holy recollections of the past, by the memory of her dead sons whose deeds of valor once saved the great Southwest from desolation by a foreign foe, in the cause of truth and honor, in the name of civil liberty and constitutional freedom, to save her from the polluting touch which approaches but to desecrate, and, before God and man, protests against approaches but to desecrate, and, before God and man, protests against the fearful wrong about to be perpetrated on her.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the few republicans, comparatively speaking, who voted for the electoral-commission bill. I voted for it in good faith, believing that it was intended as a measure of peace and harmony calculated to carry us over a great danger that was hanging over us. We were assured that it was to be the great solution of our difficulties by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Lamar] and the equally distinguished gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Hill.] both of whom are about being translated to a higher sphere. I suppose that they and their democratic companions were acting in good faith, as I was. And I have been perfectly astonished at the large amount of opposition that has been made to it by the democratic party when they have refused to accept the determination of the tribunal of their own creation. It seems to me as if it were a want of good faith toward the ation. It seems to me as if it were a want of good faith toward the House and toward the people. They, however, must be the judges of that.

The democratic party is endeavoring to get away from the decision of that tribunal with the cry of fraud. They are ringing the changes on it from one end of the Union to the other, and they are now quarreling with the decision of their own tribunal because, as they allege, it has refused, contrary to what they call the spirit of the law, to receive evidence with regard to the election in Louisiana. But if they will carry their minds back to the time when that bill was under discussion before the two Houses, they will find that that question of evidence was mooted both here and there, and before the committee that had the matter in charge in drafting the bill; when it was decided in every case that there should be no imperative injunction upon the commission to receive evidence, and that there was to be cided in every case that there should be no imperative injunction upon the commission to receive evidence, and that there was to be no absolute prohibition against it, but that, in the language of the act, "they may therein take into view such petitions, depositions, and other papers, if any, as shall, by the Constitution and now existing law, be competent and pertinent in such consideration."

In fact I think I can show by the record that it is they who have opposed the introduction of a provision for the reception of evidence into the bill. When that bill was before the House, on the 25th day of January, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Payne] had that bill in charge; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] rose in his place and offered to the democratic party and to the House the introduction of a proposition that would have admitted all the evidence that they now contend for, but the democracy refused to acdence that they now contend for, but the democracy refused to accept it. In the bill of the gentleman from Ohio it was provided, among other things, that—

When all such objections so made to any certificate, vote, or paper from a State shall have been received and read, all such certificates, votes, and papers so ob-jected to, and all papers accompanying the same, together with such objections, shall be forthwith submitted to said commission, which shall proceed to consider the

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] then rose and offered the following amendment:

Together with all the testimony relative to the recent presidential election in said States which has been taken under authority of either House of Congress, so far as the same may by the said commission be considered as relevant.

Here was an offer to the gentlemen who had that bill in charge to Here was an offer to the gentlemen who had that bill in charge to introduce all the testimony that could be gathered from the two commissions to Louisiana, and they refused to admit it. As I have said, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. PAYNE,] who had charge of the bill, refused to admit the amendment; but it was in the power of the majority of the House, if they desired to have that evidence before the commission, to vote down the previous question on the bill and have that privilege and that principle ingrafted into it, they refused to do it; and it comes, then, with a bad grace from anybody, and especially from the majority of this House, to charge upon the commission that they have refused to admit evidence. They were tied down to the Constitution and laws by the terms of the bill. The Constitution and laws, as they were expounded before that commission by the ablest laws, as they were expounded before that commission by the ablest counsel in the country, clearly provide that they were bound to adhere to the certificates that were returned and that they could not go behind them. The precedents to that effect are sufficiently numerous. But even if they had agreed to accept as evidence the testimony taken by the committee, where would they have got evidence that would have satisfied the minds of that commission? They could not have found it in the report of the committee of this House that went down to Louisiana to take testimony, because the testimony that was brought before that committee only gave a one-sided view of the case. When we went down to the city of New Orleans the minority of the committee asked the privilege of having the testimony taken of witnesses there who had been driven in from their parishes, the "bull-dozed" parishes, because of the intimidation and violence there. There were a hundred and more of such witnesses within rifle-shot of the room in which the committee sat. The majority of the committee refused to have them subpœnaed and brought before the committee. I say then that if the testimony that had been taken by that committee had been admitted, there would have been no testimony that would have shown more than a one-sided view of the case. True it is that by dint of cross-examination and by some opportunities that were accidentally afforded by individuals residing in the city of New Orleans, we were enabled slightly to lift the curtain that had been kept down to shield the enormities that had been practiced in the different parishes, and we were enabled to get a glimpse of the whippings, the scourgings, the murders, and the massacres perpetrated in parts of Louisiana. But I have no hesitation in saying here to-day to this House and the country that a history of the dark and bloody ground of the bull-dozed parishes in Louisiana has never yet been written and never will be written so long as the democratic party in Louisiana can prevent it. that would have shown more than a one-sided view of the case. True been written and never will be written so long as the democratic party in Louisiana can prevent it.

They talk of fraud. I want to know if there be any greater fraud in the whole history of this question than that presented by the certificate of John McEnery purporting to be governor of Louisiana? There was no greater fraud attempted to be perpetrated upon the American people than that attempted to be perpetrated by the democratic party through the agency of said John McEnery. He, a private citizen of Louisiana, certified that eight more private citizens of Louisiana were the legally constituted electors for that State for President and Vice-President of the nation. Now he never was governor of and Vice-President of the nation. Now he never was governor of Louisiana except for two short days, when he was kept in the guber-natorial chair by the bayonets of the White League of the State of Louisiana in the city of New Orleans headed by Colonel Ogden. The gentlemen whose names he has sent forward as electors are not entitled to hold those offices. They have no certificate from the legally constituted authorities or returning board of Louisiana in their hands. The only legally elected governor of that State was W. P. Kellogg, recognized by the national Executive, recognized by this House, rec-Louisiana, through the agency of the Wheeler compromise made two years ago, and he gave certificates to the eight electors whose votes the commission has decided should be counted.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. McMAHON. We have had two decisions from the joint commission; one in the case of the State of Florida, and the other in the case of the State of Louisiana. We have already rejected for good reasons the decision in the case of the State of Florida. We are now to consider whether we shall receive or reject its decision in the Louisiana case. In my judgment the report which is now before us is worse in its consequences upon the American people than the one we have already rejected. In the one case the majority of the commission disregarded the Constitution of the United States, but in the sion disregarded the Constitution of the United States, but in the present case it has been so bold as to overrule it.

We have but one more State to submit to that commission, the State of Oregon. I think that none of us on this side of the House look forward with much hope, unless the instinct which seems to have directed this tribunal from the beginning of its deliberations shall continue unto the end, and that is the instinct to give votes to persons which do not belong to them.

What has been decided in the two reports already laid before this House? In the Florida case it was decided that the State court has no power to rectify the wrong, that the Legislature has no power, and that the governor of the State, following the decision of the court and pursuing the direction of the Legislature, has no power to give relief from the fraud which has been perpetrated in giving that State relief from the fraud which has been perpetrated in giving that State

We then come to the State of Louisiana, and having foreclosed by the Florida decision every State tribunal that might give us relief, what do we find? Why, sir, according to the commission, that there is no national tribunal to which we can appeal for relief from perjury, forgery, and bribery of the basest kind when they have combined to steal or sell the vote of a State. This makes a compendium of continuously of the base of the state of the stitutional law that I for one would be ashamed to hand down to my children or to posterity.

What was offered to be proved in the Louisiana case? That the returning board was composed of men without character and without the confidence even of their co-conspirators in infamy; that they refused to fill the vacancy upon the board in order that there might be no honest man to spy out or prevent their dishonest transactions no honest man to spy out or prevent their dishonest transactions; that they had taken returns sent to them by the people and forged and altered and destroyed the true returns; that they had sworn to falsehoods before several committees of your House in an attempt to defend their netarious conduct; that they had paraded the country with the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana in their hands, looking for the highest bidder, in order that this great empire of modern days might be knocked down to the best purchaser in the presidential market. In ancient days the power of the pretorian guard was necessary to deliver the throne it had sold. We simplify the transaction. We organize a tribunal to confirm the sale by refusing to hear any proof of the fact.

And this great tribunal of ours, for which we voted with so much innocence and simplicity of heart, and from which we who were lawyers, with the instincts of our profession, hoped so much, this great tribunal says there is no relief in the executive, judicial, or legislative power of the State, no relief in Congress, no relief anywhere, but the purchaser can come into the presence of the two Houses, before as many witnesses as can be assembled upon so solemn an occasion, with the representatives of foreign nations looking on, with the eyes of the intelligent world upon us, and shamelessly demand in front of the presiding officers of the two Houses and from the two Houses an indispensable title to the high offices he has bought.

O what a doctrine for the members of this House to hand down to posterity! In my judgment this monstrous law does not come from

In my judgment this monstrous law does not come from posterity! In my judgment this monstrous law does not come from the heart of the patriot or from the head of the lawyer. The commission that gives us such a decision has been caught by the immense prize in its power and within its grasp, rather than influenced by a desire to perform its honest and conscientious duty.

I was one of those who went to Louisiana to investigate the election in that State. I went into the very midst of what is known as the bull-dozed country. I saw the men and the women of Louisiana; and lived among them for a time. And I say here, with all the light we were enabled to gather there, not only from what we saw and what was testified to before us, but from what was reported by others of other subcommittees—I say that Samuel J. Tilden carried the State of Louisiana as fairly and honestly as Rutherford B. Hayes carried of Louisiana as fairly and honestly as Rutherford B. Hayes carried the State of Ohio.

the State of Ohio.

O, Mr. Speaker, it grieves one to think of the condition of that State! Rich in all her resources, peopled by as honest and as upright a community as any in the country—the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] to the contrary notwithstanding—held captive for four years in the den of thieves and robbers, compelled to submit to every outrage that a people could be subjected to. After she, by superhuman efforts, has burst the bonds of the robbers who held her and of the plunderers who were sucking her life-blood, and after she had escaped from her captures and thrown hereaft before that we Houses for protections. from her captors and thrown herself before the two Houses for protec-tion, she is dragged back to her prison and her woes, and partisanship under the pretense of judicial sanctity binds her hand and foot, and gives her over again to the pursuing scoundrels who have captured her in the very face of the nation. Can the country tolerate such infamy?

If I have any time left, Mr. Speaker, I will yield to my colleague, [Mr. RICE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes of his time remaining. Mr. RICE. Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I arise to enter my solemn, earnest protest against the finding of the majority of the commission in the case of Louisiana. Sir, monstrous as was their finding in the case of Florida, which isiana. Sir, monstrous as was their finding in the case of Florida, which amazed and confounded the people of the whole country, it is as nothing compared to the enormous iniquity of their verdict in the case of Louisiana, which has outraged every sense of decency and propriety, and put the b'ush of shame upon the face of every American citizen who loves truth, justice, and fair dealing, and who detests deception, violence, fraud, and crime. In the Florida case evidence of the ineligibility as to electors was admitted by the commission. In the Louisiana case the commission reverses without reason or consistency its own decision, dealining to reverse without reason or consistency its own decision, declining to receive evidence of the ineligibility of electors from that State, and absolutely refusing to arbitrate questions in dispute, notwithstanding fraud, illegality, crime, and corruption was shown to exist to such an extent that 10,000 sovereign voters of that State were disfranchised.

What is the status of the case? An act has been passed to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon. The second section of this act provides that all returns counting from disputed States, or States that have more than one return purporting to but ed States, or States that have more than one return purporting to be certificates of electoral votes given at the last preceding election for President and Vice-President in such State, shall be submitted to a commission of fifteen, who solemnly swear "to impartially examine and consider all questions submitted to them." Further, the act provides that all certificates, votes, objections, and papers accompanying, from the disputed States or States with double returns, shall be submitted to the commission to consider and decide what are the votes from such States, and what persons were duly appointed electors in such States. Now the simple question is: has the commission considered and passed upon the questions submitted to them in the Louisiana case as contemplated by the law? Clearly not, and no one will pretend to say they have. The prisoner is convicted and sentenced without trial and without a word of evidence. Has the commission not violated the law, both in letter and spirit?

The consideration of this question is above all persons and parties. It is not whether Tilden or Hayes was elected to the Presidency, but what electors fairly and honestly received the votes at the ballot-boxes, and who ought in right and justice be inaugurated President and Vice-President. For this was the commission created and clothed with all the powers of both Houses of Congress. Have they done it? No; but, refusing to consider fraud and corruption, the legality of the returning board, the constitutionality of the State government be submitted to the commission to consider and decide what are the the returning board, the constitutionality of the State government of Louisiana, the ineligibility of certain electors, they have by their action legalized fraud and re-affirmed the conclusions of the infamous Louisiana returning board, which tried to sell the electoral vote of that State at from two hundred thousand to one million of dollars. Yes, sir; they have solemnly proclaimed to the civilized world that fraud is an element in our institutions stronger than the Constitution, more potent than law, and by the exercise of which the very pinnacle of fame in this country, if not in the world, may be attained. Alas for liberty and free government! Alas for republican institutions and the freedom of the ballot, if such thingsmust be endured! A despotism of power controlling, through a fraudulent returning board and a commission not less despicable, the freedom, rights, and liberties of the American people.

But it is said it would not be acting honorably and in good faith to interpose objections and delay the action of the commission and counting the votes. Is it wrong to prevent crime? Is it dishonorable to intercept fraud? The electoral bill was passed in order that its provisions might be carried out. The commission, having all the its provisions might be carried out. The commission, having all the powers and duties of the two Houses, were called upon to exercise them in arbitrating and deciding various questions in dispute in the State of Louisiana. This they entirely failed to do. Members of Congress, acting in a spirit of conciliation and patriotism and in response to the universal demand that went up in its favor all over the land, in good faith voted the commission these duties and powers. The commission has failed to exercise them; and furthermore refuse to so do. This non-performance on their part entirely absolves the members; and, now that the law is broken and disobeved, every principle bers; and, now that the law is broken and disobeyed, every principle of honor and good faith disregarded, would it not be cowardly in us not to protest and if possible prevent the consummation of so great not to protest and if possible prevent the consummation of so great a wrong?

The commission by their action say they have no jurisdiction over Louisiana matters; that is, that they have not the power to do that which they were created and given authority to do. Mr. Speaker, I would remand the whole question of the Louisiana matter to them for reconsideration. Ask them again to consider and pass upon these crimes and frauds at which the world is appalled, and which the two Houses of Congress and the whole country expected and demanded they should do. Let the sunlight of heaven shine in, and whatever the verdict, so that it be truthfully and honestly made upon investigation of the facts, the people will be satisfied, and not otherwise. Should the tribunal again refuse to act, claiming they have no jurisdiction, then let the two Houses of Congress displace them, and create a tribunal that can and will act. create a tribunal that can and will act.

Mr. Speaker, I would exhaust all legal and constitutional means within the law to prevent the terrible fraud that is sought to be imposed upon the people of this country. I would see that this law should be executed in good faith, in letter and spirit, as it was intended by those who framed and made it. Less than this will not satisfy the people of this country; and I appeal to this democratic House not to disappoint their honest expectations.

If this finding stand, a Government of order is supplanted by a Government of violence and fraud; and is it not the beginning of the end of our republican institutions?

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. Speaker, the vital and overshadowing issue presented to the returning board of Louisiana was whether there had been such violence and intimidation in certain localities as would invalidate the election and which would compel or justify the returning board in throwing out from their return the votes actually cast in those localities. It is possible, as often happens in cases before courts, that both parties in this contest may have made exaggerated statements and claims.

The republicans allege a cruel, barbarous state of affairs; the dem-crats make a wholesale denial and assert that the election and can-vass preceding it were quiet and peaceful and without the slightest taint of violence and intimidation. Which position is the correct one, or shall we find the exact truth between these two extremes? In my judgment there were disorders, turbulence, violence, lawless-ness, and intimidation, which affected the election. I come to this conclusion after a candid examination of the evidence, after hearing the testimony of witnesses, and after conversations with people of Louisiana of all shades of political opinion. It is impossible, in the brief time allotted to me, to go into any detail of incidents, but the general result is this: that the election was not entirely free, fair, and peaceable; that it was influenced by threats and violence; that there was in some localities a determination on the part of certain democrats to carry the election, which led to lawlessness and excesses which no good citizen can applaud and which the people where I live would not tolerate.

I can appreciate the desire of the white people of Louisiana to gain political control of their State; the sense of humiliation they feel that negroes and strangers occupy the positions of trust and profit, and their indignation and resentment at the wrongs they believe they have suffered; but I cannot understand how fair-minded men, who have studied the condition of Louisiana and the history of the recent election, can assert that the democrats of that State have been blameless

Now, the question presents itself: did these disorders and corrupt and illegal practices, which must have had more or less influence upon the election, change the result? Were they sufficient to change the majority for Tilden, as shown by the ballots actually cast, to a majority for Hayes? This is the question to which the people desire an answer.

The prejudiced democrat who goes to Louisiana, either as one of a board of distinguished visitors or as a member of a congressional committee, listening eagerly and giving credence only to such statements as will aid his party and secure the success of his candidate, comes back and declares the charges of fraud and intimidation to be a mere lying pretense. The prejudiced republican who goes there with his mind inflamed with the memory of the political murders of 1868 and the cruel atrocities of subsequent years in that excited and unhappy State, and who listens only to the revolting details of hangings, shootings, and whippings, exaggerated in number and in description, comes back with the conviction that there was wide-spread scription, comes back with the conviction that there was wide-spread terror which made a free ballot impossible.

Who is to judge between these partisans? Shall the decision come from official bodies required by law to ascertain the truth, or shall the judgment be based upon partisan inquiries instituted by partisan clamor and warped by partisan wishes? Are we to accept the decisions of the legally constituted authorities, or shall we insist upon preconciled with the property of the proper preconceived opinions which spring from prejudices and personal in-terests? The lawful and sole tribunal charged by the laws of the State of Louisiana to adjudicate this question is the returning board. The result declared by them is the legal result. The law has made them the jury and has not vested in this House the authority to re-verse or annul their verdict. Still the American people are interested to know whether the conclusion of this returning board be right, whether the result declared by them be equitable.

In my judgment, and I will not pretend to be free from party bias, there was intimidation and terrorism in certain portions of Louisiana, such as the laws of that State declare shall render the election void; and this existed to such an extent as substantially to change the result. I do not claim that every polling-place thrown out by the returning board stands proved by unequivocal testimony. There are precincts where a careful weighing of the testimony by other minds would have resulted in a different conclusion; but the main, substantial fact remains that the election in sundry parishes was controlled and influenced illegally, and to an extent which changed the result from what it would have been had the vote been freely, fairly, and honestly expressed.

It is quite the habit in this Hall to denounce the returning board. All the epithets of the language which denote vileness, corruption, and rascality have been applied to the members of this board. I do not defend them. But when told how vile are these men, how wickedly they have used their power, how they have desolated and impoverished that fair State, and how they have beggared and disfranchised the people, I cannot but reflect what must have been the condition of a State which made such a board a necessity; which required such a system to guard against violence and to protect in their political rights the timid and ignorant and inoffensive against the political rights the timid and ignorant and inoffensive against the strong and desperate and lawless. The woes which Louisiana suffers, the misfortunes and miseries and poverty which she has endured, come not from her returning board, but from those evils which made such an institution a necessity. The returning board is not the cause and origin of their troubles. In order to make violence fruitless it has been deemed wise by her own people to confer this power. I do not defend or approve the system. But I do condemn the practices and influences which gave an excuse for the creation of such an institution. And when the men of Louisiana and elsewhere declaim, not without reason, that such a board is anti-republican and the possessor of powers which can be corruptly and despotically used against a free people, I beg to remind them that the sure way to accomplish its repeal is to remove its necessity. This cannot be done by treating lightly, without a word of deprecation, the many done by treating lightly, without a word of deprecation, the many murders, whippings, and other outrages which lawless and ruffianly men have perpetrated upon defenseless republicans. Waving them one side with a simple statement that they have no political signifione side with a simple statement that they have no political significance, and are of no consequence, does not satisfy the people of the country. When such things cease and when the conservative, intelligent, peace-loving, property-holding citizens of Louisiana put away their indifference and incredulity and stamp with public disapproval and condemnation these crimes of whites against the blacks, whether political or non-political, then there will be no returning boards to vex them.

Our free institutions can only be maintained under a fair and just exercise of the rights of citizenship at the ballot-box. Secure to the people the free and unrestrained exercise of the right to vote, and there will be no complaint about the fairness and honesty of the count. A free election is not possible where laws are not respected and where vigilance committees and rifle companies undertake to re-strain and punish crime. When violence and intimidation control the election to an extent that prevents a full, free, and fair vote, it is the grossest injustice to allow such votes to decide the result. returning board of Louisiana may be a suspicious body, but the rifle clubs of Ouachita Parish are none the less so. This affectation of su-perior virtue on the democratic side is useless. With the knowledge that threats and violence were aiding to increase the democratic vote, which no active democratic politicians denounced or prevented, they now demand an "honest count." That count cannot be honest which registers the votes influenced and controlled by lawlessness and crime. I have no feeling toward the people of Louisiana but good-will, and I would say nothing to offend or injure any of the citizens of that State. I sympathize with them in their misfortunes, in their paralyzed industries, their depreciated values; in their disorganized society, in their burdensome taxation, and in the maladministration of their local government which has failed to secure proper protection for life and property. A restored prosperity, with peace and good order, will come to them not through the acts of violent politicians obstructing the free vote of her people in any national political contest, but by the correction of the mistakes and errors which caused this imbecility, disorganization, and disorder.

Mr. COX obtained the floor and said: I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WATTERSON.]

Mr. WATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, if the acceptance of the inevitable with resolution and dignity be the highest, as it is the rarest, form of courage known among men, it is made in this present instance the harder by the consciousness of double-dealing and foul play. Two courses are open to the majority on this floor: on the one hand, Two courses are open to the majority on this floor: on the one hand, passionate outery, at once impotent and childish; on the other hand—offering no needless obstruction to the progress of events—an earnest, manly, but temperate protest against what we believe to be a great and grievous wrong. In my judgment the latter is our duty, plain and clear. We owe it to the necessities of the case, we owe it to the country, we owe it to ourselves. That we were duped by false pretenses into a snare furnishes no reason why we should forget the obligations that always press upon honorable men. In the very act of passing the electoral commission bill we provided for the contingency which has come upon us. I voted for that measure in perfect good faith. The result has gone against me, and detestable as I must think the means that brought it about I accept it as a finality. I shall go to my people and shall tell them all, for as at the present advised they know only a part of it. And when they have taken time vised they know only a part of it. And when they have taken time for reflection I am sure that they will illustrate the wisdom and the grace of moderation, doing nothing that does not become good citizens. Life will go forward in spite of all this. There is yet much to live for in this rough world, and among the rest that day of reckoning, dies ira, dies illa,

When the dark shall be light, And the wrong be made right.

And the wrong be made right.

[Applause.]
Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, after many years of active service as a member of this House, recalling all the vicissitudes of our politics for twenty years, I cannot feel responsible to-day that after the verdict of the American people it should prove a fruitless verdict. In 1864, on the 16th of May, I presented a resolution to this House which passed. It related to the regularity and authenticity of the returns of electoral yetes and for a leav to provide for the invisidiction as well of electoral votes and for a law to provide for the jurisdiction as well as the course of proceeding in case of a "real controversy." The Judiciary Committee took no action at that time. Allow me to quote the resolution. It is a compend of the situation:

Resolved. That the Judiciary Committee be directed to take into consideration the propriety of reporting a bill providing for the decision of any questions which may arise as to the regularity and authenticity of the returns of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States, or the right of the persons who gave the votes, or the manner in which they ought to be counted; and that such law provide for the jurisdiction, as well as the course of proceeding, in a case of real controversy.

Peril gives the lessons of years in a day. Unless danger is followed by diseased and gloomy misfortune, its lessons are medicine and its teaching light. All the remedies for human ills do not come from political society; nor do all the splendors of the heavens cure the political society; nor do all the splendors of the heavens cure the remediless. Hope buoyed up the soul of a great people during fifteen years of wrong. It still sustained them after fraud had tainted and pestilent wrong had shrouded the verdict of an uprisen people. Hope itself almost perished in view of the events since the election, and especially those which this Congress has witnessed.

The people of the United States, desiring unity and peace, honesty and rejuvenescence, spoke in all legal forms provided by a complicated system of electors in favor of a party whose traditions, principles and history of honorable services have rendered it deathless.

ciples, and history of honorable service have rendered it deathless, ciples, and history of honorable service have rendered it deathless, and against a new party of expedients and pretensions. It was unmistakably called to the high places of the land. It matters not who were its select exponents or candidates; and it matters not now what were its shibboleths and platforms. Whether wise or not, far sighted or not, just to all races and sections or not, prudent in economy, provident in matters of tax and fisc or not, organic and faithful to the rules of construction applied under the genius of our peculiar polity or not, the unquestioned popular majority of three hundred thousand pronounced for relief and change, and for the democracy as the directing organ of that relief and change.

By the system of State and Federal authority this Federal change and relief was to be certified by certain State organisms and verified and relief was to be certified by certain State organisms and verified by a certain procedure under our Federal Constitution.

It was early made clear by certain maneuvers and devices of politicians that the voice of the people of two if not three States was to be muffled, or rather that a false voice was to be heard in the land proclaiming that which was not for that which was. It was the siren voice of Duessa and not the blessed voice of Una. It was a voice which sounded high for State rights like that of the actor through the Grecian mask, hollow and mocking, while at the same time it seemed to proceed from some hero or demigod raised to unusual height by the tricks of the stage.

Nor, sir, do I feel responsible for the steps which were wisely per-haps, or unwisely, but certainly with a view to prudence, taken in framing the electoral bill. That bill is the law. We know what it is, what its provisions are. I knew and felt that some virtue had gone out of this House when we had passed it, but I did not exactly see where the virtue had alighted. [Laughter.] I knew the old privileges of the Commons had departed, but in the interest of peace I gave a reluctant vote for the bill.

gave a reluctant vote for the bill.

It was voted in a spirit of confidence and in a moment of peril, and under terror of force and revolution which speaks more for the caution than for the pluck of our people. Still it was voted. We are bound by its decisions, but not by its reasons. The faith of those who voted it was strong in the integrity and purity of their case; and next in the fidelity and independence of the tribunal. We besed our faith in the armine.

placed our faith in the ermine.

placed our faith in the ermine.

But one strange thing about the bill is this: that while we are permitted to vote in this House, yet after all it is a sort of post mortem vote. [Laughter.] Although we are permitted to argue, it is a argumentum ad post factum. Although, sir, there is some utility in the dissection of the dead and although there may be something gained by the dissection of the living, [laughter,] yet it seems to me to be proper now to look at one particular clause of the law before I state my reasons for making protest against this measure.

We are graciously permitted under this bill to argue after the matter is accomplished, and although we vote and although we carry our vote in the House we are "gone." [Laughter.] We gain nothing. We are permitted to talk ten minutes after the counting and the conclusion. It is the old Virgilian line over again about Rhadamanthus, judge of hell—Castigatque auditque dolos—the old rule of hanging a man and trying him afterward. [Laughter.] That is our condition to-day.

condition to-day

condition to-day.

And what is it we try? Why, sir, everything as to testimony and facts, and forgery and perjury, and force is aliande—outside—not to be considered. Truth and justice and morality and fair dealing—aliande. The House is aliande. [Laughter.] All its acts and the acts of its committees and their reports, all the facts gathered in these southern States—aliande! [Laughter.] Nothing to be considered but the bare, naked fact of a certificate, based upon what? On forgery and chicanery. On a returning board, which returned the fact that 10,400 democratic votes were not counted; and the supervisor of registration of Louisiana whose business was to transmit the votes, but who failed to transmit 2,900 democratic votes, and after they came but who failed to transmit 2,900 democratic votes, and after they came only four hours were left between the time of the organization of the board and the decision! Where and how could the State correct such returns in that time? It is a mockery. Why, sir, nothing but forgery and chicanery are pertinent and competent. It is said that beauty deformed and mutilated is more hideous than natural ugliness. The Parthenon is deformed by Turkish barbarism and despoiled by Lord Elgip's archaeological science; and so our institutions. poiled by Lord Elgin's archæological science; and so our institutions, including, I fear, the high judicial tribunal, are made detestable, not merely by adventurous, barbarous, ignorant, and reckless rascality, but legal science comes in with its spotless ermine to make the spectacle a hideous deformity, by consummating the grand outrage of history. Fraud taints everything; all codes, human and divine, pursue it into every relation of society and avenue of trust.

Why, Mr. Speaker, some member over there said he was sick of fraud, of the cry of fraud. Earth is sick and heaven is weary of the hollow words which statesmen and judges use when they talk of right and justice when such things can be accomplished. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, by human law there is no statute of limitations, to protect fraud. It never runs for fraud. In divine law it is written, "There is no rest for the wicked." [Laughter.] Every avenue of society, every relation of trust which fraud permeates shall at last be investigated and made null. The time will come, if not now, in some investigated and made null. The time will come, if not now, in some near future, when gentlemen on the other side, who now langh and taint because of this condition in which the democrats are caught, will repent of this great crime of history of which they are participes

Time never runs to condone fraud, and in all God's universe there is to be ceaseless unrest for its vicious votaries. Quibbles from lawyers, technicalities from judges, special snapperadoes from the intellect are as grass before the mower where fraud taints and blackens. The people cannot understand why it should be protected. Chop logic and split hairs to the nicest division of logomachy, call in the schoolmen, make your legal syllogisms and refine your subtleties, the everlasting rule remains that where fraud is found unlity and void follow. Foxes by no doubling or hunting, can confound the fact follow. Foxes by no doubling or hunting, can confound the fact that fraud is the most offensive element in human society, and most to be feared when the fox takes the form of the ermine.

to be feared when the fox takes the form of the ermine.

Ah! they called in the ermine to help them. The ermine is a little animal. It is an emblem of purity; it would rather be caught than be bedraggled in the mire. Hunters put mud around its haunt to catch it. But where is the ermine now? Ah! the fox has become the ermine. But no canning, no craft, no human law, no divine law can ever condone fraud. All codes and the histories of all nations cry out against it. Crime cannot breed crime forever. Ask the people of this country. Fraud is to them an endless offense. I was about, Mr. Speaker, before the hammer fell, to refer to the holy writ, so that gentlemen on the other side may have time for repentance.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Here the hammer fell.] [Laughter and applause.] Mr. DANFORD rose. Mr. COX. With permission of the House I will read from Psalms Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief

Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. KELLEY. I object. [Laughter.]
Mr. SOUTHARD. I hope the gentlemen on that side will listen to those words, that they may have time to repent.

Several members objected.

Mr. COX. The Bible is aliunde with these gentlemen. [Great laughter.]

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, early in December it was found that from the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon there were at least more than one set of electoral returns. Questions growing out of the elections in these States became the subject of heated party controversy; and Congress determined on the last day of January that there was either not wisdom or not patriotism enough in Congress to there was either not wisdom or not patriotism enough in Congress to determine these vexed questions; and a law was enacted by which it was provided that if more than one return, or paper purporting to be a return from a State, shall have been received by the President of the Senate, all such returns and papers should be submitted to the judgment and decision as to which is the true and lawful electoral vote of such State, of a commission, &c.

The law creating the electoral commission passed in both Houses by a large majority. The question as to which was the true and lawful return of the State of Louisiana was submitted to this commission, and we have before us for our present consideration its decision. We have the decision denounced from the other side of the House. We have the decision denounced by the party that created it. The commission is denounced for what? For having decided in the first place that neither House of Congress nor Congress itself can look further for the appointment of the electors of a State than to the certicate of its governor based upon the finding of its returning officers. This was the first proposition decided by the commission. In the second place they found that William Pitt Kellogg was the governor of that State in December last. They have found that this returning board was the legally constituted returning officer of that State. These are the main propositions found by the commission and sub-mitted to us for our consideration. And for the reason that they have decided what, in my judgment, putting aside party passion, would be the almost universal voice of the whole American people, they are met in this House with denunciation, with a charge of unfair dealing and double-dealing, by the very party that created them. And the assumption is made by gentlemen on the other side of the House that, because the commission have decided that under the Constitution and laws of our country they have no right to go down beyond the certificate of the governor, beyond the action of the returning board, to look into the votes cast at the various precincts and parishes of Louisiana in November last—because they have thus held that they cannot do an impracticable and an impossible thing, the assumption is made on the other side of the Howe that there is read at the better of the the other side of the House that there is fraud at the bottom of these returns, thus begging the entire question before the country, begging the entire question that was presented to the returning board.

Mr. Speaker, we by no means concede that fraud is at the founda-tion of the returns made in favor of the Hayes electors from Louisi-ana. My judgment is that when the history of the November election shall be written it will be found rather that murder, intimidation, and outrage failed in their purpose in Louisiana than that the State was given to Hayes by fraud.

I want to call attention to one single fact that is made to stand out prominent in the picture presented in this House. I refer to Vernon Parish. Vernon Parish! We hear of it in the protest read at the Clerk's desk and signed by every democratic member of the House. I concede that in the case of Vernon Parish there was a tampering with the record. I concede that the votes that should properly have with the record. I concede that the votes that should properly have been credited to the Tilden electors were transferred to the Hayes electors. But who did it? It changed no result in the State whatever. Who were responsible for it? Every member of the returning board has sworn that he knew nothing of this transposition. [Ironical laughter on the democratic side of the House.] But I know the fact that a committee of this House had before it a clerk of that returning heard who by his own confession was villain enough to have turning board who by his own confession was villain enough to have done this thing. I know further, from the the testimony of a democratic witness, Duncan S. Kenner, that there was democratic money in the hands of the reform party of Louisiana to corrupt either the returning board or any member of that body. These are facts that the country knows in regard to Vernon Parish. No, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the true was that the full rot of Louisiana to believe that if the true vote, the full vote of Louisiana had been recorded in November last there would have been a large majority in favor of the Hayes electors. I can stand upon these returns in the consciousness that right and justice have been done.

Mr. Speaker, a few hours hence the early watcher from New York may learn that the flag upon the Capitol has again been furled, and he will know that through the legally constituted authorities of the country it has been pronounced that Rutherford B. Hayes, having received 185 electoral votes, is duly elected President from the 4th day of March next. This declaration will be made and it will be accepted by the American people as a finality. And when it comes to his in-auguration, there is not an honest man in the whole of this land who will not congratulate himself upon the fact that, although investi-gating committees were sent to Florida and to Louisiana and to Oregon and found in those States much crookedness, in all the words spoken, the letters written, the telegrams sent, there has not been traced to the President-elect and to no member of his household one word that brings the blush of shame to the American people. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 20, 1877-10 a.m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recess having expired, the Senate resumes its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

At one o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and

Mr. President, the House has passed the following order:

Ordered, That the votes purporting to be electoral votes for President and Vice-President and which were given by William P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, L. A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, A. B. Levissee, O. H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, claiming to be electors for the State of Louisiana, be not counted.

I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House is now ready to meet the Senate in the Hall of

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Rep-

The Senate returned to its Chamber at two o'clock and twenty-eight minutes p. m., and the President pro tempore resumed the Chair.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF MICHIGAN.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The Senate having withdrawn from the joint meeting of the two Houses upon the submission of an objection to the certificate from the State of Michigan, the Chair will now lay before the Senate and have read such objections.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, object to the vote of Daniel L. rossman as an elector for the State of Michigan upon the grounds following, to wit:

That a certain Benton Hanchett, of Saginaw, Michigan, was voted for and certified to have been elected and appointed an elector for the State of Michigan. That the said Benton Hanchett was on the 7th day of November, 1876, the day of the presidential election and for a long period prior thereto had been, and, up to and after the 6th day of December, 1876, the day on which the electors voted, according to law, continued to be an officer of the United States, and held the office of United States commissioner under and by appointment of the United States court for Michigan, which was an office of trust and profit under the United States, and that as such officer he could not be constitutionally appointed an elector under the Constitution of the United States.

And further, that by the laws of the State of Michigan there is power to fill vacancies in the office of electors under and by virtue of the following statute, and not otherwise:

vacancies in the office of electors under and by virtue of the following statute, and not otherwise:

"The electors of President and Vice-President shall convene at the capital of the State on the first Wednesday of December; and if there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector occasioned by death, refusal to act, neglect to attend by the hour of twelve o'clock at noon of that day, or on account of any two of such electors having received an equal and the same number of votes, the electors present shall proceed to fill such vacancy by ballot and plurality of votes, and when all the electors shall appear or vacancies shall be filled as above provided, they shall proceed to perform the duties of such electors as required by the Constitution and laws of the United States."—Compiled Laws of 1871; compiler's section, 115.

And the undersigned further state that there was no vacancy in the office of elector for which said Hanchett was voted and to which he was not appointed by reason of the disquallification aforesaid; nor was any vacancy therein occusioned by the death, refusal to act, or neglect to attend of any elector at the hour of twelve o'clock at noon of the 6th day of December, 1876, nor on account of any two electors having an equal vote, nor in any manner provided for by the statute aforesaid.

And the undersigned therefore object that the election of Daniel L. Crossman by the electors present at Lansing, the capital of Michigan, on the 6th day of December, 1876, was wholly without authority of law, and was void, and he was not appointed an elector in such manner as the Legislature of Michigan directed.

Wherefore they say that said Daniel L. Crossman was not a duly appointed elector for the State of Michigan, and that his vote as an elector should not be counted.

And the undersigned hereto annex the evidence taken before the committee of the House of Representatives on the powers, privileges, and duties of the House to sustain said objection.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES, January 30, 1877.

BENTON HANCHETT sworn and examined.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Question. Where is your residence? Answer. Saginaw, Michigan. Q. Were you a candidate for the position of presidential elector in Michigan at the late election?

A. I was. Q. On what ticket? A. On the republican ticket. Q. Were you elected?

A. On the republican ticket.

Q. Were you elected?

A. I was.

Q. Did you vote in the college of electors?

A. I did not.

Q. Were you present?

A. No, sir; I was not present.

Q. Did you absent yourself?

A. I remained away; I did not attend.

Q. For what reason did you remain away?

A. The facts are these: In the spring of 1863, when I was living at Owassee, in the county of Shiawassee, Michigan, some statements were made to me in reference to a man living in an adjorning town, who, I think, sold liquor and paid no taxes under the revenue law. The parties desired me to write to the district attorney, living in Detroit, in reference to the matter. I did so. I received a reply from the district attorney saying that he would have me appointed a commissioner by the United States court, and he inclosed to me instructions what to do in the case. About the same time that I received that I received a letter from the clerk of the court saying that I had been appointed, and, I believe, inclosing the form of oath for me to take as commissioner, and, I believe, I took it and returned it to him. I have no recollection on the subject, but I suppose I did of course. I forwarded instructions to the district attorney in reference to the matter and issued a warrant for the man. He came in and paid it, the matter dropped, and there my services as commissioner ended, to the best of my recollection. It was not an office which I wanted to hold, but I performed that duty. In the fall of 1855 I went from that county to where I now reside, in Saginaw. The matter had entirely passed out of my mind. I have never acted since. Two or three days before the time appointed for the meeting of the electors, my attention was called to the subject in two ways. One was that some person spoke to me and said, "You are a United States commissioner;" and the other was that I had noticed that an objection had been made to one of the electors in New Jersey on that ground. This called my mind to the circumstances which I have related to you, and in ord

A. No. sir, I never made any there was to it.
Q. How did you decline to act?
A. Some persons applied to me to do further duties as commissioner, and I stated that I would not act.
Q. And you never resigned your position?
A. I never resigned my position formally.

Q. Then you failed to perform the duties of the office after the particular case tentioned I

A. Yes, sir.
Q. But you never resigned the position?
A. I never resigned the position.
Q. Do you know who was appointed in your place in the college of electors?
A. I know by hearsay.
Q. Who was he?
A. Mr. Daniel L. Crossman, of Williamstown.

Q. Did you resign the office of elector?
A. No, sir.
Q. You just failed to attend?
A. I just failed to attend.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the vote cast by Daniel L. Crossman as an elector for the State of Michigan be, and the same is hereby, directed to be counted, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution resolution.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he knows the fact whether this man was an office-holder or not?

Mr. ALLISON. I have heard the testimony appended to these objections read, and from the testimony itself I thought there would be no question about it.

Mr. STEVENSON. But does it not show that he was?

Mr. LOGAN. He was not.
Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to have that testimony read, as I have not heard it. I was not in the other Chamber and do not know really what the testimony is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the testimony accompanying the objection.

The Secretary read the testimony of Benton Hanchett appended to the objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to have the Clerk read the law of Michigan, which I understand is given in the objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

The electors of President and Vice-President shall convene at the capitol of the State on the first Wednesday of December; and if there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector, occasioned by death, refusal to act, neglect to attend by the hour of twelve o'clock at noon of that day, or on account of any two of such electors having received an equal and the same number of votes, the electors present shall proceed to fill such vacancy by ballot and plurality of votes; and when all the electors shall appear, or vacancies shall be filled, as above provided, they shall proceed to perform the duties of such electors, as required by the Constitution and laws of the United States.—Compiled Laws of 1871, compiler's section 115.

Mr. BAYARD.—Mr. President, the testimony is not as electrons.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the testimony is not as clear upon Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the testimony is not as clear upon this very important subject as we might desire it to be, but from a hasty reading of the deposition it would seem that a person was voted for at the late election as a presidential candidate for elector in the State of Michigan, who, on the day of the election, held an office under the Government of the United States of profit, to wit, the office of commissioner of the circuit court. This is an office authorized by section 627 of the United States Statutes, to be filled by the circuit section 627 of the United States Statutes, to be inted by the vamination courts. I understand the fact to be established by the examination of the party himself before a committee of the House that he was appointed, that he did at one time act, and that he never resigned, but that he had declined to perform at some subsequent time the duties of his office.

Grant to its fullest extent the doctrine claimed that a man can put off at will the robes of office and that resignation in order to be accomplished shall not be accepted by the appointing power, yet it would seem in this case that no resignation has ever been attempted. Therefore it seems that on the night of November 7, when the polls closed and when the power of the State of Michigan under the Constitution of the United States regulated by the law of Congress had been exercised of appointing electors in number warranted by the Constitution of the United States, that the limitation imposed by the Constitution of the United States, that the limitation imposed by the Constitution upon the State in appointing electors not having been observed by the State, a failure to appoint according to the Constitution occurred. The grant of power to the States to appoint electors, and the limitation by way of exclusion of the class from whom the electors shall be chosen are in the same paragraph of the Constitution. The State may appoint a certain number, but she shall not appoint a Senator or Representative in Congress nor a certain class of officials.

There is no more power in the Congress for a ceept and count a greater number of electoral votes from a State than there is to accept any one or more of the disqualified class of persons, and it is in vain to say that either House of Congress may regard these limitations of the Constitution as to number and not regard the qualifications as to selection. There can be no answer made to this, there has been no answer made to it. The Constitution of the United States authorizes the State of Michigan to appoint eleven electors. Why eleven? Because that is the number of her Representatives and Senators combined. Suppose that she send here twenty-two or twelve, why would you reject the extra one or the extra eleven? Simply because the number which the State is authorized by the Constitution to appoint had been exceeded. Look further. Look further. You may appoint eleven, but you shall not appoint an officer of the United States, and the power to appoint eleven is conveyed in the very same frame of words, in the very same phrase of the Constitution, as the power containing the limitation that you shall not appoint from a certain official class.

Mr. President, if the Constitution of the United States is to guard and regulate the filling of this most important office, if we who are sworn to support this Constitution are to assist in protecting it, then how can we say that we are more bound by those words which limit us as to number than we are bound by their associate words that limit us as to class? Each has the same force, neither one more than the other. They are coupled in the same frame of words; and I have not yet heard any ingenuity that will answer that question. You may tell me that on the face of the certificate the number of electors appears. Suppose on the face of that certificate the names of the two Senators and the nine Representatives from Michigan had appeared as electors, do you tell me that these two Houses, recognizing these Senators and Members as of their respective bodies, and finding them returned as electors, in plain violation of the Constitution, are we not as much bound to exclude such votes and prevent their action as electors, when the Constitution directs us that no Senator or Representative shall be appointed an elector?

Are we not bound to observe our fealty to the Constitution as much when it describes our duty or limits the power of a State as to numbers as when it limits it as to classes? How can it be otherwise? Let some gentleman give answer to this, if answer there be; I have heard none to it as yet. The language of the Constitution on this subject cannot be torn apart. The limitation as to number and the limitation as to class are in the same sentence, and bind those who would obey the Constitution each with equal force.

Thus it is as to the time when this qualification must exist. You shall appoint so many, but they shall not be of a certain class. Of what time does that appointment speak? Clearly the day of the election, which is the time of the appointment. You shall not elect these men; you are not at liberty to vote for these men unless you choose to vote in violation of the constitutional limitation upon your power to choose electors at all. You may choose electors, but they shall not be from a certain class. Why, Mr. President, no argument is necessary to make the meaning of these words plain; no illustration is necessary. The duty to us comes charged in the same frame of words. The certificate itself will disclose the same state of facts, because it is in vain to say that you are more bound to exclude a Senator or Representative than you are to exclude this man if he was an officer of the United States holding an office of trust and profit on the night when the appointment must have been completed when the election failed.

Now, one word further. I have not had time to examine the statute of Michigan as to filling vacancies. Undoubtedly the act of Congress provides for that as it also provides for holding a new election where there has been a failure to elect, and I understand no such election has been here had. A vote for a man who cannot be appointed under the Constitution is a vote for no man. It is a vote thrown away. It is the same as a vote for a dead man; it is the same as a vote for the man in the moon; and therefore it was not a case of vacancy, because the office had not been filled. The terms "vacancy" and "to fill a vacancy" imply that the office has been filled and has from some cause been vacated. This distinction is well known. This Senate has recognized it; this Government in every department, judicial and legislative, has recognized it; the laws of the land administered in the States have recognized it; and the jurisprudence of other countries has recognized it, that where you are to fill a vacancy the office must have been filled before a vacancy can ex vi termini be said to have existed at all. Therefore it is

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, under the decision of the commission there is no doubt whatever in my mind that the proceedings of the electoral college in Michigan are entirely regular and valid; and upon the broad ground of those decisions I can support the vote of Michigan. But, sir, there is another ground which I urge with reference to this objection. There is no testimony before the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress, or before the Senate of the United States, that the elector in question ever was an officer of the United States. The mere statement, the mere production of what purports to be an examination of some person before a House committee is not evidence before the two Houses in their joint meeting that this man was an officer. No evidence whatever was offered in our joint meeting that this man was an officer. Objection was made that he was, and a certain paper purporting to be his affidavit before a House committee was read in connection with the objection; but the joint convention received no evidence upon the fact. Why, sir, in this case how will you attempt to prove that an elector was an officer of the United States at the time he was voted for as an elector? Are you going to prove it by his action as an officer merely? Are you going to prove it by his action as an officer merely? Are you going to prove it by his mere declaration? Why, sir, if this elector was an officer of the United States, it tends to defeat his right to be an elector, not to support an official act. You can support an official act by reputation that the person is an officer, but you cannot bring into operation or invoke a provision of the Constitution to take away the right of a citizen by proving by oral testimony that he was an officer. No, sir, the very best evidence the case will admit of in that instance must be presented to the body; and that is the written record of his appointment. You cannot prove that this man was an officer by merely his having ac tend to take away a right, and it must be established by the highest evidence the case will admit of.

Not only have we no such evidence before the two Houses in their joint session and before the Senate in its separate session, but there is no evidence whatever offered upon that point. Have we not as a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress the right to have the witnesses before us? Have we not a right to examine and cross-examine them? Are we to take such evidence as this in support of an objection which deprives a sovereign State of the Union of her vote for President of the United States? Has it come to this, that a great political party will seek to deprive a sovereign State of her rights in this matter? Why, Mr. President, at any other time and on any other occasion, the party or the persons who would attempt a thing of this kind would meet with such a rebuke from this whole nation that would prevent anything like a repetition of it.

But, sir, I think the point is unanswerable, that we have no evidence whatever that this man ever was an officer. The constitution of Michigan provides that in case of the neglect of an elector to attend at the electoral college, his place may be supplied, and under the constitution and under the law of Michigan his vote must be counted.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I look upon this objection, as it clearly is, as one of mere technicality, without merit, which if it could prevail would disfranchise the people of the State of Michigan, or at least it would be virtually disfranchising one-eleventh part of the people of that State. This certainly should not be done unless upon strictly legal grounds; unless we are compelled by the law to submit to such a result. The objection, however, is based upon no evidence whatever. What is it? It purports to be the verbal testimony of a man who testifies to facts creating an office; and, in doing so, testifies to the contents of a judicial record. It is a fact which must be proved by the record; and nobody has been competent, or had authority, to waive that kind of evidence. We are not competent to waive it. It lies upon those who raise this objection to sustain it by legal evidence, and that legal evidence was the record of a judicial court.

See where the danger lies in admitting evidence of this kind.

See where the danger lies in admitting evidence of this kind. Here was a man who was appointed as a circuit-court commissioner for a single transaction, some twelve or thirteen years ago, and has never acted since, never himself supposed he was a commissioner, never acted as such, nobody else supposing him to be such. The people voted for him in good faith. Now during that period of time who knows how many other persons have been subsequently appointed to that very position which he held? Who knows that that office has not become vacant or his appointment revoked, and so on, half a dozen times since? And what would show the fact one way or the other but the record of that court? And yet no attempt is made here to produce that, the only legal evidence of the fact. Again, he acted but once, which, according to the opinions of some, would not make him even a de facto officer.

So much for the question of evidence. Now, in the residue of what I have to say I shall place this case upon the broad ground that it stands the same as if Mr. Hanchett, once appointed circuit-court commissioner, had been the elector who cast the electoral vote, instead of Mr. Crossman, who was elected to fill his vacancy, and that is certainly fair. I put it precisely upon that ground, and now let us see what would be the result. I think the main object of the exclusion of persons holding office under the Federal Government was to protect the States from the undue influences of the Federal Government in the States upon the election of a President; and that unless the State or the United States have made some provision for trying the question of eligibility, by which the unqualified elector shall have been ousted before the time when he is called upon to exercise the duties of his office and before the functions of the office have ceased, he must certainly, in the absence of any proof of fraud or irregularity, be considered an elector de facto, and his acts as such, so far as regards the public, are valid and effectual; and the office itself having expired without any such ouster, the title of the elector cannot now be inquired into for the purpose of invalidating an election depending in part upon his vote as an elector.

That is the broad ground upon which I wish to place this whole matter. I believe the statute of the State of Michigan, however, would admit of a construction which would cover this vacancy. The language of the statute reads:

The electors of President and Vice-President shall convene at the capitol of the State on the first Wednesday of December; and if there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector, occasioned by death, refusal to act, neglect to attend by the hour of twelve o'clock at noon of that day, or on account of any two of such electors having received an equal and the same number of votes, &c.—

then the remaining electors are to fill the vacancy. I look upon this provision in reference to the failure to attend as covering this case precisely. It certainly does here, for there is no particle of legal testimony to show that Mr. Hanchett was ever a circuit-court commissioner, much less that he has not ceased to be such, and that several others in succession have since been appointed, which could only be shown by the record of the court.

shown by the record of the court.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, I have occupied a seat in this body but a very short time, and I have not taken part in the discussion of any question; but such remarks have fallen from the lips of various Senators on this floor and such startling propositions are announced in the decisions of the commission that I feel that I should dissent thereto, and give somewhat of my reasons therefor.

It has been told us on this floor, and time and time again by the commission, by their decisions, that there is no power under the Constitution or the laws to examine the question as to the eligibility or ineligibility of the electors at the time they were appointed. The reason for that decision, as I gather it from the arguments of the eminent counsel who appeared before the commission, was this, as stated very distinctly by one, that the Constitution was not self-executing; that there was no law to put in force that provision of the Constitution. The language of the Constitution on this subject reads thus:

But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

It seems to my mind that the language is clear, explicit, and cannot be explained away. "Shall not be appointed an elector." are told by the commission, we are told by distinguished Senators on this floor, that there is no power under the Constitution and the laws to inquire into that fact, because the Constitution is not self-execut-ing, and there is no law to carry it out. Let us test this. It has been by example tested time and again. In the same article of the Constitution we read this:

No person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States, at the time of the adoption of this Constitution shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of thirty-nve years, and been fourteen years a resident within the United

Now, Mr. President, suppose that the electors thus appointed had Now, Mr. President, suppose that the electors thus appointed had been ineligible, suppose each one of the majority of the electoral college had been ineligible because they were not natives of the United States and had never been naturalized, and suppose they had chosen to east their votes for one born in England as the Chief Magistrate for us of the United States, and that question should have been raised, are we to be told by this commission and by learned Senators on this floor that there is no power to inquire into that? If there is no power in the one case, there is no power in the other; and yet our forefathers when they negned that instrument said that no man not born in ers when they penned that instrument said that no man not born in the United States or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution should be President thereof. But what is the logic of the gentlemen who occupy the opposite side? say there is no power to inquire into the subject at all because the Constitution is not self-executing, because there is no law. If their position be correct in the one case, and a foreigner, one never naturalized, can be an elector for the reason given by them, then why can there not be a man elected President of the United States who was never born upon our soil? Does not the reason apply with equal force in the one case as in the other? Where is the want of analogy between the two? I cannot while I occupy a seat on this floor give my assent to such a dangerous proposition as that, to such a violation of the Constitution; I cannot give my assent by my silence to the doctrine that the whole of the Constitution of the United States is nugatory, worthless, inoperative, because we have not seen fit to pass a law upon each and every subject mentioned in the Constitupass a law upon each and every subject mentioned in the Constitu-tion. In other words, although the Constitution may forbid this or command that, because there is no law forbidding this or no law com-manding that, the Constitution is blank paper! That is the logic, that is the inevitable result of all the reasoning of Scnators on this floor in opposition to this proposition, and that is the necessary logical result of the decision of the commission!

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to modify my resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa modifies his resolution. The modified form will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the objection made to the vote of Daniel L. Crossman, one of the electors of Michigan, is not good in law and is not sustained by any lawful evidence. Resolved. That said vote be counted with the other votes of the electors of said State, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the Senate yesterday, by a solemn vote, affirmed this decision made by the electoral commission:

The commission by a majority of votes is also of opinion that it is not competent to prove that any of said persons so appointed electors as aforesaid held an office of trust or profit under the United States at the time when they were appointed or that they were ineligible under the laws of the State, or any other matter offered to be proved aliunde the said certificates and papers.

Yesterday the Senate sustained and indorsed that position; I believe it is the law; and I shall not argue it here to-day. But if it were not the law, I then put this question: In a time when there is so much said about fraud, I ask what greater fraud could be practiced upon the people of a State than to deprive them of their suffrage and of their right to take part in the presidential election by proving that an elector held a petty, contemptible office, which was unknown to the people of Michigan at the time when they voted for him, which he himself had forgotten and only had called to his attention two or three days before the electors were to meet; an office which I do not believe comes within the definition of the Constitution, to which it is said he had been appointed in 1863, and which had been exercised by him but once, and that in 1863.

Now, sir, upon that pretense to deprive the people of Michigan of their voice and to change the result of a presidential election would be a fraud upon the people of that State and upon the whole country for which, in my judgment, there is neither justification nor excuse.

But, sir, if there was anything in this, it would be the merest bar-ren technicality, and it would be quite sufficient to meet it by another, and the complete answer would be that it is not proven at all that this man ever was a United States commissioner. He says that the district attorney wrote to him that he would have him appointed; he says the clerk wrote to him that he had been appointed and inclosed to him the form of an oath for him to subscribe and return to the clerk's office, and he thinks he did it; but he never had any commission; and if he had a commission how could it be proven? By a transcript of the record under the seal of the court. Need I argue to any lawyer here that that is the first and best proof, and cannot be dispensed with in a court of justice except by proving that the records of the court have been destroyed and that the transcript could not have been obtained! It was just as easily obtainable here as the witness himself. But there is no verbal proof that the record was ever made. He says the clerk wrote to him—the clerk was not under oath when he wrote that—the clerk wrote to him that he had been appointed and inclosed to him a form of an oath which he subscribed; and that is all the evidence he ever had that he had been appointed. Need I argue that that is no proof at all? That objection is entirely sufficient to meet the barren, miscrable technicality that an elector is to be disfranchised, the people of a State to be disfranchised, by alleging that he had been appointed to a small office of that kind.

But, Mr. President, the broad principle is, and that which was sustained by the Senate yesterday, which was argued at great length before the electoral commission and decided by that commission, that it is not competent to prove at this stage of the proceedings that an elector was ineligible on the 7th day of November last. It seems to me, Mr. President, it is not necessary to argue this case.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I think it is our duty to adhere to the Constitution and see that all its requirements are carried out. I think the oath which each Senator takes when he enters this Chamber demands a faithful compliance with that obligation. I do not ber demands a faithful compliance with that obligation. I do not assent to the doctrine just announced by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMillan,] that the ineligibility of an elector cannot be proved by the parol admission of the candidate himself. It is not the law. It is not in accordance with usage. Mr. Webster, in the debate upon General Shields's ineligibility as a Senator from Illinois, when it was urged that the record proof of his naturalization was not properly authenticated and there was therefore no legal proof of his alienage, distinctly stated that record proof was not necessary, inasmuch as Mr. Shields admitted that he was a foreigner, and his statement was all the proof required. the proof required.

Mr. MORTON. That is a matter not to be proved by record. He was born abroad. That is not a matter of record.

Mr. STEVENSON. But his statement as to the period of his naturalization was sufficient, and was the sole question at issue. rainzation was sufficient, and was the sole question at issue. Admission that he had not been in this country nine years Mr. Webster insisted was sufficient, and that no record was required to prove that fact. I have this statement of Mr. Webster before me in the debate upon the ineligibility of Shields to a seat.

Mr. President, by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMillan] that it would be sacrilege to the rights of the State of Michigan to exclude this vote of one of her electors. If that elector was ineligible do not our oaths require us to exclude him? Is it sacrilege to obey the Constitution? Did not the Senate of the United States exclude Albert Gallatin from this Chamber because he had not been nine years a citizen? Was that a sacrilege to Pennsylvania? Did not a democratic Senate exclude General Shields as a Senator from Illinois for exactly the same reason? Have not our fathers always excluded ineligible Senators? Did they ever fail to uphold with fidelity every requirement of the Constitution as to the eligibility of the applicant irrespective of party? Has not this Senate refused to allow Louisiana a Senator in this Chamber for six years? Why? Will the Senator from Minnesota tell me? The republicans have held the power. Where, then, all this new-born zeal, this nascent jealousy of State rights? A new spirit seems to have come over the spirit of the dream of certain Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

But we are told that the high commission decided the principle in the Louisiana case on yesterday, and the Senate by an overwhelming majority decided to sustain their judgment. Mr. President, the an thority of the high commission is not binding on the Senate, certainly not beyond the cases submitted to that tribunal. The high commission decided in the Florida case that proof was allowable as to the ineligibility of an elector, but in Louisiana such proof was declared by the same tribunal incompetent.

Now I insist that it is perfectly competent for any elector to prove that he was ineligible. If the elector was a United States office-holder when he was appointed no jurist of reputation has ever held until the past week that he was eligible. For myself, I cannot doubt that the Constitution demands that we should reject his vote. I am not satisfied, however, in this case from the elector's own statement that he was ineligible when he was appointed. I shall never permit my party zeal to carry me one iota beyond my conviction of what the Constitution demands. I am not satisfied from the statement of this elector that he held office under the United States when he was appointed. Fifteen years before he had been United States commissioner, but he has not acted since that time. The presumption is after such a lapse of time that he resigned that position, and that his resignation was accepted. I will not, therefore, consent to ostracize an elector in Michigan upon untenable ground, even though it might change the result of the Presidency. No party should indulge a presumption that this elector continued in office as United States commissioner after having failed for fifteen years to discharge its duties. Senators, let us adhere to the Constitution, and make all party requirements yield to the mandates of that instrument. Believing this Michigan elector was an eligible elector when he was appointed, I shall vote to count the vote. I cannot, however, agree to the grounds on which it is sought to place his vote by the republican majority in this Chamber. this Chamber.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President-

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the favor of the Senator from Missouri to give me one moment of his time. I merely desired to affirm the importance of the legal positions I stated; and I do desire also to add what I could not say within the time allotted, that I did not consider that the facts in this case are made out sufficiently to exclude this man upon constitutional grounds. Taking his admission that he once held the office, we are bound also by his statement that he had ceased for years to exercise its duties-

for years to exercise its duties—

Mr. BOGY Mr. President, this presents only a question of fact and the result of that fact. There is no testimony before the Senate excepting the statement of this person himself made before the committee on the privileges of the House. Whether that be testimony for this body to consider or not I am not prepared to say; but taking his statement to be evidence, it seems to me that he was not at the time he was voted for an officer within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. It is true that he had acted as a commissioner some fifteen years before. He gives the reason why and how he came to be appointed for a special occasion, but he further states day he has never acted as a commissioner and has that since that day he has never acted as a commissioner and has never considered himself a commissioner; and although it is true he has not resigned, yet it is equally true that in law he was not in office at that time, and it is suggested to me by my friend from Iowa [Mr. Allison] that he actually changed his residence to another part of the State, which of itself would have vacated the office. Therefore it seems to me a very plain case that this man was not in office and ineligible.

My interpretation of the law as to the filling of vacancies is this: Where the person voted for was at the time ineligible because he held office, his failure to attend does not, under the law of Michigan and under similar laws of the different States, create a vacancy, and it would not have been competent in that State to have filled the socalled vacancy. Therefore if he had not been eligible at the time that he received the votes of the people of Michigan, the remaining electors electing a third person to fill what they called a vacancy would not have acted in accordance with the law; but as he was eligible at that time in my estimation, because he held no office, and as gible at that time in my estimation, because he held no office, and as he did not appear before the college of electors, a vacancy did exist which they had a right to fill under that law.

Therefore it seems to me very clear that this man was eligible as an elector, and the person elected in his place, because he did not attend, is also eligible, and the vote should be received.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I have thought and still think that if a candidate for elector on the day of election holds an office of trust or profit under the United States he is not eligible and cannot be legally elected by the votes given for him while he holds that office; but I am not satisfied from the evidence given that this gentleman was an officer at the time of the election. I think that where you are to decrive a State of an electoral vote by reason of a fact. teman was an officer at the time of the election. I think that where you are to deprive a State of an electoral vote by reason of a fact, that fact should be clearly established by competent evidence. We should not on doubtful evidence or without competent evidence hold that a man voted for held an office under the United States on the day when the people gave their votes for him. Taking all this evidence together which I have heard read, I should not feel at liberty to yote against receiving this vote on the ground that he was the receiving this vote on the ground that he was the receiving this vote on the ground that he was the receiving this vote on the ground that he was the receiving this vote on the ground that he was the receiving this vote on the ground that he was the receiving this vote on the ground that he was the receiving the vote of the ground that he was the receiving the vote of the ground that he was the receiving the vote of the ground that he was the receiving the vote of the ground that the properties of the properties to vote against receiving this vote on the ground that he was an officer on the day of election. In my judgment, the objection is not sustained by the evidence.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I agree with the Senators as far as the facts in this case are concerned; I think their position is eminently judicious. I am not sure but that I would go even further than they do and say that the facts are not sufficient in the case of New Jersey, where there was an elector recognized who cast his vote for Tilden, or in the case of Virginia, where there was an ineligible elector who resigned and his place was filled by the other electors, or in the case of Missouri, where a person was disqualified by the four-teenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, or it was claimed that he was. In either of these cases I certainly would not raise an objection. I think that the people of a State, having in good faith endeavored to exercise their rights under the Constitution and to contribute their votes to the election of President of the United States, ought not to be impeded or crippled in attaining the result at which they honestly aimed.

This broad principle of equity should cover all minor imperfections. However that may be, the law of this matter is plain to my mind. It has been settled in all the courts of all the States of the States wherever the question has been raised. I believe it has been settled in this body and in the House of Representatives. It is a general principle of law insisted upon by all the courts that full faith is to be given to the acts of an officer de facto, acting under the color of an election, where they concern third parties or the public. an election, where they concern third parties of the public. I understand that to be the clear rule, although the man had no right whatever to the office, although there may have been a constitutional disability to his holding the office, that his acts in that office are valid as concerns third persons and the public. This matter was well considered in the case of Pritchett and others vs. The People in the supreme court of Illinois as reported in 1 Gilman, 529. In the course of the onlying the court say: of the opinion the court say:

It is a general principle of the law that ministerial acts of an officer defacto are valid and effectual when they concern the public and the rights of third persons; although it may appear that he has no legal or constitutional right to the office. The interests of the community imperatively require the adoption of such a rule.

Certainly the interests of the State of Michigan require the application of such a rule in this case, for if it loses one of its eleven votes in the selection of President, that proportion of its people would be disfranchised. Such a rule, certainly, should be beneficially construed to secure the highest justice to a State. I have other authoristically construed to secure the highest justice to a State. ties to the same effect and I find them uniform.

Therefore this person, Crossman, being elected by the college of electors under a statute authorizing such election by the State of Michigan, to take the place of Hanchett, who had failed to appear, full faith must be given to his acts; they cannot be inquired into collaterally; they are good as concerns the public or third parties.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have not a doubt in my own mind that Senators and Representatives and persons holding offices of trust and profit under the United States cannot be appointed as electors, and that if such a person is attempted to be appointed it is simply a failure to elect, and I have no doubt whatever of the constitutional power of the Houses, and each of them, to inquire into the facts of ineligibility and act thereon; but I understand the doctrine of evidence to be that in every case the best evidence must be produced. This is not the case of an action of trespass brought against a man acting in an office for trespass committed under color of that office. The question here is: has the State of Michigan appointed her elector; and prima facie this man is the elector. The best evidence that this man was a person holding an office of trust and profit under the United States at the date of his election or appointment is the exemplification of the record under, I believe, the act of 1792; and secondary evidence of that fact cannot be introduced until the want of primary evidence is accounted for. That not having been done, there is no competent evidence before the Senate that this man was a commissioner, and believing that non-user of an office for a long series of years, as is the case here, operates its forfeiture, and believing as I do always in doing justice, let the consequences fall where they may, I say that we have no evidence here justifying us in preventing the State of Michigan from voting, and I shall therefore vote to admit the vote objected to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am rather delighted with this occasion. I had feared that I should not be able to give a non-partisen vote. but on this consistent when the property of the constant of the con san vote; but on this occasion, though it may be rather a cheap one, I propose to give a non-partisan vote, and to vote with my friends on the opposite side of the Chamber.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, I have no doubt whatever that we have a right and that it is our duty to refuse the vote of an incompetent person, one incapable of being appointed an elector; and when that case is presented to us I shall certainly vote for its exclusion. I do not understand that the electors selected by the several States under the Constitution are, in the sense that has been contended in this discussion, public officers to whom the doctrine of de facto office can apply. They are electors, special electors selected from the body of electors of the State by such provisions as the Legislature of the State may provide for that purpose. They are elected for the purpose of casting their votes, although in that they may represent the people who have selected them; and when one who is incapable of being appointed under the Constitution casts such a vote, and it comes before us for consideration, I shall have no hesitation in voting against receiving it.

But, Mr. President, I concur with my friends who have expressed themselves upon this question, that in this case there is no evidence of disqualification that should preclude the vote that is tendered at this time; and therefore I shall vote against the exclusion, not because a disqualified person may cast a vote and that it may not be disregarded, but because there is not sufficient evidence of disquali-

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have no doubt in my mind that the person who was run as a republican elector in Michigan was a circuit court commissioner, but according to his own statement he has not exercised the duties of that office for years, and a long non-user of the office in my opinion amounts to a resignation of the office. According to the view which I take, he would have been eligible to have cast the vote as an elector. He did not choose to do that; he kept away from the electoral college of that State and another party under the laws of Michigan was appointed, and the vote was cast. In my opinion that vote was a proper vote and it ought to be received.

I do not base this opinion upon the decision to which reference was made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Monton] that that question had been decided by the commission and that we could not properly inquire into the eligibility of an elector. In my opinion, if the facts were clear that the man at the time of his appointment was in the due exercise of the office the disqualification attached and then his vote would not be a legal vote.

I objected yesterday by my vote to the decision of the tribunal upon that point in the case of Louisiana, and I say here and now that I shall fail for coming years to recognize that decision as binding upon me in conscience or in law. I believe that there was a great outrage perpetrated upon the people of Louisiana by that decision, and I do not intend that that ruling shall ever govern my action in the vote which I am called upon to give. I put the vote which I shall give upon this occasion on other grounds, namely: that the party who had been elected an elector was himself eligible because he had not been in the expresse of the duties of the office of commissionar for been in the exercise of the duties of the office of commissioner for many years, and therefore the substitute in his place was a proper appointment and the vote cast a legal vote. I would not deprive Mr. Hayes of any vote to which he is entitled. I would much prefer, if any man is to take the presidential office with a clouded title, that it shall be the candidate to whom I am opposed rather than the candishall be the candidate to whom I am opposed rather than the candidate for whom I cast my vote. I never want to see a democratic President in the White House unless he is there by the judgment of his countrymen. I shall vote therefore to count this vote.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I cannot vote for the resolution in the language in which it is presented by the Senator from Iowa, and therefore I propose as a substitute for the order offered by him the following:

Ordered, That while it is the sense of the Senate that no Senator or Representa-tive or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector, and that this provision of the Constitution shall be carried in its whole spirit into rigid execution, yet that the proof is not such as to justify the exclusion of the vote of Daniel L. Crossman as one of the electors of the State of Michigan, and that his vote should be counted.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that when Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that when I signed the objection this morning my signature was based upon the legality of the ground if proved. I adhere to that opinion now. I knew nothing then as to what the proof would be as to the holding of this office. I am satisfied from the evidence which has been submitted that it is not sufficient. The best evidence would be a certified transcript from the record of the court that appointed this man a commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

Mr. WHYTE. I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. MITCHELL. Would an amendment be in order to the substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be in order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend by inserting after the words "rigid execution" the words "by the States respectively."
Mr. McDONALD. I should like to have the original resolution reported.

Mr. DAVIS. Let it be reported as it would read if amended. The Secretary read the resolution in its original form and then as proposed to be amended.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am opposed to the substitute and would be opposed to it even if amended as I suggest, and as it is not probable that the substitute can carry I hope it will not. I withdraw the amendment for the present, so that we may come to a direct vote on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon being withdrawn, the question recurs on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Whyte,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted-yeas 27, nays 39; as follows:

39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dennise Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Blaine, Conkling, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Oglesby, Sharon, and Thurman—9.

So, the substitute was rejected.

So the substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the resolution of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison.]

Mr. McDONALD. I move to strike out, in the first resolution, the words "is not good in law, and;" so as to read:

Resolved. That the objection made to the vote of Daniel L. Crossman, one of the electors of the State of Michigan, is not sustained by any lawful evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] to Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) I should vote against this motion to strike out. My friend from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] kindly paired with me in my absence yesterday and without my knowledge, when I was ill. I have reason to believe he is ill to-day, and as I think he would probably vote in favor of this amendment I withbold my vote. I withhold my vote.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announcedyeas 26, nays 38; as follows:

yeas 26, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs, Bailey, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—26.

NAYS—Messrs, Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Penusylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawcs, Borsey, Ferry, Frelinghuyseu, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMüllan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—38.

ABSENT—Messrs, Barnum, Blaine, Conkling, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitcheock, Oglesby, Sharon, and Thurman—11.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution proposed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison.]

Mr. COOPER. If the question is divisible I call for a separate vote upon the two resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is divisible and will be first taken on the first resolution, which will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the objection made to the vote of Daniel L. Crossman, one of the electors of Michigan, is not good in law and is not sustained by any lawful evidence.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the first branch of the proposition to be voted upon be the question that the objection is not good in law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first resolution cannot be divided, because a rejection by the Senate of a motion to strike out the words referred to is equivalent to a vote to retain the same; and it cannot now be divided.

Mr. COOPER. I do not ask that it be divided in that way

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator to ask for a separate vote upon the first resolution.

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first resolution.

Mr. COOPER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to understand the question. Do we vote now upon the question of law contained in the first resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is to be taken upon the first resolution in whole.

Mr. BAYARD. Upon the first proposition; that is, that the vote is sustainable as a matter of law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the first resolution, which is now to be voted upon.

The Secretary again read the first resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) I withhold my vote for the same reason that I stated before.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announcedyeas 40, nays 19; as follows:

yeas 40, nays 19; as follows:

Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertsom, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Stevenson, and Withers—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Blaine, Cockrell, Conkling, Conover, Eaton, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Johnston, Kernan, Saulsbury, Sharon, Thurman, Wallace, and Whyte—16.

So the first resolution of Mr. Allison was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the second resolution.

Mr. COOPER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the second resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.)

I am paired with my colleague [Mr. WALLACE] on all these votes.

I thought he was here, however, before, and voted.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 63, nay 0; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamlin, Harvey, Hereford, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Logan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Norwood, Oglebob, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Whyte, Windom, and Wright—63. NAY—6.

NAY-0.

ABSENT—Messrs. Blaine, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Sharon, Thurman, Wallace, and Withers—12.

So the second resolution of Mr. Allison was agreed to. Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move that the House be notified of the action of the Senate on the objection to the vote of Michigan, and that they be informed that the Senate are now ready to meet the House to proceed with the count. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves
